Some of the research problems indicated have been solved and others are only in process of investigation. There is evidently much latitude for acomplishing by research a material reduction in the net cost of producing and harvesting sweetpotatoes. This results primarily from a radical change in viewpoint and in requirements when the crop is utilized for starch manufacture instead of for food. The margin for reducing raw material cost with change in type of utilization undoubtedly varies from one crop to another but, when changing from food to nonfood use, it is probable that the change in cost is generally in the direction of reduction. It is evident that the interests of agriculture and of industrial processors of agricultural commodities are, in many ways, mutual and that research applied to crop production may benefit both. Benefits, such as those indicated, may accrue to agriculture from: (1) Expanded markets; (2) improvements in methods of handling crops; (3) new farm byproducts; (4) byproducts of processing the crop which are available locally and which meet an agricultural need.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment, and I do so to ask the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Tarver] a question.

In the amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Tarver] the last proviso is left out which provides that no part of this appropriation shall be used to pay the cost or value of farm animals, farm crops, or other property injured or destroyed.

Mr. TARVER. I think that is included in the amendment I offered.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I did not hear it.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. TARVER].

The amendment was agreed to. The Clerk read as follows:

Gypsy and brown-tail moth control: For the control and prevention of spread of the gypsy and brown-tail moths, $250,000.

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Chairman, a point of order. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against lines 5, 6, and 7, on page 56, having to do with gypsy and brown-tail moth control on the ground that there is no legislation authorizing this appropriation.

Mr. Chairman, permit me to say that I would not make this point of order except that gentlemen from sections of the country where this appropriation is to be used have been active in destroying by points of order appropriations for other sections of the country in which they do not appear to be particularly concerned. Therefore, I must insist that what is sauce for the goose is sauce for the gander and that this appropriation should also go out.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON] desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I concede the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained. The Clerk read as follows:

Dutch elm disease eradication: For determining and applying Dutch elm disease eradication: For determining and applying methods of eradication, control, and prevention of spread of the disease of elm trees known as "Dutch elm disease," $100,000: Provided, That, in the discretion of the Secretary of Agriculture, no expenditures from this appropriation shall be made for these purposes until a sum or sums at least equal to such expenditures shall have been appropriated, subscribed, or contributed by State, county, or local authorities, or by individuals, or organizations concerned: Provided further, That no part of this appropriation shall be used to pay the cost or value of trees or other property injured or destroyed. or destroyed.

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Chairman, a point of order. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order as to the language on pages 56 and 57 of the bill relating to the appropriation for Dutch elm disease eradication on the ground it is not authorized by existing legislation.

Mr. TREADWAY rose.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. TREADWAY. I could not hear the lines to which the gentleman directed his point of order.

Mr. TARVER. My point of order covers the language from line 20, page 56, through and including line 6 on

Mr. SHANLEY. The gentleman's point of order wipes out the appropriation for Dutch elm disease eradication provided in this bill, on the ground there is not existing legislation?

Mr. TARVER. Yes. I may say the point of order would not be made except for the position taken by certain gentlemen from that portion of the country where this money is to be used who are objecting to other similar provisions for other sections.

Mr. SHANLEY. This is a reprisal then?

Mr. TARVER. Frankly, that is so.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.
Mr. TREADWAY. May I inquire what will be the effect on pages 56 and 57 of the bill if the point of order made by the gentleman from Georgia is sustained?

The CHAIRMAN. If the point of order is sustained, the paragraph commencing at line 20 on page 56 and extending down to and including line 6 on page 57 will be stricken out entirely.

Mr. TREADWAY. The entire paragraph will be stricken out?

The CHAIRMAN. The entire paragraph will be stricken out.

Mr. HEALEY. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask the gentleman from Georgia a question.

I believe the gentleman ought to withhold his point of order in view of the fact the item against which the gentleman has made the point of order covers a small amount, and the gentleman has expressed himself as being motivated to make the point of order merely by reasons of retaliation against Members who have made points of order against other provisions. I ask the gentleman if he will not withhold the point of order?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will please address the Chair on the point of order.

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to address the Chair briefly with regard to the point of order.

It is indeed a very great temptation to put the shoe on the other foot with regard to points of order made against provisions in this bill which have been carried in the bill for years without question. If there were no one affected except the very active gentlemen from New York and Pennsylvania, who have been seeking the elimination of similar items relating to sections of the country with regard to which they are not concerned, I should persist in the position I have taken. However, a great many of my colleagues on this side of the aisle, who appear to be more deeply concerned with what is done in an attempt to eradicate the Dutch elm disease, than are the gentlemen on the other side of the aisle, have appealed to me to withdraw the point of order.

Mr. POAGE. If the gentleman will yield, before the gentleman withdraws the point of order will not the gentleman tell the Committee if it is not possible at this time for those who insisted on points of order yesterday now to ask unanimous consent to return to page 54 and open it to amendment?

Mr. TARVER. It would be possible to do that, but I am trying to be generous with the gentlemen. If they do not want to be generous with agriculture in other sections of the country, that is their affair.

Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the paragraph is without authority of existing law.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Missouri desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I concede the point of order, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained. The Clerk read as follows:

Pink bollworm control: For the control and prevention of spread of the pink bollworm, including the establishment of such cotton-free areas as may be necessary to stamp out any infestation, and for necessary surveys and control operations in Mexico in cooperation with the Mexican Government or local Mexican authorities, $446,800.

Mr. KLEBERG. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that this paragraph is not authorized by law and is legislation on an appropriation bill.

Mr. KLEBERG. Mr. Chairman. I desire to be heard on the point of order.

Mr. Chairman, I cite United States Code, title 7, section 145, the act of August 20, 1912, 37 Statutes, page 315, and the act of October 6, 1917—this happens to be an appropriation bill—40 United States Statutes, page 374, in support of the contention that there is direct and specific authorization for this section.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Wisconsin desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, none of the sections of the statute which the gentleman has quoted gives direct or indirect authority for the Secretary to exercise his discretionary authority and continue operations in Mexico.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, this is an exception to the usual rule in that there is legislative authority for this particular item. It differs in that respect from most of these control and eradication appropriations, which must depend, if at all, upon the organic law for authorization. Under section 145 of title 7 of the United States Code there is a provision of law, as the Chairman will observe on reference to the section, which affords ample authorization for this appropriation.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule.

The Chair has examined the statute referred to. The point of order is overruled.

The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. KLEBERG].

Amendment offered by Mr. Kleberg: Page 58, line 14, strike out "$446,800" and insert in lieu thereof "$906,800."

Mr. KLEBERG. Mr. Chairman, I have a deep hope that what has transpired in the immediate past in the consideration of this bill will not have any effect on the Members on either side of this aisle when it comes to the consideration of this particular amendment.

We have both tragic and historic evidence as to the saneness and the economies involved in this request for an increased appropriation. Let us look first primarily toward the control of the pink bollworm and, second, toward the final and ultimate eradication of this pest. It is not necessary on an occasion such as this to go into great detail with the members of the Committee with reference to the importance of this control to the Nation and to the cotton industry. Everyone knows the history records for 8,500 years the drift of this famous vegetable fiber through the pages of history, affecting not only the chronology of human events but actually the life of nations. The history of the boll-weevil infestation and its effect on cotton begins 45 years ago, when Charles A. Culberson was Governor of Texas, from which post he came to the United States Senate. While Governor, Mr. Culberson recommended that the State Legislature provide $25,000 for the purpose of establishing a strip 60 miles wide, in which no cotton was to be grown, for the sole purpose of stopping the advance of the boll weevil. Any man who has any information concerning cotton knows the history of the boll weevil. Despite the fact that after we let the boll weevil get a hold in our cotton country we have tried to eradicate him, we know definitely that had this $25,000 been expended at that time and proper work carried on, this Nation would be free from boll weevil.

We also know that the boll weevil moves far less readily than does the moth of the pink bollworm. The boll weevil is a heavy-moving insect, and his limit of movement is about 30 miles per season. In the case of the pink bollworm, a light moth drifted by wind currents, we have definite, authentic records showing that the moth has traveled from one cotton belt to another, over 300 miles distant.

Now, this appropriation is asked in accordance with a revised Budget estimate following definite and established facts ascertained in the investigations of last fall. At the conclusion of the cotton crop in south Texas it was found that the funds were not sufficient to meet the actual needs for the developed program.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman vield?

Mr. KLEBERG. I will be pleased to yield to my friend

Mr. JONES of Texas. I understand this is the most serious of all cotton pests.

Mr. KLEBERG. There is no doubt on this earth about that.

Mr. JONES of Texas. And it absolutely destroys the crop. I understand further that this pest comes over from Old Mexico and is not a pest that originates in this country.

Mr. KLEBERG. That is it exactly, just as in the case of the boll weevil.

Mr. JONES of Texas. And the gentleman's amendment, if adopted, would still be within the Budget estimate?

Mr. KLEBERG. Yes; it is entirely within the Budget

Mr. JONES of Texas. And I further understand if this provision is not made, then the work could only be done in the event some provision were made by Texas to cooperate and supplement the program.

Mr. KLEBERG. There is no such provision in the bill.

Mr. JONES of Texas. It seems to me this is like an invading army, and you might just as well ask Texas, in the event Mexico should invade the United States, to supply half the army and bear half the expense as to require a supplementary activity down there as a condition to meeting this invasion, and I therefore think the gentleman's amendment should be adopted.

Mr. KLEBERG. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. Chairman, the infestation of the pink bollworm in the lower Rio Grande Valley of Texas and the Corpus Christi area, in the same State, is in the same location as the boll weevil when that pest of cotton first entered the United States. As I stated before the adult boll weevil has a heavy body and is not likely to be carried great distances by wind currents as in the case of the pink bollworm moth. There is definite evidence today that the pink bollworm moth can be carried hundreds of miles by wind currents. The infestations in the western areas of Texas seem to be clearly traceable to a natural movement of the moths by high wind currents from the Laguna district in Mexico. The prevailing winds from the lower Rio Grande Valley of Texas, during the period when the adult moth of the pink bollworm trends definitely north and northeastward, which would indicate without the possibilities of serious contradiction, that the infestation of the pink boll-worm in the Rio Grande Valley and particularly in the Corpus Christi area will insure its rapid spread throughout the cotton States. This spread, of course, can be readily seen as taking place far more rapidly than in the case of the boll weevil. At this point in my remarks I introduce in the RECORD a statement by Mr. R. E. McDonald, of the Bureau of Entomology and Plant Quarantine of the Department of Agriculture. Mr. McDonald is charged with carrying on the fight against the advances of this most destructive pest into the major cotton area of our country. He is a man of distinguished ability and knows more about this particular problem from a standpoint of special educational attainments, and particularly direct experience, I dare say, than does any other man in this country or elsewhere.

UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE, DIVISION OF PINK BOLLWORM CONTROL, San Antonio, Tex., February 17, 1939.

A DISCUSSION OF THE PINK BOLLWORM PROBLEM

The pink bollworm is generally recognized as the most destructive pest of cotton and the one most difficult and most costly to control. This insect in the adult stage is a little night-flying moth, seldom seen except perhaps around lights, as other candleflies. This moth places eggs on green cotton fruit. The eggs hatch into larvae or worms which bore into the bolls, squares, or blooms and destroy the contents. During the spring and summer and early fall, from the time the egg is laid until the time the worm has grown to full size and changed into another moth requires about 30 days, a little more or less. Toward the fall of the year these worms act a little differently. Instead of changing themselves into moths they go into hibernation, either into the ground or into cottonseed, or other places, and remain until the following spring, when they emerge and start another generation about the time the crop of cotton begins to fruit.

It is capable of doing a tremendous amount of damage to cotton.

about the time the crop of cotton begins to fruit.

It is capable of doing a tremendous amount of damage to cotton. No poison is known that will reduce the injury. A farmer is helpless to protect his own crop against this plague unless he has the unanimous cooperation of all others in the community, because the insect can fly from field to field with the greatest of ease. Therefore, any control measures which will do any good at all, are of a cultural nature and must be applied by an entire community. The pink bollworm was first known about 90 years ago in India. It was not heard of elsewhere until some 30 years ago, when it seemed to have started to spread, and it has now reached a great many of the cotton-growing areas of the world. Its spread within the last 20 or 30 years is believed to be due to the development of more rapid transportation and the general carriage of products from one part of the world to another.

It was a little more than 20 years ago when the insect was first from one part of the world to another.

It was a little more than 20 years ago when the insect was first introduced into the State of Texas, and from that date until this it has been introduced into many spots in Texas and other cotton-growing States of the United States. However, we have been fortunate in being able to eradicate all of these infestations in domestic cotton in eastern Texas, in Louisiana, in Georgia, and Florida. In the other infested areas in the western part of Texas, New Mexico, and Arizona, where eradication has not been effected, we have been fortunate in having some methods of control which applied in the presence of certain climatic conditions have, in general, held the infestations down. general, held the infestations down.

There is one exception, however. In the Big Bend region of Texas there have existed certain conditions over which we could exercise there have existed certain conditions over which we could exercise little control. Efforts were made to hold the plague in check, as is done in the El Paso Valley, the Pecos Valley, and other places. These efforts seemed to succeed for a while. After a time, however, the insect began to gain on us, and it continued to gain. To give you some idea about the nature of the injury this plague is doing in the Big Bend, and can do in most of the cotton areas of the South, I shall read you letters from three of the most successful and intelligent farmers in the area: D. D. Kilpatrick, J. K. Edmundson, and J. W. Howell, living in the upper, middle, and lower parts of the area. If you do not know these men, I assure you that they are absolutely honest and thoroughly reliable. absolutely honest and thoroughly reliable.

D. D. KILPATRICK & Co., Candelaria, Tex., December 21, 1937.

Mr. R. E. McDonald, San Antonio, Tex.

DEAR MR. MCDONALD: We have had the pink bollworm in this part of the Presidio Valley for more than 15 years, but hadn't noticed much damage until the last 3 years.

This year was by far the worst. Here at Candelaria and at Ruidosa, about 12 miles below here, the worm got 40 percent of the cotton. At Presidio some of the farmers tell me that the loss was as much as 50 percent. Up to August 1, we had expected 300 bales here, the worms cut us down to 175.

The worms also did plenty of damage to the lint of what cotton we did raise.

For the past few years we have had a yearly clean-up and burn-up program that helped keep the worms under control, but last year we did not have much of a clean-up, and I believe that is the reason for so many worms this year. This year we won't have any clean-up at all and my opinion is that the worms will be worse

As cotton is the only money crop that can be raised down here, I believe that farmers will continue to try to raise it even if the worms get most of it. They will try to plant it earlier or try to plant it later, hoping to raise some kind of a cotton crop and the worms will get worse and worse. Unless something is done about this terrible situation I can't help but think that the worm will soon spread from here to other parts of the State and get completely out of control.

Hoping you can do something to help us in this battle with this pink bollworm, I am, Yours truly.

D. D. KILPATRICK.

MY DEAR MR. MCDONALD: The pink-bollworm situation here in the Presidio Valley is very, very serious.

As an example: Here in my little district, even after discounting drought and an October flood damage, the most pessimistic estimate was 300 bales—most optimistic 400—the total ginned here will be 175 bales. But for two farms (my own and another that are fairly isolated and which were planted late), the crop would have been around 100 bales.

Even the hardest-headed, ignorant farmers, who once believed all your work to be "all bull" now are convinced and some have given up hope. I know of farms that had fully a 90-percent loss. As you know—here above the Concho River, cotton is about our only hope and this year's worm damage has just about ruined us all. Now that it is too late, the aforesaid hard-heads are anxious to cooperate with any program your Department may desire.

Yours very truly,

PRESIDIO, TEX., December 20, 1937.

Mr. R. E. McDonald.

Post office box 798, San Antonio, Tex.

Dear Mr. McDonald: Thank you for your letter of December 17,

The pink bollworm in the year of 1937 did at least 35-percent damage on my farm. Besides loss of cotton, the price was reduced. Unless there is some manner in which to eradicate this pest, I Unless there is some manner in which to eradicate this pest, I believe that the best way to overcome them is to plant as early as possible, plant early maturing cotton, not irrigate after July, then pick as early as possible, then clean up all boils, and stalks.

Some of my cotton turned out more than a bale to the acre; this was a small early variety, and planted the first of April.

I believe that all farmers should plant about the same date, but unless someone who has authority takes this matter up with the farmers, I fear they will not work together. For your information, I expect to have something more than 1,000 acres under my supervision, and I want to follow up the above program.

Yours very truly,

Yours very truly,

Those letters referred to the 1937 crop. The damage seemed to have been higher in 1938. Starting last fall, certain control measures were started in the locality and are going forward with success on both sides of the international boundary which we feel will bring this situation under control by next fall. Time will not permit me to go into the details of those plans. While this Big Bend situation is serious, on account of the isolation of the locality, it does not present such a threat as does the lighter infestation in the Brownsville-Matamoras region.

In the fall of 1936 infestation of this insect was discovered in the Matamoros-Brownsville section. In the fall of 1937 we undertook to apply some control and eradication measures, but with indifferent results. In 1938 infestation had very considerably increased and had spread up to the general vicinity of Corpus Christi. This brings us face to face with the worst threat that we have ever had with the pink bollworm. It demonstrates beyond reasonable doubt that if the infestation increases in the Matamoros-Brownsville area it will spread right on through the State of Texas, into Oklahoma, and, of course, into all the States in the Union where cotton is grown, and rather quickly, too. If the infestation increases in the Matamoras-Brownsville region, it is not believed that any amount of money or any efforts that might be put forth can prevent this insect spreading over the Cotton Belt.

It is well to mention right here that in addition to the ability of Matamoras-Brownsville region, it is not believed that any amount of money or any efforts that might be put forth can prevent this insect spreading over the Cotton Belt.

It is well to mention right here that in addition to the ability of this insect to travel long distances in cotton products it can ride the winds many miles. The Gulf breezes move from Brownsville up the coast through Corpus Christi area and on up-State.

The insect, as stated, was found in the Matamoros-Brownsville area in 1936. Steps were taken immediately to prevent the movement of the insect through the carriage of cotton products. Organizations were set up for the fall of 1937 for the destruction of the growing cotton at the expense of the owners as soon as the crop was harvested. This was planned to be carried out on both sides of the river. It was done, but not in a thorough manner. There were some 400,000 acres in cotton in the region—250,000 acres in Texas and 150,000 acres in Mexico. While the State of Texas and the Republic of Mexico had quarantine regulations providing for the destruction of this cotton, it was found impossible to get complete enforcement. The result was that in 1938 there was a considerable increase in infestation and the spread to the Corpus Christi area, as mentioned above. Again in 1938 every effort was put forth to improve on the methods of killing the growing cotton plants. Every farmer was contacted more than once, if necessary, in an effort to persuade him to do this promptly. A much better job was done in 1938 than in 1937, but still not perfect, by any means, and with what success we cannot know until the fall of 1939; i. e., we cannot know what the infestation is going to be in the coming crop until picking time. If, despite these efforts, there is further increase in the infestation, I suspect it is going to spread during the present season so far north that it will be impossible to arrest it. However, it does seem that we still have a fighting chance. The plans for 1939, as they stand, are to proceed wi

Let me take the time here briefly to explain the reason back of this plant-killing program. It was mentioned awhile ago that in the fall these worms go into a long winter sleep. Consequently, quick destruction of the cotton plants immediately after harvest of the crop in such a way as to prevent continued growth and production of squares, blooms, and bolls will result in there being no late crop of worms. It is this late crop which has a very high percent of hibernating worms in it.

I doubt in my own mind if it is possible to get any more support late crop of worms. It is this late crop which has a very high percent of hibernating worms in it.

I doubt in my own mind if it is possible to get any more support from the people than we had last year. They were unanimous for this plan. Every farmer, every ginner, everybody else favored it. They wanted to kill the plants; but despite that desire they did not do it as thoroughly as it should have been done.

That seems a contradiction. Everybody wants to kill the cotton plants and the legal regulations require the thing to be done. Nobody opposes it, and yet it is not well done. In the first place, the only way to write a law or regulation requiring such things to be done is to set down a definite date for the work to be completed, and that date has to be set late enough to give everybody reasonable time to comply. The date set was October 1, which seems to be about as early as it could be set and be fair to all concerned. However, most of the cotton is picked by September 1. Out of 400,000 acres of cotton a large number of individual farmers are involved. Some want a few days' rest after the picking season; some are discouraged because the crop did not turn out well; some, after paying the store accounts, have no money left and they need to get work to tide them over until arrangements can be made for some-body to finance them the next year. All these, and many more, put the job of plant destruction off until a few days before the dead-line. Then something happens right at the critical moment with many—bad weather, illness, or something else beyond their control. We also find a large number that set right in to kill the plants as soon as they fininsh picking, and some of these succeed right off; but many lack proper equipment to kill cotton plants in that subtropical area. Hence, in these fields where the farmers have made a sincere effort to comply, using the equipment at hand, there are often many cotton plants left. Also, there are tenant farmers, who, while they believe in the program, take advantage of t while they believe in the program, take advantage of that period between the end of the picking season and deadline date to move elsewhere.

While there has been splendid effort toward cooperation among the farmers and citizens of these affected localities, there is a feeling which seems to be gaining momentum that the problem of eradication of the pink bollworm is of State and National significance and that the people of the affected areas believe themselves to be carrying, or about to carry, more than their proportionate share of the burden. In the area around Corpus Christi it is our belief that the protection of the cotton industry will be made more secure by the sterilization of all cottonseed as a continuous process of ginning by having appropriate machinery installed in the ginning plants; because there are many roads leading out of that area into other cotton-growing areas, and the crop moves so early that infestation may be scattered immediately, before the seed can be crushed. However, the ginners of that area maintain that such sterilization process should be the responsibility of those who may receive the protection. If the cottonseed in this area in the fall of 1939 is to be sterilized at the gins, it would seem that the time is at hand to determine whose responsibility it is for having it done.

On January 9, there was released by the A. A. A. in the city of Washington a resolution passed by a committee of cotton producers and other representatives, reading in part as follows:

"That the Department ask specific authority to deal with the pink-bollworm threat as it now exists, to the extent of negotiating or having the State Department negotiate with the country of Mexico to get cooperation and to establish an appropriate quarantine, and to attempt to eradicate the pink bollworm by taking necessary acreage out of cotton production entirely, and by reimbursing affected persons by compensating them for the acreage taken out."

This, obviously, looks to the establishment of a noncotton zone throughout while continent-wide eradication is a tremendous undertaking, if it can be accomplished, it would undoubtedly be the cheapest solution in the long run. In its accomplishment there would be many difficulties to be met and overcome, but a study of the question would reveal the existence of these difficulties and their magnitude and would indicate to us with reasonable certainty whether or not they could be overcome. It is our conviction, therefore, that this pest being present in the cotton fields of Mexico and the United States becomes an international menace and it should be attacked on an international basis, with the cooperation of the two countries States becomes an international menace and it should be attacked on an international basis, with the cooperation of the two countries concerned, and of each infested State in each country. If, after such studies have been made, it is determined to be practical to eliminate this pest entirely from these two North American countries, then it would be well worth the cost to proceed. This pink bollworm is threatening the economic well-being of two great nations. It is a big problem and should be handled in a big way. R. E. McDonald, In Charge.

You will note that in Mr. McDonald's discussion he has included two typical letters from farmers in the Presido area of Texas. Mr. McDonald, in making a memorandum for the State-wide cotton committee of Texas speaks as follows:

ON THE PRESENT PINK BOLLWORM SITUATION

Before going into a detailed statement of the conditions of infestabefore going into a detailed statement of the conditions of intesta-tion in the area above referred to, or the means that might be used to stop it, it is well to discuss briefly what has been done and with what success in other areas during the last 20 years, so that you may have the use of this information from which to draw con-may have the use of this information from which to draw conclusions as to what is best to do in the present crisis.

The pink bollworm was first discovered at Hearne, Robertson County, Tex., in the 1917 crop. It was introduced there through the shipment of cottonseed from the Laguna district of Mexico. A noncotton zone was put into effect in 1918, 1919, and 1920 for a short distance around the known infested spot, and a regulated area embracing much more territory was established, from which all seed was milled and new seed introduced. All fields were cleaned. Eradication resulted. Eradication resulted.

Eradication resulted.

Infestation was discovered in the 1917 crop well scattered along the coast of Texas from the Brazos River to the Sabine; source unknown. A noncotton zone was established in this large area in 1918, but many farmers planted cotton in violation of the proclamation and after going through legal procedure, before the cotton nuisance could be abated, the crop was matured. By this effort eradication was not effected. Cotton fields through this area are unusually small and somewhat scattered. Subsequent to 1918, some 3 or 4 years, all seed produced from the area was carried to oil mills and crushed, and new seed introduced. Fields were cleaned around known infested spots. Eradication was finally effected about 1922.

Cameron Parish, La., was found infested in 1920; source unknown.

Cameron Parish, La., was found infested in 1920; source unknown. A noncotton zone was in effect there for 2 years and adjacent fields were cleaned. Eradication resulted.

Shreveport, La., was found infested in 1920; source of infestation was infested seed brought from Cameron Parish. A noncotton zone of comparatively small size was placed over the known infestation, surrounded by a regulated area much larger. In this area cotton-seed was sterilized and the fields were cleaned. Eradication was

The Big Bend of Texas was found infested in 1918; source of infestation then unknown, later found to be from moth spread from the Laguna district of Mexico. The area was made a non-cotton zone in 1919 and 1920. Cotton was again planted in 1921 and found infested that year, and has been infested to the present time. In the 1937 crop the damage was about 50 percent; in the present crop it is more.

The Peccs Valley of Texas was found infested in 1918; source of infestation then unknown, later found to be by moth spread from the Laguna district of Mexico, about 350 miles distant. Fields were cleaned up. The infestation, if eradicated, was reintroduced. It is still infested, but lightly, mainly due to the freeing of the seed of infestation and because of the extremely cold winters.

The El Paso Valley of Texas and New Mexico was found infested in 1920; source then unknown, now believed to be from moth spread from the Laguna. Some field cleaning was carried on, but if effective the pest was immediately reintroduced. Area is still infested. The Pecos Valley of New Mexico was found infested about 1920; source of infestation then unknown, but now believed to be by moth spread from the Laguna. Infestation still exists, but light.

In all the above areas of the El Paso Valley of Texas and New Mexico, and the Pecos Valley of the same two States, it is believed the infestation remains light because of the extremely cold winters and by planting seed freed of infestation by sterilization.

Ennis. Tex.. was found infested in 1921; source of infestation

Ennis, Tex., was found infested in 1921; source of infestation was planting seed from Loving, N. Mex. A noncotton zone of a small extent was placed over the area, surrounded by a larger regulated area, and the fields were cleaned. The insect was intested at the same time as Elmis; same source; same methods used, and eradication effected.

Safford, Ariz., was found infested in the 1926 crop; source then unknown, now believed to be by moth spread from the Laguna District of Mexico, a distance of some 600 miles. Fields were cleaned. Infestation, if eradicated, was immediately reintroduced. It is still present but not in injurious numbers, due to keeping the seed clean and to the cold winters, as in the El Paso and Pecos areas.

The Sait River Valley of Arizona was found infested in the fall of 1929; source unknown; the degree was heavy in the Mesa section, involving about 40,000 acres of cotton. A noncotton zone was placed over this area in 1930. Fields were cleaned. The rest of the valley, involving about 110,000 acres, was in a regulated area. The seed was sterilized. By the noncotton zone and field cleaning the heavy condition of infestation was reduced, but the pest was found in the 1930 crop and practically all the valley was infested lightly. An attempt was made to have farmers clean their own fields, but with indifferent results. The growth of stub cotton was prevented and a delay in planting until April 20, in 1931, was enforced, which was about 6 weeks later than the usual planting date. This, practiced for 2 years, eliminated the infestation.

Infestation was found on the plains of Texas, from Big Spring northwest, in 1928, light but widespread; source believed to be by wind drift from the Big Bend. Sterilization of seed was done. Due to the extremely cold winters and short seasons, infestation was eradicated; however, it was reintroduced over a wider area and probably from the same source, and this area is still lightly infested.

Infestation was discovered in northern Florida in the fall of 1932; source was from moth spread from heavily infested wild cotton on the southern tip of the State, 350 miles distant. Infestation was found in southern Georgia the next year, and farther west in Florida the following year. The source of these infestations was eliminated—that is, by cutting out and destroying the wild cotton. The seed was sterilized. In all that country cotton is grown in patches on pine lands, is produced early, and after picking farmers pasture the fields because forage is scarce. Hence, the source of food for the insect was cut off before the period for hibernation arrived. Eradication resulted.

Infestation was found in the Santa Cruz Valley of Arizona in the fall of 1937; source believed to be by moth spread from the Laguna, about 700 miles distant. Eradication measures are being undertaken.

(Where reference is made in the above to cleaning of fields, the work was done with public funds except where specifically men-undertaken.

(Where reference is made in the above to cleaning of fields, the work was done with public funds, except where specifically mentioned as being done otherwise.)

Infestation was discovered in the Matamoros-Brownsville section in the fall of 1936; source not known. No other measures were taken for the remainder of that year except to prevent spread by carriage of material. The 1937 crop carried a slight increase and in that year an effort was made to have all farmers on both sides of the river clean their fields, with indifferent success. There was a tremendous increase in the infestation in the fall of 1938, the present year. The effort has been continued to get all farmers on both sides of the river to clean their own fields, with some better success than in 1937. better success than in 1937.

Mr. Chairman and members of the Committee, in the RECORD of March 9 there appears a statement made by me on the floor of the House giving a more detailed discussion of the pink bollworm problem than my time has here allowed. and I conclude with this statement that unless the Congress of the United States can see the importance of appropriating funds to meet the onslaught of the pink bollworm, I have no doubt at all but that this pest will destroy the cotton industry of the United States and Mexico. The best evidence on the destructiveness of this pest is to be found in records from foreign countries where the pink bollworm has a secure foothold. Authentic reports from China show that in the cotton belt of that country last year the pink bollworm took a toll in excess of $30,000,000. It seems therefore to me that the expenditure of $460,000 as requested by my amendment should be acceptable forthwith to every thinking member of this Committee

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, we have a peculiar situation here. This pest comes from Mexico. Naturally it affects at first only the land immediately adjacent to the Mexican border.

The Federal Government has repeatedly disposed of this pest. Some years ago we appropriated $5,000,000 to establish a cotton free zone and completely eliminated it. But immediately the cotton farmers insist on going back and planting cotton in the zone where they know it is an invitation to the pest across the river in Mexico. Of course the weevil again establishes itself and then they come back up here and ask us to drive it out again.

Every authority agrees that the only permanent way to eliminate this pest is to establish a zone, as indicated. Of course we cannot go over and clean out Mexico. If we could the task would be completed for all time to come. In other words, the cotton planters in this strip of no man's land along the Mexican border are in the position of a man who goes out and contracts an infectious disease and comes in and asks us to appropriate money to cure him. We provide the money and it cures him. Then he goes back and again contracts the disease and again comes back and asks for money for another cure, and keeps up that procedure as long as the money is forthcoming.

Mr. KLEBERG. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I yield to my friend.

Mr. KLEBERG. For the gentleman's information, there has been most intensive cooperation between the Mexican authorities and the Federal authorities. The authorities of the Mexican state just across the border and all the way up to the Big Bend area and the State of Texas on this side are cooperating, and for the gentleman's added information I may say that the work done with the money appropriated by the Federal Government would indicate that the pink bollworm can be eradicated without the establishment of a noncotton zone in areas where it will not receive an immediate reinfestation.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Every word the gentleman says is true, but the fact remains that the authorities agree that the way to dispose of this evil is to establish a cotton-free zone. They can grow almost everything else in the world down there in that zone and should keep their cotton out of the exposed area.

Certainly after we clean out the pest they should not come back here year after year for the same appropriations when the infestation is due to their insistence on planting cotton where cotton ought not to be planted.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. In view of the gentleman's argument against the pending amendment, would not the same argument apply to the appropriation of $446,800 which the gentleman has incorporated in the bill?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I am pleased that the gentleman has asked that question. When the Budget estimates first came to the committee they provided what the Department considered an ample amount to take care of this pest, and desiring to cooperate with them, we allowed the full Budget estimate of $446,800, which was everything originally asked. After we granted that, they came back with a supplementary estimate which the Committee after consideration did not feel was justified.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I am not familiar with the details of the immediate situation, but I am familiar with the background of this thing, because at the time the gentleman from Missouri refers to, the pest had gotten a hold in the district which I represent, which is 500 miles from the border. I doubt that it would be practical to establish a cotton frozone for all of the vast area that would be necessary for effective work. That would take a great deal of money, and you would not end this pest, which is a serious pest. If these men were to go out of the cotton business for a year or two, if they did not get cooperation with Old Mexico, they could not get anywhere.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. The gentleman recalls we did appropriate $5,000,000.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Yes.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. And established the cotton free zone, and that it was successful.

Mr. JONES of Texas. I was just getting to that. The gentleman is entirely in error as to what was done with that money. We appropriated the $5,000,000. I did not believe a cotton free zone was necessary, so I got an amendment or a qualifying provision placed on that $5,000,000 appropriation that no cotton free zone should be required in any area unless they found the live worm. They found only the dead worm in my area, and, therefore, not one dollar of this money was ever spent for a cotton free zone. It went back and was used for the Mediterranean fruitfly in Florida.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. But they did discontinue the planting of cotton in that area.

Mr. JONES of Texas. What they did in my area was to establish what they called a cotton regulated zone. The area is now represented by my colleague, Mr. Mahon. They established a cotton regulated zone requiring sterilization of the seed and fumigation of the lint, and thus eliminated the pink bollworm from that area. We found on investigation that this is a terrific pest. This is no ordinary insect pest. It can be carried for hundreds of miles by the wind. It is like a bombing army. It destroys the crops. I am not sure as to the amount, but I am sure that was gone into before the Budget.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Can there ever be a permanent eradication of this pest as long as they come in from Mexico?

Mr. JONES of Texas. I think if they can get cooperation from Old Mexico, they can finally eliminate it. I think that is the answer. The gentleman should not fight this type of provision. He should not jeopardize the whole cotton industry of the South by a little matter of a few hundred thousand dollars.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. JONES of Texas. Yes.

Mr. RAYBURN. Is not this true, and is not this what happened: that after the Budget estimate came up with this amount in it, an investigation was made of the matter and it was then determined, and the Budget so states, that the additional amount my colleague from Texas [Mr. Kleberg] asked for is absolutely necessary in order to cooperate with Mexico to stop the spread of the pink bollworm?

Mr. JONES of Texas. That is my understanding.

Mr. RAYBURN. As I recollect the gentleman I think was one of the first ones to suggest a cotton-free zone would not do the job, inasmuch as this insect has been found 300 miles from the Mexican border. If we adopted that theory, then there would not be any cotton planted in Texas at all.

Mr. JONES of Texas. It would mean the expenditure of millions of dollars.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment. I regret that I am forced to do so, and this is the first time in many years that I have opposed the majority leader. I know, of course, that he is forced to go along with his colleagues from Texas, especially the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Kleberg] who introduced the amendment, and obliged to help them get this additional $500,000.

Some of them state that it is necessary to cooperate with Mexico. We are now providing in this bill $144,000 and also $446,000, which totals nearly $600,000. In the next paragraph we provide $460,000 to make possible this cooperation with Mexico.

Now, Texas is a great State, and I have deep respect for every Member from there. I have cooperated with them in the past, and I am ready to cooperate with them now. But they are asking too much, and they are not willing to give anything in return or vote for things that are of interest to the people of my section. I hope that the gentleman who has offered this amendment, and his colleagues, will recognize that we too need some relief, not against the same kind of pests, but against hunger and want from which my people and the people in other districts are suffering. When we appeal for relief, invariably we find these gentlemen are voting against us.

Mr. KITCHENS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SABATH. I yield.

Mr. KITCHENS. Up until the last 2 or 3 years Mexico has been producing only around two hundred or two hundred and fifty thousand bales of cotton. Last year Mexico produced, as carried in the newspapers, over a million bales of cotton. The market for Mexico's cotton is Brownsville, Corpus Christi, Houston, and Galveston. How are we going to eradicate this worm if we allow Mexico to send her cotton to the markets of Texas and sell it?

Mr. SABATH. I thank the gentleman. I wanted to bring that out. In addition to that, Mr. Chairman, everybody recognizes the fact that we are growing too much cotton. Texas has rich fields, and they can grow many different crops there. Why grow cotton on the border of Mexico when we know, and they should know, that we cannot compete with the cheap labor of the Mexicans in the growing of that staple.

I believe that in the interest of the cotton producers of this country we should have a border zone there; eliminate in that section the growing of cotton, thus helping all other sections that are actually suffering and which are wholly dependent upon cotton growing. I have in mind the State of Mississippi and others.

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. SABATH. I cannot yield. I have in mind other Southern States that actually cannot raise anything else but cotton. My sympathy goes out to them. I want to be helpful to the cotton growers of the country. That is the reason I feel that this rich State of Texas, which can grow almost anything, should not continue to produce more cotton than there is a demand for.

Mr. KITCHENS. It is reliably reported that the largest cotton firm in America, Anderson, Clayton & Co., is now becoming engaged extensively in Mexico in the growing of cotton in competition with southern farmers. Does the gentleman know or is he familiar with just what effect our money and work in Mexico to eliminate the pink bollworm may have on production in Mexico of cotton in competition with American

Mr. SABATH. The gentleman's question raises an important question, which, it seems to me, needs consideration.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, in view of the deep interest of the Representatives from the cotton areas of the country on this amendment, I withdraw any opposition I may have expressed to it. Of course, under the rules of the House the committee cannot accept it, but we are glad to submit the proposal to the House for determination on its

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I do not expect to take the 5 minutes allotted to me, but I do wish to say that I have served on a committee appointed by the Texas delegation, together with Mr. WEST and Mr. KLEBERG, with reference to this pink-bollworm problem, Mr. Kleberg being chairman. We went before the Bureau of the Budget and presented this matter and the Budget Bureau readily sent down this supplemental estimate, because the Budget officials recognize, and everybody who knows anything about the pink bollworm, recognizes that if this pest gets into the heart of the cotton-producing area of the South it will cost us many, many millions of dollars in order to endeavor to eradicate it. Therefore I wish to heartily endorse what the gentlemen from Texas [Mr. Kle-BERG and Mr. Jours! have said in regard to this matter. I think the Budget is right, and I think we had better use this preventive measure now and spend a little money, and it will save a great deal later on.

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAHON. I yield.

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. Is it not true that this matter was given very careful investigation to ascertain what the facts were and whether or not there was justification for this expenditure, and the gentleman from Texas and Mr. KLE-BERG and Mr. WEST were appointed a special committee to investigate and take the matter up? Unlike the gentleman from Chicago [Mr. SABATH], who knows nothing about the pink bollworm, the committee has acted upon information which they have obtained from authoritative sources, and the Bureau of the Budget has approved it?

Mr. MAHON. Yes; the Budget has approved it. Mr. THOMASON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman

Mr. MAHON. I yield.

Mr. THOMASON. Is it not true that the State of Texas has done everything in its power to eradicate this pest, and the only way it will ever be permanently eradicated is by the Federal Government taking charge? We ought to pass this amendment and do the job right. The entire cotton area of the South and West will become infested if effective action is not taken.

Mr. MAHON. I think the gentleman is correct. The pink bollworm has now gone deeper into the cotton-producing area of the South and is now a menace to the entire South, and it is up to the entire Nation to get after this pest, which has been coming over from Mexico. It is a national problem.

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAHON. I yield.

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. I would like to remind my colleague from Texas and also from the State of Illinois [Mr. Sabath] that the southern part of Illinois grows cotton just like the southeast corner of Missouri grows more cotton per acre than any State in the Union except Arizona, where they irrigate. Unless this pest is eradicated, it may be that the cotton in the gentleman's State of Illinois, as well as Missouri and Arkansas and every other State, will be destroyed.

Mr. MAHON. I thank the gentleman. I yield to the gentleman from Arizona.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. I regret to say that the pink bollworm has invaded the cotton districts of southern Arizona and must be checked. No man knows the outcome if we lose this fight.

I heard some remark on the floor that we ought not cooperate with Mexico in an endeavor to stop this pest. I want to remind you that 60 or 75 years ago when the Apache Indians were bad in the Chiricahua Mountains of Arizona, those Indians ran between Arizona and the high mountains of Old Mexico. It was only by the cooperation of the United States Government and Mexico that we were able to control that great enemy of white civilization. In somewhat the same way, only with the cooperation of Mexico and this Government can we control this cotton pest which infests the region on our side of the Rio Grande and the international line, and over in Mexico at the same time.

I favor the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I have a deep affection for the chairman of my subcommittee, the gentleman from Missouri; but you know there are times when he does the most whimsical things; as, for instance, when he leaves his own subcommittee in the lurch. That is the situation here. We discussed this matter at great length in the subcommittee and when the time came to mark up the bill we bandied back and forth across the table and finally determined that $446,800 was enough. My delightful chairman now gets up on the floor and says that in view of the intense and abiding interest in this matter he feels they ought to recede. Frankly, Mr. Chairman, it can be stated that there is an intense and abiding interest in every matter that goes on on the floor. Surely after due deliberation in the subcommittee we should not recede so easily.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield with pleasure to my distinguished

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. The gentleman from Illinois is always more than fair and usually accurate of memory, but in this instance the statement was not that we ought to recede, but that in view of the great interest of the Representatives of that section of the country in the item I was willing to withdraw my opposition and refer it to the House.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I inferred, of course, that the gentleman would take that view of the matter.

Mr. Chairman, this is not a new matter. Consult, for instance, the totals that were supplied to the subcommittee. We find, for instance, that in 1930—that is, 9 years ago—there was an appropriation for this matter. In 1931 we appropriated $497,000 for pink-bollworm eradication. In 1932 we appropriated a like amount; and with some exceptions we have been appropriating nearly half a million dollars every year since 1931, according to the justifications, and we are no closer to control and eradication, and to a solution of the pink-bollworm problem than we were when we first started. This is manifest in the confession that is made here by the proponents of this amendment who say that the bollworm is going farther. As I remember the testimony of Dr. Rohwer before the committee, he said there is not the slightest assurance that even if we allowed $2,000,000 under this appropriation bill for pink-bollworm control that we would go any further, that we could make no more intense effort than we could under the item of $446,800, which is comparable with the amount we have appropriated for this purpose over the last 9 years.

Do not be rocked from your base by a feeling that suddenly a new scourge has appeared that will ruin all the cotton of the country immediately.

Mr. KLEBERG. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. DIRKSEN. I am glad to yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. KLEBERG. I have asked the gentleman to yield for the moment to direct his attention to the apparent misconception and misinformation that exists with reference to this particular pest, and to refer particularly to his statement that no good has come of the money that has been expended.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I did not say that, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. KLEBERG. The gentleman just stated that we had made no advance.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I did not intend to convey the impression that no good had come of it.

Mr. KLEBERG. I did not think the gentleman so intended.

I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that in our fight against the pink bollworm since 1921 it has been driven back to the Mexican border. It is now fighting its way in again until he has been found 30 miles inland. This added money is to keep the pest from going farther.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Kleberg] has made the best possible argument against his own amendment, for he has said that it had been progressively driven back during the last few years with the money that was made available, in some instances less than the current appropriation. The current appropriation therefore is enough.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. I want to make the observation that the additional amount requested is $400,000. Just 1 week from today 400,000 pink slips will be delivered to W. P. A. workers. That means they will be discharged from the rolls. How about the $150,000,000 appropriation for the unemployed which is being held up in the Committee on Appropriations?

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, we find ourselves in a rather peculiar position. The New Deal leader, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Cannon], in charge of this appropriation bill, a few minutes ago stood in the Well of the House and delivered an unanswerable argument against the pending amendment, with its great increase. The argument which he delivered also indicated the $446,800 incorporated in the bill as reported by his committee was not justified. I cannot imagine how he can stand on the floor of the House and make such a great fight on this raid on the Treasury and then, after somebody puts the heat on him, turn about face and run to cover the way he has and support the increase of $460,000 in the pending amendment.

This is, no doubt, one of the New Deal friendly-neighbor policies of Prof. Mordecai Ezekiel, who runs the Agricultural Department. By the way, I think you would be doing a service to the country if you would put a small appropriation in the bill to control Mordecai Ezekiel [laughter] so he may not run around the country and again kill 5,000,000 hogs and turn them into fertilizer; plow up cotton, wheat, and corn, which the good Lord sent for the many American people who our New Deal President said were ill-fed and ill-clothed, in answer to their daily prayer, "Give us this day our daily bread."

The New Deal spent more than a billion dollars under the Mordecai Ezekiel triple A production for destruction program. A few days ago our New Deal brethren, Mr. Hull and Mr. Morgenthau, promulgated another friendly neighbor policy when they agreed to build a pipe line from the American taxpayers' Treasury in Washington to Brazil to transport more than a hundred million of our American taxpayers' dollars to Brazil in order to help the Brazilian producers of cotton—who have already absorbed a great deal of our American export cotton market—take the rest of our foreign cotton markets.

Under the pending amendment you intended to raid the Federal Treasury to the tune of $460,000 to help cotton producers in Mexico so that they might be in position to supplant American cotton in foreign lands.

I sincerely hope my New Deal friends, particularly from the city districts, will follow the very able opposition presented by the dean of the House and chairman of the Rules Committee, the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Sabath]. When you vote, follow him, for he is right on this amendment. You have no obligation to follow your other leader, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Cannon], who has charge of the bill, because he delivered a devastating attack in opposition to the amendment on the floor of the House and turned about face and supported it a few moments later.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. Chairman, I can hardly agree with the statements made by my distinguished friend from Wisconsin in reference to the heat being put on the distinguished chairman of the subcommittee. I was uncertain how I was going to vote on this increase until I saw the great interest of my distinguished friend, the majority leader; and knowing that he would not manifest interest in favor of an increased appropriation unless he felt it was necessary, that determined my mind to vote for it. I admire my friend from Missouri for having the flexibility of mind of making a speech in opposition to the amendment [laughter] and then being so readily capable of accepting new evidence which would cause him to change his mind. I think, instead of being subject to criticism, the gentleman from Wisconsin should join with me in congratulating our distinguished friend from Missouri for having such a flexible mind. So far as I am concerned, I am going to vote the increase, because the southern problem is a very unique one. Cotton is the economic king of the South, and we must realize it has been so for generations. As a matter of fact, history shows that the invention of a machine some 100 years ago changed the whole economic outlook of the South. Cotton is still its main activity. Its whole life is, in the main, centered around cotton. So far as I am concerned, I am going to resolve the doubt in favor of the viewpoints of the men who represent that great section, the same as I will in favor of the men who represent the wheat areas, or the corn areas. Having no knowledge myself, I resolve any reasonable doubts I may have in favor of the views of Members who represent those districts, as I feel they are conversant with the situation.

Mr. Chairman, I want to make one additional observation. A few days ago in a deficiency bill being considered by the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union $200,000 was inserted to meet a similar problem in New England, New Jersey, and adjoining States with reference to the Dutch elm disease. The chairman of the subcommittee, the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM] said he would not ask for a separate vote. Unfortunately, and within his rights as a Member, my distinguished friend from Wisconsin [Mr. Schafer], a Republican, demanded a separate vote, as a result of which this meritorious appropriation so vital to New England and New Jersey was defeated. From New England come 22 Republican Congressmen and 7 Democratic Congressmen. Most of the Members from New Jersey, as I remember it, are also members of the Republican Party. The amendment was offered by my distinguished friend from New Jersey [Mr. Eaton] for whom I have highest feelings of respect, and the strongest feelings of friendship. I know how disappointed he must have felt to know that the separate vote demand came from his own side, the Republican side of the House. Today, when an amendment was offered to increase the appropriation in the bill from $100,000 to $374,000, as a Democrat from New England, I am glad that no Democratic Member raised a point of order. Unfortunately the point of order that was raised came from the Republican side.

I sympathize with my distinguished Republican colleagues from New England and New Jersey in that unfortunate

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. McCORMACK. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. The gentleman realizes that the Democrats have a preponderant majority in this House and if they wanted to pass the $200,000 elm-eradication appropriation they could have done so. Really the minority is not responsible for the failure of the passage of legislation.

Mr. McCORMACK. Is the gentleman from Wisconsin trying to duck?

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Oh, no.

Mr. McCORMACK. The gentleman demanded a separate vote on a Republican amendment adopted in the Committee of the Whole. A Republican from Wisconsin demanded a separate vote and it was the gentleman's action that brought about that separate vote.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. And the Democratic majority killed the amendment.

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I appreciate all that the gentleman from Massachusetts, a distinguished and able Member, has said; but he is very typical of the New Deal Democrats and all Democrats generally in the last 5 years who are in favor of all increases. If this country is going to continue that way it will not last very long.

Mr. Chairman, we are up against a powerful force when the Texas delegation gets together and begins to get active. It is a tremendous force to overcome. I warned the committee in general debate that what we were going to have to fight in this bill were increases. A lot has been said about having exceeded the Budget.

There have been no increases up to this time in the bill and we have done a good job. This provision in the bill is nothing new. As my able colleague has explained to you, it is 8 or 10 years old. We have given this item careful consideration.

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAMBERTSON. I yield to the gentleman from Texas. Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. In regard to the remark in which the gentleman quoted the gentleman from Illinois as saying that nothing has been done, may I say we have kept the pink bollworm from spreading, so something has been accomplished.

Mr. LAMBERTSON. It seems to me we have allowed an ample appropriation.

I recall that 10 years ago when I came here, a Member from Alabama, Mr. Huddleston, a very distinguished and able man, stated—not like the gentleman from Massachusetts: when uncertain he always resolved the doubt on the side of spending—that "if you always vote 'no' you will be right nine out of ten times, and you do not have to think about what you are doing." That is a pretty safe policy.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last three words.

Mr. Chairman, if there is any man in the House whom I would like to favor it is the gentleman who offered this amendment, Mr. Kleberg, the fine, distinguished Congressman from Texas. I think a great deal of him, and I know he tries to do a good job for his constituents. Probably they need $500,000 additional for the control of the pink bollworm. Probably they could use $2,000,000. However, when you set up an organization for the purpose of trying to control these diseases, like the departments we have established, it keeps increasing and increasing and asking for additional appropriations. They are like a snowball coming down a mountain; they get larger and larger all the time. They never decrease unless we cut them down. From $500,000 the departments want to increase to $1,000,000, and then it may be raised to $1,500,000, and after awhile the request may be as high as $2,000,000. There is no stopping. There is no place where we are able to cut down expenses, unless we keep them down to the minimum or else cut them down to rock bottom.

The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCormack]. one of the leaders of the majority, stood here and congratulated the majority leader for coming on the floor and asking an increased appropriation. Then he spoke about the chairman of the subcommittee asking for more money for a particular item. I say to you, Mr. Chairman, that very few times in the last 6 years when anyone has been talking about cutting down an appropriation have I seen anyone in the leadership on that side of the House stand up and say, "We want to cut down expenses." The condition in which we find ourselves is deplorable as far as it concerns this attitude on the part of the leader, the gentleman from Texas; the leader, the gentleman from New England; and the leader, the gentleman from Missouri; and every Member on this side of the aisle are spenders; they do not practice economy; all they know is spend, spend, increase appropriations, and ruin our financial stability as a Nation.

We find ourselves in a most serious and precarious position. In the last fiscal year the Federal Government spent more than $21,000,000 a day, or approximately $15,000 a minute, day and night, and currently is spending still more. although the deficit is increased, since July 1 last to March 21, over two and one-quarter billion dollars. If I thought that spending all these dollars and adding to the national debt for your children and your children's children to pay was the solution of our problems, I would be here trying to get more money, but I have tried to be conscientious in my effort. I dislike to come here and fight increases in appropriations, but just as sure as the sun will shine tomorrow morning, just as sure as there is a good Lord in heaven, and just as sure as the people in this country are under a free American republic, disaster is going to overtake us if we do not cut down the enormous burden we are placing on our children and our children's children, to take care of an obligation we are not big enough to take care of ourselves. You should be ashamed of yourselves. You are not big enough to assume the responsibilities of leadership in this House of Representatives. We say, "We will create a debt. What do you care whether it is $40,000,000,000 or $45,000,000,000, or $60,000,000,000? Let the children pay it." Then, when the time comes for them to take care not only of the financial difficulties with which they are going to be confronted but the debt we are leaving on their shoulders, the children of this Nation will not be able to stand the burden of the debt caused by this administration's folly. It is a disgrace to this administration and will be a millstone around future Americans' necks.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. RICH. I cannot yield. I have not the time.

Let me quote the words of Franklin D. Roosevelt, spoken in Pittsburgh on October 19, 1932:

Taxes are paid in the sweat of every man who labors.

[Applause.]

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I dislike very much to appear on this floor so often, but to sit here and see this appropriation measure passed without saying something about it is impossible. Here is $1,155,383,558 being appropriated, ostensibly for the purpose of helping agriculture. This is about one-eighth as much as the entire income of the farmers.

On a reasonable income basis—allowing 13.5 percent of the total national income as the farmers' share—their share of the taxes to meet this appropriation will be $155,977,000. On a population basis, which comes perhaps nearer to the truth, the farmers will have to pay more than $277,000,000 in taxes to pay for this appropriation.

Furthermore, no less than 25 percent of this appropriation is sheer waste. Considering the financial distress of our Nation, of the want of bread by our people, and especially the distressed condition of the agricultural group that this appropriation is supposed to help, the amount called for in this appropriation is at least twice as much as it ought to be,

It is perhaps one of the strangest paradoxes in the history of lawmaking to see our Congress here granting to the major industrial division of our economy, agriculture, what is naively called a subsidy, or parity. As though it were possible to grant agriculture a real subsidy in the sense of taking money from the other industrial division without lowering correspondingly agricultural income, is to say the least, and not to be too uncharitable, irrational.

I also cannot refrain from expressing an opinion on the low plane to which the discussion of this measure has descended. We have actually witnessed W. P. A. and agriculture being made into mere political pawns. We have seen the attempt made to use these pawns as trading stock for votes. "Guarantee us who represent the cities that you agricultural people will vote for W. P. A. and we will vote for your appropriations." Has it really come to this, that Congressmen regard group votes as mere political wares to be hawked and traded here on this floor to each other?

I trust there will be a record vote on the final passage of this measure so I can record my vote against it. There are things in it I would like to vote for but I cannot vote for the bill as a whole.

I could never go back to my district and face my people if I voted for this measure.

I came here to help the farmers, not to rob them. [Applause.]

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last four words.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. RANKIN. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Chairman, I believe we have reached the point in the consideration of this bill when it will be necessary to enforce the rule that Members must discuss the pending amendment. I believe we may save a great deal of time if that is done. I expect, therefore, to insist upon the observance of that rule henceforward.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, I was very much amused while listening to the remarks of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Smith] and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Rich]. They remind me of some boys down on the Tennessee River back in the Volstead days who went out one night to get some "wildcat" liquor, and lo, they found it. They got full and came back to the river about midnight, jumped in their boat, grabbed a paddle apiece, and paddled till sun-up next morning without reaching the bank. Finally one of them looked around and discovered they had never untied their boat. [Laughter.]

These gentlemen offer no solution of our problems. They propose nothing that will help relieve the situation, but continuously quibble about balancing the Budget on the present price levels. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Richlalked about our children paying the debt, about our unloading this debt onto our children. We are not going to do anything of the kind if we act wisely and use the gold supply we have to expand the currency so as to restore prosperity. Then we can balance the Budget, meet our obligations, and gradually pay off the national debt. But if we leave this debt to our children they will likely repudiate it. The bondholders who got rich back in the palmy days of the World War, or back in the palmy days of Mellon prosperity, who now have their money invested in tax-exempt securities, who are controlling every big newspaper in this country, and who are trying to dictate to the Congress to balance the Budget on the present price levels—they are just as surely headed for the wreck of repudiation if we keep on. Our only chance to restore normal prosperity in this country is through a reasonable, controlled expansion.

You cannot any more balance the Budget on present price levels than you can fly, and let me say to the gentleman from Ohio it has not been balanced since the World War. I know they will tell you here that they balanced it during the Harding-Coolidge-Hoover regime. They did not do anything of the kind. They sold war materials, liquidated the obligations that we had made during the war when we thought the war would go on for several years, and use that money; but go back and search the Federal income and expenditures and you will find we have not balanced the Budget with current revenues since the World War, and you never will have a balanced Budget in this country on the present price levels. So, if we are going to restore prosperity, peace, and contentment to our people, we are going to have to use our gold supply for the purposes for which it was created-to expand the currency-not for this group of international or Wall Street bankers that control the Federal Reserve System to manipulate, but issue it in the right way, as the Constitution provides, by the Congress and the President, and control its value as well as its volume.

Then you can have a limited, controlled expansion, and if you do not do that, you are going to burst into wild and uncontrolled inflation, or else you are going to see the national debt repudiated. You cannot force Congress to pay a debt.

We are headed for one of three things: Reasonable, controlled expansion of the currency on the gold reserve we have, national prosperity, peace, and contentment, or wild and uncontrolled inflation with all the wreck and ruin it brought to Europe a few years ago, or ultimate repudiation of the national debt which would simply mean chaos and ruin [Applause.]

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Chairman, I have just a very brief comment to make. I have been sitting here carefully analyzing this bill, and I note that the proposition now before the House involves the eradication of fruit insects, Spanish flies, Japanese moths, citrus canker, European corn borers and phony peach and peach mosaic, forest insects, moths, insects and worms and borers of various kinds, and I compliment the Congress in paying attention to the necessity of destroying these insect pests; but I also want to call the attention of the Congress at this time to another fact and I am going to reiterate it from time to time during my membership in this House.

There are some borers and some insects and some worms that work in here in America that are more destructive than any of these moths and worms that you are appropriating money to defend yourselves against, and these are the communistic worms and borers that are working from within our democratic institutions and structures and are seeking to destroy our form of government. [Applause.] And if you are going to build up this barrier against the fruitfly from Mexico and the borer from Mexico, it seems to me it is high time that we begin to build up a barrier against the insidious propaganda that is emanating from Soviet Russia and these other borer countries that seek to destroy us, and appropriate more than the mere $100,000 to aid the distinguished gentleman from Texas and his committee to bring legislation here to stop these worms and these borers from destroying us. [Applause.]

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. Mr. Chairman, I trust you will be as lenient with me and my discussion of this amendment as of preceding speakers.

I have heard much said about the huge debt we are piling up for our posterity. I want to assure you as the father of three splendid children that I, too, think of posterity. I recall the use by the founding fathers of that phrase in the preamble of the Constitution of the United States where it says, "for ourselves and our posterity we do ordain and establish." It has been asked by some wag, "What has posterity done for me that I should do anything for him?" Apparently throughout American industrial history there has been a lot of acting in this latter spirit. I want to tell you there is more than one way of thinking and acting seriously toward our posterity. I am more concerned about the kind of a country we leave our children than I am about a set of books.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Rich] calls repeated attention to the debt we are piling up, which, he says, must be paid by our posterity. There is something else we can hand on to posterity in addition to a debt, and if I had more time to discuss it, I might take issue with the gentleman with regard to passing on a debt to posterity. Every time we have a war we create a debt, some of which we may pass on to posterity, but the large part of it the generation that fights the war has to pay, and this is true not only of a military war but a war of some other kind such as we have been passing through. In general, we have for several years been fighting a war against poverty, and in this bill we are fighting evil nature.

If you want to pass on disease, if you want to be niggardly in your appropriation for the Health Service in combating the social diseases, for instance; if you want to be miserly in supporting the forces of law and order and thus let crime flourish; if you want to pass on insect pests; if you want to pass on the boll weevil, the chinch bug and the pink bollworm and those things which can destroy us, and allow them to get a foothold on this continent and increase their destructive powers, you can pass all that on to our children, too.

In our fight against the insect world, with all the knowledge and ability that science has put in our possession, we shall have a tremendous struggle to escape final conquest by the insect world. We know that one variety of insect pest after another has come to destroy our crops and our orchards, and I want to say to you that I realize the terrible possibilities of the insect pests and plant diseases, as well as of human diseases, no matter what part of the country we may be considering. I do not want to see the elms of New England, the "elms of dear old Yale," the elms of New Jersey, or any other elms conquered by a pest or disease. My vote has been consistent with that philosophy.

In Arizona the pink bollworm appeared several years ago but, as I am informed, it was brought under control if not entirely wiped out for a while. Now, it has appeared again within 20 miles of my home in one of the most fruitful parts of our cotton areas. Let us put the agricultural G-men after it more effectively. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Arizona has expired. All time has expired. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Kleberg].

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be again reported.

There was no objection and the Clerk again reported the Kleberg amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. Kleberg) there were—ayes 66, noes 138.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insects affecting man and animals: For insects affecting man, household possessions, and animals, $175,000.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CALDWELL: Page 58, line 18, strike out "$175,000" and insert "$181,500."

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the additional amount is not authorized by law.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that if the original amount in the paragraph is authorized, then the amendment would be authorized. The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is overruled. The gentleman from Florida is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, in a few words I shall state the purpose of the requested increase. It appropriates $6,500 to be used by the Bureau of Entomology and Plant Quarantine to employ a full-time entomologist, seasonal assistants and operating expenses, for the sole purpose of conducting a careful study of the pest locally and commonly known throughout the Central West, and the Southeastern area of the country, as the cattle fly, or in some localities as the stable or dog fly, the scientific name of which is Stomoxys calcitrans. This fly is about the size of the ordinary housefly, and its bite very painful, and sometimes dangerous, and is a pest of increasing importance. The Department of Agriculture advises me that the average yearly damage from this pest approximates $8,000,000. I am requesting a bit less than one one-thousandths of this annual damage to conduct the research. No one now knows just where or how the fly originated, nor where it goes. When we have determined where it breeds and what its habits are we can undertake some appropriate measures of eradication. The Department states that within recent years the fly has become of increasing economic importance in the Southeast, particularly along the Atlantic and Gulf coasts, due to the greater development of stock raising. Because of the invasion of the Southeast by the screwworm, the dog fly has increased the damage inflicted by that parasite by inducing an infestation of magots in the sores resulting from its bites.

It will be remembered that a few years ago we appropriated a considerable sum of money for the eradication of the screwworm in the Southeast, and one of the causes of the difficulties which beset us in that effort was this same pest. I am anxious to provide the Department of Agriculture with enough money to employ one full-time entomologist to undertake a worth-while investigation of this problem and shall appreciate your careful thought and consideration in determining what is to be done with the proposed amendment. I am very much in earnest about it. It is a matter of vital interest to the entire Atlantic coast from Long Island southward and on the Gulf.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Chairman, does this also call for a study of the insect commonly known as the mosquito?

Mr. CALDWELL. No.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Does it only take in the ordinary housefly?

Mr. CALDWELL. I do not propose a study of the housefly. The pest I refer to is similar in appearance to the housefly, but is in fact quite different. It is a cattle fly, and its sting is very painful to man and damaging to animals.

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CALDWELL. Yes.

Mr. TARVER. The gentleman made a very strong presentation of this matter in committee. I think I should state that the committee in passing on numerous propositions of a similar nature failed to take into consideration and discussion or to pass on the gentleman's amendment.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Chairman, does the gentleman's amendment include what they call in the Great Lakes section the fish fly? We have billions there in the beginning of every season and they are a great pest.

Mr. CALDWELL. I do not think that the insect pest that I am speaking of is the same as that which the gentleman has in mind. This seems to be indigenous to the central portion of the country and to the coast lines along the Atlantic and the Gulf.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 5 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

So far as I know, Mr. Chairman, there has never been even one of these "cattle" or "dog" flies in my district, nor in my section of Alabama, but I do happen to know something of the Gulf coast, and I have seen the damages inflicted by the ravages of this fly and the threat of other losses, which far exceed the damages estimated by the Department of Agriculture. I have seen the wind change and an entire hotel full of people vacate and leave that coast. This infestation is now in its incipiency, and I envision, honestly, that it may develop and spread to the extent that it will be a nuisance, and a painful, poisonous nuisance, causing a grave economic loss, not only on the Atlantic seaboard and Gulf but in many other regions of this Nation.

As the gentleman from Florida [Mr. CALDWELL] has so well said, this appropriation is for only one man to act as a sort of F. B. I. investigator to seek out the haunts and breeding places of this pest and make a report to the Department of Agriculture as to how it may be eradicated. Complete eradication is possible now. The cost of this service is estimated by the Department of Agriculture at less than one one-thousandth of 1 percent of the loss which they estimate is sustained annually from this poisonous biting of cattle and other livestock, but I maintain over and above that estimate there is the other economic loss which I have mentioned. While not interested in this amendment at all from an immediate standpoint, I do most earnestly beseech you ladies and gentlemen of the House not to laugh this case out of court. It was inadvertently omitted from consideration by the committee, as Judge Tarver has told you, and we bespeak of you, while the problem is still small and involves a very small expenditure of the taxpayers' money, your serious consideration. Those of you who think this through will vote with us to adopt this amendment. Thank you.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Florida [Mr. CALDWELL].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. Rich) there were ayes 62 and noes 56.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

General administrative expenses: For necessary expenses for general administrative purposes, including the salary of Chief of Bureau and other personal services in the District of Columbia, $118,000.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment. The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Rich: On page 61, line 19, strike out "$118,000" and insert "$110,000."

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, I am asking that this be cut down from $118,000 to $110,000. This leaves the amount at the same place it was last year for overhead expenses in the District of Columbia.

I realize that in the Biological Survey you have increased this appropriation over $700,000, but this is the money that is to be expended in the District of Columbia. We are increasing the Bureau and as we increase the Bureau each and every year we will be requested to furnish additional sums of money in the field. I feel confident that if the people in the Biological Survey or any of the other bureaus will give more time to the work of the office instead of spending so much time coming here to the Capitol, trying to intercede in securing additional funds for the various bureaus, they will be able to do the work and keep down overhead. I think the time has come when we must try to keep this Bureau and all other bureaus down to the point where they were, if possible, last year. I think we can do that if we will try to keep the bureaus from increasing their District of Columbia organizations. They can very easily spend the money that is appropriated in this bill for this Bureau this year, in the field, without increasing the office here, even to the extent of the increase of $725,000. If it is necessary, we can leave out the Upper Mississippi Wildlife Refuge, where we are spending $60,000 for additional land for this refuge. I feel confident there are many States in the Nation today which would be willing to contribute the ground to make these wildlife refuges instead of making the Federal Government pay for them.

I think that any State that is interested or has interceded to have a refuge within its own borders ought to present to this country the land upon which those refuges should be established. I think that should be the policy, and if it were the policy and we strictly adhered to it, we would find out that all the sportsmen of this country would rally to the wildlife refuge and would see to it that we got the proper land upon which to build them in every State, thus we would save the Federal Treasury from this ever-increasing urge for the Government to continually buy more land.

I spoke to you a while ago and I wanted to quote Franklin D. Roosevelt in his address at Pittsburgh on October 19, which is apropos of this amendment or any other one, wherein he said:

Taxes are paid in the sweat of every man who labors. If excessive, they are reflected in the idle factory, tax-sold farms and hence in hordes of the hungry tramping the streets and seeking jobs in vain. Our workers may never see a tax bill but they pay in deduction from wages and increased cost of what they buy or in broad cessation of employment. Our people and our business can not carry excessive burdens of taxation.

If there ever were a truthful statement uttered, that was it. But we have these various appropriation bills asking for increases in the amounts of money to build up the organizations in the city of Washington, and then I think we put ourselves in a position where each and every year we are going to be requested for additional funds to maintain them.

WHERE ARE YOU GOING TO GET THE MONEY?

The President says that taxation and excessive taxation are reflected in idle factories and hordes of the hungry tramping the streets. Well, we find curtailed production in industry from excessive taxation, and from strangulation of laws by the New Deal. We should change the Wagner Act and the N. L. R. B. if you want to help industry and employ labor, and do it at once. Restore confidence in industry and you will employ labor.

I hope the members of the committee will support this amendment because I feel sure there is money enough now appropriated to take care of this department of our Government, for the year beginning July 1 next.

We can never hope to economize if the leaders are always asking for increases. They are responsible as leaders. Will they economize? Will they keep the bureaus to last year's standard or are we going to hold them to that level. Your vote will decide.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 5 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, my good friend, the gentleman from Pennsylvania, is indeed a very versatile person. He begins with an amendment to strike $10,000 from administrative expenses in Washington, D. C., and winds up on a wildlife refuge out along the Mississippi River.

I hope you will vote the amendment down, for while there is an increase of $10,000 in administrative expenses, it is not the fault of the Biological Survey or its Director. You must remember that there is on the books the General Accounting Act of 1921 which authorizes the General Accounting Office to modernize and streamline the departments of the Government. They have started in the Department of Agriculture. They started in the Bureau of Biological Survey. Mr. Gabrielson, the very able Director of this Bureau, has nothing to say about it. The General Accounting Office says to him: "Here is the system that you must follow."

He can shout to high heaven, but it will do no good—he is going to have to install it; and because the General Accounting Office has insisted that this is to be installed, it automatically increases the administrative cost something in the neighborhood of $8,000 to $10,000. This is the only reason the increase is reflected by the committee action. I hope, therefore, the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania to strike $10,000 from administrative expenditures that are occasioned by the General Accounting Office of this Government will be voted down.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the acquisition of areas of land or land and water pursuant to the act entitled "An act to establish the Upper Mississippi River Wildlife and Fish Refuge", approved June 7, 1924 (16 U. S. C. 721-731), as amended, and for all necessary expenses incident thereto, to remain available until expended, $60,000.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, there is an apparent mis-print on page 61. I thought perhaps the chairman of the subcommittee might wish to correct it.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the Clerk be authorized to correct the totals.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the correction will be made.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

MIGRATORY-BIRD CONSERVATION FUND

For carrying into effect the provisions of section 4 of the act entitled "An act to supplement and support the Migratory Bird Conservation Act by providing funds for the acquisition of areas for use as migratory-bird sanctuaries, refuges, and breeding grounds, for developing and administering such areas, for the protection of certain migratory birds, for the enforcement of the Migratory Bird Treaty Act and regulations thereunder, and for other purposes," approved March 16, 1934, as amended by an act entitled "An act to amend the Migratory Bird Hunting Stamp Act of March 16, 1934, and certain other acts relating to game and other wildlife, administered by the Department of Agriculture, and for other purposes," approved June 15, 1935 (16 U. S. C. 718-718h), an amount equal to the sum received during the fiscal year 1940 from the proceeds from the sale of stamps, to be warranted monthly; and in addition thereto an amount equal to the unobligated balance on June 30, 1939, of the total of the proceeds received from the sale of stamps prior to July 1, 1939: Provided, That the sum of $125,000 shall be advanced from the general fund of the Treasury on the first day of the fiscal year to the foregoing appropriations, to be returned to the surplus fund of the Treasury when the first $125,000 of revenue from the sale of stamps has been received and warranted for the fiscal year 1940. fiscal year 1940.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment. The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Gifford: On page 66, line 7, after the word "funds", strike out the following: "for the acquisition of areas for use as migratory-bird sanctuaries, refuges, and breeding grounds, for developing and administering such areas."

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that I may proceed for 3 minutes in addition to the 5 to which I am entitled.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I have a real grievance against this migratory bird conservation fund. Is it possible that a Congressman has no persuasive influence in the representation of his district? Have we delegated such power to this Biological Survey that a protest from the Representatives of the people, the protest of the entire district affected, including town officials and chambers of commerce, will not deter them from taking land such as they may see fit to acquire?

I am proud of the district I represent, a 90-mile peninsula-it might now be called an island-the right arm of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts; and my people settled in that region because of certain natural advantages which existed there—the deep-sea fisheries, the shell fisheries, and the migratory birds that formerly furnished considerable sustenance and one of the means of their livelihood. We formerly had the privilege of taking a brace of birds for our own use during the entire season of their flight. Times have changed. Under the conservation idea they wish to take large sections of our land contrary to the desire of everybody in the locality. The conservationist, so called, who is oftentimes the greatest shooter of them all, now enjoys the zone system. He shoots in my zone for a month, then moves to the next zone, and shoots there for another month. He follows the zones with his pump guns and his expensive paraphernalia. After he shoots in my section for a month he says to us, "Don't you kill one of those birds until I return next year." So the birthright of my people has been taken away and we have had to submit to this outside interference, thereby losing our natural rights. Until some 2 years ago we had the shooting boxes where the wealthy man could use those traitorous birds to call their brothers down to their doom. His hired men could notify him when the birds arrived and he would then hurry to the kill. This was a murderous method.

I hope that I am a true conservationist. I purchased a section of land some 3 years ago to get rid of a shooting box. My people are willing to buck the cold, and the wind, and the tide to hunt and kill a brace of birds for food. They have to give up these rights to please so-called conservationists. I have had much trouble over this situation, and received many protests. Today, in this morning's mail, and for the last week, I have had letters telling of agents getting options on land in one large section of my home district. This Bureau seems determined to force upon us a large conservation project against the protest of practically eevry individual in the area. This agitation began some 5 years ago.

The chambers of commerce representing that whole 90 miles of the peninsula of Cape Cod have sent me strong protests against the taking of this land; yet this Bureau is apparently proceeding, in spite of all our protests, to take options on that land. I wish I had a map of that section available at the moment.

If they want to take a certain area, as they have done in the Mississippi Valley, I have no objection. But I want to cut out a certain section of this act, and insist that they specify the lands they wish to take. Let them inform the Congress that we may protect ourselves. This delegated power of eminent domain should not be used against solid protests from the sections affected.

This delegation of power to bureaucrats is constantly increasing. Was it not bad enough when we allowed them to draw lines across the country, saying, "zone 1," then "zone 2," "zone 3," and so forth?

Mr. Chairman, I came to Washington as far back as 1921 to protest these arbitrary zones. Our objections seem not particularly persuasive with this particular Bureau.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. GIFFORD. I yield to the gentleman from Montana. Mr. O'CONNOR. Will the gentleman explain his amendment? I would like to hear it.

Mr. GIFFORD. I simply take out those few lines where it says: "For the acquisition of areas for use as migratory-bird sanctuaries." I would make them state definitely the exact location and area they intend to take, before the money shall be appropriated.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I sympathize with the gentleman's remarks.

Mr. GIFFORD. I should think the gentleman would.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I have had the same experience. Mr. HOFFMAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. HOFFMAN. The gentleman realizes that right here in Washington after the season on wild fowl closes you can go down toward Alexandria and buy canvasbacks and mallards.

Mr. GIFFORD. I realize that much of this so-called conservation is a mockery. I do not dare go near my farm for a month each year when the outside sportsmen arrive. They come in with their pump guns and their trained dogs and shoot us up, and then say, "Don't you kill one until we return next year.'

Who are these sportsmen? They are people who are charged $1 to $3 for a license in the hope of getting sufficient funds to support the Bureau. Clubs are formed in the cities and when the shooting holiday arrives they go after their

Mr. LEAVY. Does not the gentleman think the remedy he seeks should not be by an appropriation measure but through

Mr. GIFFORD. I do not know, but it might very easily be done here by striking out this delegation of power. I realize my amendment itself is not very effective. This protest comes from almost the entire electorate of that section of my district. Suppose you were in this position. There are 14 municipalities in that area protesting through the chambers of commerce and the town officials. Yet in spite of all this protest they are taking options even at this moment although we have been fighting the proposition for 5 long years. This Bureau should be forced to come here and ask for permission to buy certain areas and not be allowed to impose its will, as I have pictured to you today.

Mr. Chairman, I appeal to the Members to vote for my amendment. It will at least serve as an expression of our purposes, which may be heeded.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Gifford].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. Gifford) there were—ayes 91, noes 72.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk,

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. August H. Andresen: Page 66, line 6, insert "Provided, That no part of said sum shall be used to purchase agricultural or pasture land."

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Chairman, when the Upper Mississippi Wildlife Refuge Act was passed, the original act provided for the acquisition of land and/or water. The act specifically provided that none of the funds should be used for the acquisition of lands that could be used for agricultural purposes.

The reason I am offering this amendment is to stop the Biological Survey from condemning land that is definitely used for agricultural purposes in the Upper Mississippi Wildlife Refuge. At the present time the Biological Survey has started condemnation proceedings against 16 to 18 farmers to take away from them their pasture and agricultural land. This is not a conservation proposition, for the reason that this pasture and other farm land cannot be used for conservation purposes; but the Department is determined to go into court to ascertain whether or not it has the right to take agricultural land when the act specifically provides it cannot do so.

These farmers do not have the money to employ expensive counsel to defend themselves, while the Biological Survey has the entire staff of the Department of Justice and its highpriced lawyers who are out there persecuting the farmers in my district. If these farmers lose their land, they will have to move away from the section in which they and their parents have lived for a period of 50 or 60 years. If these farmers lose their land, they cannot continue their farming operations because they must have this agricultural and pasture land in order to carry on their farming enterprise.

Mr. Chairman, I ask the Members of the House to place this limitation upon the appropriation so that the Biological Survey cannot use any of this fund to acquire land used for agricultural purposes, which was strictly prohibited in the original Upper Mississippi Wildlife Refuge Act. I hope the amendment will be adopted. It is in conformity with the original act as passed in 1924.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, we ask for a vote on the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. Cannon of Missouri) there were—ayes 86, noes 82.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chairman appointed as tellers Mr. August H. Andresen and Mr. Cannon of Missouri.

The Committee again divided; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 107, noes 122.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

FEDERAL AID IN WILDLIFE RESTORATION

For carrying out the provisions of the act entitled "An act to provide that the United States shall aid the States in wildlife restoration projects, and for other purposes," approved September 2, 1937 (16 U. S. C. 669-669j), $1,500,000: Provided, That expenditures hereunder shall not exceed the aggregate receipts covered into the Treasury under the provisions of said act.

Total, Bureau of Biological Survey, $3,973,691, of which amount not to exceed $655,040 may be expended for personal services in the District of Columbia, and not to exceed $72,100 shall be available for the purchase of motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles able for the purchase of motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles necessary in the conduct of field work outside the District of Columnecessary in the conduct of nead work outside the District of Commbia: Provided, That the appropriation of $6,000,000 contained in title VII of the act of June 15, 1935 (16 U. S. C. 715k-1), shall be available for the maintenance, repair, and operation of motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, the amendment which was recently adopted on page 66, lines 7 to 10, was evidently misconceived, as it merely amends the title to an act quoted in the bill for purposes of identification. It can have no force or effect whatever. In view of the fact that it is wholly futile and cannot in any way affect the bill or the appropriation, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be rescinded in order to retain this section of the bill in the form in which it has always been carried. It makes no particular difference one way or the other, but in order to provide the phraseology usually followed I make the request.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, in the absence of the gentleman from Massachusetts, I suggest that the gentleman withhold his request. I would not feel at liberty to give consent to the request under the circumstances.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I shall be glad to submit the request later. The gentleman, of course, realizes that merely amending the title of an act cited in the paragraph can have no effect on the bill itself.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I never dreamed that partisanship would reach the point in this House when on a strictly party vote an effort would be made to cripple the whole migratory-birdconservation program, financed by the $1 duck stamp paid by those who hunt in this country. The vote by which the Gifford amendment was adopted came solely from the Republican side of the House. As pointed out by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Cannon] it is an ineffectual thing. It merely strikes out a few words of the descriptive title of the Duck Stamp Act under which this fund is appropriated. It has no bearing whatever on the act itself or the powers of the Biological Survey.

What I am addressing myself to at this time is the intent to cripple this activity, which has been one of the best activities for migratory birds this country has ever seen. The number of birds had been reduced from 50,000,000 or 60,000,000 to a bare 12,000,000, which was not much more than the annual kill. We are trying to bring the ducks back by establishing refuges. If we were not engaging in this program and sending some ducks to Cape Cod it would not be long before their shooting would be limited to sparrows and English starlings. You gentlemen on that side listened to an appeal against the city hunter and against the Biological Survey and tried to strike from this bill the power of an agency to establish refuges that is not a Democratic agency, because fourfifths of the Biological Survey appointees were appointed during Republican administrations. It is a civil-service agency engaged in the nonpartisan work of wildlife conservation. The Chief himself was not a Democrat when he was appointed, but why should we raise that point when he is one of the best qualified men in the country for that duty, and why should we not uphold him?

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROBERTSON. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. The gentleman knows I am as much interested in conservation as anyone in this country.
Mr. ROBERTSON. I agree with the gentleman.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I have served with the distinguished gentleman for many years. The amendment I proposed, and which the majority saw fit to vote down, was in the interest of conservation.

Mr. ROBERTSON. The matter was not adequately discussed. Some of the migratory refuges are surrounded by what might be called agricultural land. It is submarginal land. However, the gentleman's definition did not exclude submarginal land. For that reason it was unwise and I voted against it. I do not want this agency to go out and buy any good agricultural land, and I hope they are not doing it.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. That is just what they are doing up in my section.

Mr. ROBERTSON. They should not do it; I will agree they should not do it. However, the gentleman's amendment was not adequately drawn, if the gentleman will pardon my statement.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I admit I am probably not as skillful as some parliamentarians here, but my amendment covered the situation.

Mr. ROBERTSON. They cannot get any land at Cape Cod unless the owner sells it to the Government. This Bureau has no power to condemn.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. ROBERTSON. I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. WARREN. The gentleman will recall that the Duck Stamp Act was passed by unanimous consent on the Consent Calendar here after it had been reported out unanimously, with our friends on the minority side cooperating in the framing of the bill and in its passage.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield so I may answer the gentleman from North Carolina?

Mr. ROBERTSON. I yield briefly.

Mr. GIFFORD. I objected on the floor to the consideration of that bill and at the gentleman's earnest request—and I made the statement at that time that I never yet in my long service had by myself held up any bill—withdrew the objection.

Mr. WARREN. The bill did go through by unanimous consent.

Mr. ROBERTSON. I do not object to playing politics. I am a Democrat and you are Republicans. Take all the advantage of us you want, but please do not start playing politics with wildlife conservation. Let us keep that as a great national issue on which all should unite for the common good and the general welfare. [Applause.]

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment.

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman vield?

Mr. GIFFORD. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. I merely wish to say in response to the charge of partisanship that I am a Republican, and I voted against the Gifford amendment and against the Andresen amendment.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. I yield briefly.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Does not the gentleman believe it is unfair of the gentleman from Virginia to attack the Republican Party in the face of the fact that we have only 169 Members and the gentleman's party has the rest of the 435 Members? It is ridiculous for the gentleman to blame the Republicans for the adoption of the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. GIFFORD. I wish to say to the gentleman who has just spoken that I did not mention politics in my address. I simply pleaded for the right of a Member of the House to protect himself in circumstances which I carefully portrayed to you. I told you I did not care how many areas you took in other sections, but that this was the only forum I had in which to protect my own section when action was sought to be taken against the seemingly unanimous opposition of everybody therein.

The gentleman mentioned Cape Cod. If any of you are familiar with that famous promontory called Monomoy, and you lived in the town of Chatham, of which it is a part, and thought that whole section was to be taken in the name of conservation, you would understand the importance of the matter. The tract has great potential value for summer residential purposes. I did portray what had been done to my native people by taking away from them certain rights in the name of conservation, and I told you who some of the conservationists were. I said nothing to call for any such remarks as those that were made by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. Robertson]. He can nurse this conservation baby of his; it is his right, but I wish him to let me alone in my particular congressional district.

I hope this is plain and others may well feel the same way about it.

I do not blame him for not liking me to say that wealthy sportsmen-shooters are often the largest contributors to these conservation funds. They like limitations heaped upon native people and they like to take these places away from us for the sake of bringing wild fowl into being, for them to shoot at their pleasure.

I do know that these shooting boxes in the last 2 or 3 years have been abandoned, but I did have to buy one 3 years ago to get rid of it. I note his sarcasm that Cape Cod could not live without city people. We might not, but we could live without some of these city shooters. [Applause.]

The pro forma amendment was withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

Economic investigations: For acquiring and diffusing useful information among the people of the United States, and for aiding in formulating programs for authorized activities of the Department of Agriculture, relative to agricultural production, distribution, land utilization, and conservation in their broadest aspects, including farm management and practice, utilization of farm and food products, purchasing of farm supplies, farm population and rural life, farm labor, farm finance, insurance and taxation, adjustments in production to probable demand for the different farm and food products; land ownership and values, costs, prices, and income in their relation to agriculture, including causes for their variations and trends, $839,100: Provided, That the Secretary may transfer to this appropriation from the funds available for authorized activities of the Department of Agriculture such sums as may be necessary for aiding in formulating programs for such authorized activities, including expenditures for employment of persons and means in the District of Columbia and elsewhere.

Mr. DITTER. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the paragraph starting in line 7, on page 72, and I would like to be heard at this time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. DITTER. I make the point of order against the paragraph that it is legislation.

Mr. Chairman, I take this opportunity to say a word about an unfortunate occurence earlier in the day. I want to be very temperate in what I say. My purpose was simply to try to sound a warning on a course that might be pursued in the delegation of authority. I believe anyone who would read this section, particularly starting in line 19, could not help but be impressed with the fact that we are going on dangerous ground. I wanted to sound a warning on that course of procedure by which we would turn over to any executive agency a blank check of authority by which a secretary of a department might do as he pleased. I had no purpose whatever in either trying to assume a privilege or to interrupt or interfere with the orderly procedure of the House. I still feel that we should be cautious and that particularly on appropriations we should be mindful of the fact that any executive agency which is granted by the Congress an everincreasing degree of power is liable to use that power to the disadvantage of the people. [Applause.]

I withdraw the point of order, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I renew the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. TABER. That it is legislation upon an appropriation bill and a delegation to the Secretary of authority to transfer funds, and delegates to or requires of the Secretary of Agriculture additional duties in violation of the rules.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Missouri desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, the point of order is not well taken. This entire paragraph provides for investigation and research and is fully authorized, under the organic law, which provides that the Secretary of Agriculture shall acquire and diffuse among the people of the United States information on subjects connected with agriculture, "in the most general and comprehensive sense of that word."

Certainly, Mr. Chairman, there is no function in this paragraph which the Secretary is not authorized and directed to perform under the law establishing the Department, when and if funds are provided for that purpose by the Congress.

The point of order is not well taken and the entire paragraph is in order.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I call the Chair's attention to these words in lines 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, and 24, page 72:

Provided, That the Secretary may transfer to this appropriation from the funds available for authorized activities of the Department of Agriculture, such sums as may be necessary for aiding in formulating programs for such authorized activities, including expenditures for employment of persons and means in the District of Columbia and elsewhere.

It is perfectly clear that that language creates additional duties in the Secretary of Agriculture and delegates authority to him to appropriate funds, to transfer funds from other appropriations, whether provided for in this bill or otherwise, and it is subject to a point of order under the rules of the House.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, no funds are affected here except funds which have been appropriated by Congress, and the Secretary of Agriculture under the terms of the organic law is authorized to administer the Department, and he may, as administrator of that Department any time transfer such funds from one activity to another. The point of order is not well taken, Mr. Chairman, the appropriation is for the use of the Secretary of Agriculture in the discharge of his official duties, as provided by law.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, the Secretary of Agriculture under the law and under the rules of the House cannot be given authority to transfer an appropriation by an appropriation bill. It is entirely contrary to the rules of the House. It is a specific delegation of authority to the Secretary, and it requires additional duties of him.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair asks the gentleman from Missouri if this provision applies only to that particular fund or to other funds available to the Secretary of Agriculture heretofore appropriated? Does this apply to funds heretofore appropriated for the benefit of the Department of Agriculture?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. It applies to the transfer of funds "available to the Department of Agriculture" by the Secretary as the administrator and director of the Department of Agriculture. That is a part of his functions.

The CHAIRMAN. Does that include the clause "heretofore appropriated"?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. It does for the purpose of authorized activities of the Department.

Mr. WHITE of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, may I be heard on the point of order?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will be glad to hear the gentleman from Ohio on the point of order.

Mr. WHITE of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I call the attention of the Chair to the fact that the particular transfer of funds is not limited to the funds in this bill, and, therefore, it is an enlargement of duties, as contended. It applies to any funds that have been heretofore appropriated to the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. HOFFMAN. In the opinion of the Chair, does the language beginning in the latter part of line 19 authorize the transfer of funds appropriated; for example, on page 58, for the pink bollworm.

The CHAIRMAN. That is under another heading, and it is not material for the purpose of deciding this question.

The first point of order made by the gentleman from New York [Mr. Taber] is overruled because an examination of section 511 of title 5 of the United States Code discloses that it is certainly in order. The last part is related to the transfer of funds. The Chair quotes from Cannon's Precedents, volume VII, section 1470, the following:

A proposition to transfer funds from one department of the Government to another for purposes authorized by law was held not to involve legislation and to be in order in an appropriation bill.

The gentleman makes the point of order that it is legislation in an appropriation bill. The point of order is overruled.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Before we forget the migratory bird refuge program, in fairness to my friend from Massachusetts [Mr. Gifford], next week I shall only be too glad to call the House Wildlife Conservation Committee in session and invite the gentleman and the officials from the Biological Survey to come before us, and if it be true that the officials of the Biological Survey are attempting to run roughshod over the good citizens of Massachusetts or anywhere else, we will see that there is adequate remedy for their protection.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I trust the gentleman does not doubt my word about the town voting unanimously and the chamber of commerce against this matter.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Of course not; but I just could not believe that the Biological Survey, over the protest of any community, would come in and try to force one of these refuges upon them, and I hate to believe they are going out into Minnesota and buying good farm land for this purpose.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROBERTSON. I yield.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. The gentleman knows I was one of the authors of the first Migratory Bird Act passed in this country.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Absolutely, and the gentleman has been an outstanding conservationist in this Congress ever since, and I have been familiar with his work.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Let me say to the gentleman that I will bring to his office, and when the committee of which I am a member and of which the gentleman is chairman is convened I will show him where the Biological Survey is actually condemning land and has proceedings in the United States district court at this time and is attempting to take good farm land. I will ask the chairman if he will have the Chief of the Biological Survey and Mr. Dieffenbach and other members of that organization before our committee so that we may present the matter to them.

Mr. ROBERTSON. I will certainly take pleasure in doing it. The trouble is not with the law. We have got the right law. If it is not being properly administered, it will be one of the functions of this House committee to see that it is.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. ROBERTSON. I yield.

Mr. GIFFORD. I realize that my amendment may have caused some trouble, because, of course, it mutilates the description of the act and it may not be too effective, but it does not look nice in there and you will probably resent it. If I will make no objection, would the gentleman not be willing to return to the page before, where I wanted to offer the amendment, and just let me exclude the peninsula of Cape Cod?

Mr. ROBERTSON. I am not in charge. There was some discussion this morning as to who was in charge of the bill. I am not in charge.

The pro forma amendment was withdrawn.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

. The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. Taber].

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. TABER: On page 72, beginning in line 7, strike out the paragraph ending in line 25 on page 72.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York is recognized for 5 minutes in support of his amendment.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, this is the paragraph under which authority is given for disseminating information and propaganda by the Secretary of Agriculture. It authorizes him to transfer funds for that purpose from other appropriations, at his discretion. It is the whole set-up under which the planners in the Department of Agriculture have arrived at the conclusion that they do not know any remedy for the agricultural situation. Is it not about time that we got rid of that set-up and tried to move forward in this country, instead of having a group of people who acknowledge that they do not have any forward-looking program whatever, and stop wasting the money of the American people on that kind of set-up?

I think that the House should vote for this amendment and throw it out. It is not in the interest of the farmers; it is not in the interest of the consumers; it is not in the interest of the American taxpayers that we should go on spending money for propaganda for working up plans which they themselves acknowledge are not a solution and cannot be a solution for the agricultural problem.

Mr. MUNDT. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 5 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MUNDT. Mr. Chairman and my colleagues, on page 72, starting with line 7 of this bill, we find enumerated among the services to be provided by this appropriation, the following:

For acquiring and diffusing useful information among the people of the United States, and for aiding in formulating programs for authorized activities of the Department of Agriculture.

Now, I am not objecting to that designation of service, and I am not rising in opposition to the amount of money herein appropriated for that service, but I am objecting to the complete neglect and indifference which is paid to the findings of all factual studies of farm economics.

The statisticians and economists who are holding career positions with the Department of Agriculture, under the Civil Service, are doing some splendid work and provide all America with data and evidence which our good sense should impel us to use when enacting legislation and voting appropriations for agriculture.

CONGRESS HAS GOOD INTENTIONS

But, unfortunately for all concerned, in the haste and heat of congressional action, we fail to face the facts, find the evidence, and then frame a sensible and consistent agricultural program. Perhaps this bill is as good an example of what I mean as has ever been produced in Congress—no one who observes this Congress bravely, or perhaps blindly, approach the hour when we are going to vote more than a billion dollars in the name of agriculture can doubt the good intentions of this Congress in wanting to really do something to be helpful to the men and women who feed and clothe America.

But, by the same token, anyone who takes the time and gives the thought to analyze the agricultural situation today must realize as well that this Congress in this hour also gives a perfect example of the wisdom of the old sage who admonished us that "hell is paved with good intentions." My colleagues, it takes more than good intentions and billion-dollar appropriations to effectively help the farmer of America today; it takes a sane and sound agricultural program based on consistent policies and economic principles to be of permanent benefit to the farming industry.

The Department of Agriculture figures, for example, reveal the total amount of agricultural income for 1938 was roughly $7,500,000,000 and we are today appropriating a billion, one hundred and fifty-five million plus for this same industry. In other words, it should be self-evident to all that any agricultural program which necessitates a Government appropriation of one-seventh of its total income, including the benefits of the appropriation itself, is certainly long on good intentions, but is driving us rapidly to a hades of bankruptcy because it is exceedingly and exhaustingly short on good principles of farm economics.

FARMER STILL IS "AMERICA'S FORGOTTEN ENTITY NUMBER ONE"

Mr. Chairman and fellow members, in spite of the good intentions of Congress the great inconsistencies of the agricultural program offered by the New Deal have had some discouraging results. You have listened to a long parade of them here in this assembly the past 3 days: men and women from both sides of the aisle have come down here in the Well of the House and professed their affection for the farmer and their remorse at his present predicament. They have condemned the reciprocal-trade treaties which have done so much to cripple the farmer and have decried the ruinous prices the farmer is receiving. It has been a great confessional that after 150 years of congressional consideration the farmer is still "America's forgotten entity No. 1." I only hope that my colleagues on the New Deal side of the aisle will be as free to help repeal the reciprocal-trade treaties as they have been free to condemn them and that they will join with those of us who believe that the time has come to cease treating the farmer as though he were a guinea pig in an economic laboratory and start giving him the same Government guarantees of cost of production as are now given to labor and industry.

RECIPROCAL TRADE PACTS CRIPPLE THE FARMER

The reciprocal-trade treaties of the Roosevelt administration have done more to cripple and injure the farmer than could be offset by billion-dollar subsidy appropriations every 6 months from now until either the crack of doom or the balancing of the Budget ends our journey to the next millennium of economic prosperity. Let me here ask your indulgence while I quote some very short but some very significant statistics from the Department of Agriculture's fact-finding service which I have previously praised in this talk.

But happily, fellow Members of Congress, there is an answer to all this and that answer is the cost-of-production bill, which was introduced in this Congress on January 12 of this session by eight Members of this body, including myself, and since which time numerous other Members have introduced identical bills.

COST OF PRODUCTION IS LOGICAL ANSWER

The cost-of-production principle applied to agriculture is as logical as its goal is laudable. It merely seeks to project to agriculture the same current principles of economics which are now applied to many other industries and economic institutions. The Government today establishes minimum wages and maximum hours for labor; it regulates the rates of interstate railroads; it establishes fair-price standards for business and industry; and it regulates minimum prices for the products of coal mines, based on the cost of production. All of these economic policies pyramid upon the farmer, who is America's greatest consumer, and the prices of what he purchases are raised accordingly, and all of these Government economic activities follow a single theory which proclaims that the Government is responsible for the establishment of honest price extremes which will protect citizens from unfair losses, dishonest practices, and uneconomic extremes of price heights or depths.

SAUCE FOR THE GOOSE IS SAUCE FOR THE GANDER

If this theory of Government economic activity is right for the laboring man and the industrialist, it is right for the farmer, and so long as it prevails in these fields of enterprise it must prevail with equal effect for agriculture. In other words, what is sauce for the goose must always be sauce for the gander! The cost-of-production bill establishes basic, minimum average cost-of-production prices on some 50 agricultural products; it does not fix prices, please remember, nor guarantee profits, but it does stop competing farm imports from entering this country, and it does guarantee the farmer the basic cost of production for that portion of his crop which is consumed in America. It is fair; it is honest; it is in harmony with present-day governmental economic behavior in other institutions and industries, and it is imperative if we are to restore the buying power to the American farmer which must come as the first step in any permanent program of national recovery and economic stability.

Moreover, the cost-of-production bill will eliminate the necessity of 75 percent of the appropriations in a bill like this, and it will approximately double the income of every farmer in America. In doing this, it will give the country the necessary buying power for the products of new wealth and provide the business stimulus which we are all awaiting as the prerequisite to a balanced Budget and a restored national

COST OF PRODUCTION IS NO RADICAL DEPARTURE

The cost-of-production bill represents no radical departure from the economic formulas which America is practicing today; it sets up no new authorities and establishes no new boards or bureaus. It merely provides the method of determining the average cost of production on certain basic farm products and establishes the law by which no farmer shall again be compelled to sell for domestic consumption the results of his toil and his time for less than the cost of production.

Nor does this bill repeal those portions of the present agricultural program which have proved helpful and sound. Specifically, for example, it continues the Soil Conservation Service but it makes soil and water conservation and the development of farm fertility attractive as a step in profitable farm management rather than the present program of offering it as an inducement primarily to cushion the blow of approaching and inevitable agricultural bankruptcy.

Fellow Members, I urge you to make a careful study of our cost-of-production farm program. I am confident that serious consideration of this bill will lead you to conclude with me that it gives the farmer no more than that to which he is entitled, and none of us should be content to provide less than that. In the meantime I shall vote, and I urge you to vote, to give the farmer the parity payments provided in this bill. While I prefer the cost-of-production farm program to the present plan, I shall not vote in any way to cripple the program under which we are now operating, and I favor these parity payments in order that our farmers can get every possible benefit the present plan affords against today's ruinous farm prices. I urge you to do likewise, but let us follow this vote by legislation repealing the reciprocal trade pacts and giving the farmer an honest and direct farm program with which he can receive cost of production.

Yesterday, I heard some of you from industrial districts ask us how you were going to justify yourselves before your constituents for voting for a billion-dollar agricultural appropriation bill. Friends, I am going to tell you how to make that justification. Up here on the Speaker's rostrum is a petition to place the cost-of-production bill on the calendar of Congress for action. The best justification any of you can make for supporting this appropriation bill is this day-at the very time you vote for these funds—to sign that petition which will bring out a bill which when passed will provide a program making it eternally unnecessary to pay any further agricultural subsidies of the size and nature of the one now confronting us. Let me say in conclusion, that I am practicing what I preach. I shall vote for this appropriation bill with an easy conscience because on Monday last, I signed the petition to bring before Congress the bill which from the time of its passage will give cost of production to the American farmer and make unnecessary any more billion-dollar bonuses by opening the doors of prosperous opportunity to every farmer, worker, and businessman in America. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from South

Dakota has expired; all time has expired.

The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The amendment was rejected. The Clerk read as follows:

Tobacco Inspection Act: To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to carry into effect the provisions of an act entitled "An act to establish and promote the use of standards of classification for tobacco, to provide and maintain an official tobacco-inspection service, and for other purposes," approved August 23, 1935 (7 U. S. C. 511-511q), $375,000.

Mr. FLANNAGAN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment. The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Flannagan: Page 75, line 22, strike out "$375,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$525,000."

Mr. FLANNAGAN. Mr. Chairman, in 1935 what is known as the Tobacco Inspection Act was passed by the Congress. This act provides for the grading of tobacco upon warehouse floors in the event two-thirds of the growers selling upon that particular floor vote in favor of it. This service has been set up and it has proven to be a great blessing to the tobacco growers. Last year we carried an appropriation of $375,000 to pay for this service.

To those Members who are not familiar with the grading of tobacco let me say that it is a highly technical profession. Heretofore the seller, or the grower, was at the mercy of the purchasers of the large tobacco companies who were represented upon that floor by experts in tobacco. This grading service under the Inspection Act is extended to the growers of tobacco. Last year under the act 275,000,000 pounds of tobacco was actually graded by Government graders. There has been a great demand for the extension of this service and we are asking that the appropriation be increased by $150,000. This will enable the Government to grade about twice as much tobacco as was graded last year. We have the sufficient number of trained graders and I hope it will be the pleasure of the chairman of this committee to accept this amendment.

I call the attention of the Committee to the fact that tobacco is the only farm product that is taxed. The tobacco growers have been paying in Federal revenue year in and year out over $500,000,000. Last year the Federal Government collected from the tobacco growers $568,000,000. We are asking that you give us only one-tenth of 1 percent of what we annually pay into the Treasury of the United States in order to protect the man who produces the tobacco.

Mr. HAWKS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. FLANNAGAN. I yield.

Mr. HAWKS. In my district in Wisconsin we grow considerable tobacco. I wonder if the gentleman is familiar with what is going on in this area and in many other tobacco areas at the present time? We have a buyers' strike up there. Four or five of the larger companies are holding off trying to hammer down the price of our leaf tobacco. Does not that come under this bill?

Mr. FLANNAGAN. The Tobacco Grading Act provides that when two-thirds of the growers selling upon any tobacco market vote in favor of Government inspection, the Government will send trained tobacco specialists to that floor and grade the tobacco before it is offered for sale in order that the tobacco grower may know the grade of tobacco he is offering for sale.

I hope it will be the pleasure of the Committee to accept this amendment.

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FLANNAGAN. I yield.

Mr. COOLEY. Has the gentleman made any investigation with the purpose of ascertaining whether or not the Department of Agriculture has now available expert graders to carry out the work contemplated by this section?

Mr. FLANNAGAN. I am informed by the Department of Agriculture that in the event the appropriation is increased by $150,000, next year they can grade twice as much as they graded this year, and that they have trained graders ready for the work.

Mr. COOLEY. I would like to ask one other question. Does the gentleman believe the work so far done has been beneficial to the producers of tobacco in the different markets where the grading is done by Government experts?

Mr. FLANNAGAN. I do not think anyone will question the benefits that have resulted to the grower. In fact, there is a great demand on the Department for graders on the floors that the Department is unable to furnish.

Mr. COOLEY. I am very much in favor of the gentleman's amendment.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 15 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia IMr.

Mr. Chairman, I am of the opinion that the $375,000 provided in the pending bill is more than enough, especially for an industry which, I understand, is perhaps the most prosperous in the United States. I know the real beneficiaries, the great cigarette and cigar manufacturers and others, are unable to spend all of their profits in the United States, and even our American men are not good enough for some of the ladies born of these multimillionaire owners of the Tobacco Trust. Now, it is sought here to increase the appropriation and make it possible for the Tobacco Trust to make more millions each year out of the grading of tobacco grown by hard-working farmers.

Mr. Chairman, of course I am for the tobacco growers, but unfortunately they do not derive any benefit out of this. This grading is done for and largely in the interest of the buyers and agents of the Tobacco Trust. I know the gentleman who has introduced this amendment is a sincere and wellmeaning Member of Congress who is desirous of helping his people obtain fair prices for their product. However, some of the gentlemen from his part of the country who legislate in the other body have been constantly criticizing every appropriation, and they go out and find fault with the large expenditures and demand economy every time we try to help the needy and those without work. I am afraid my colleague from Virginia will get in wrong with the gentlemen on the other side of the Capitol. In view of the fact I have love and affection for my fellow Members of the House, I feel they should not be placed in a position to be criticized by the Members of the other body for helping to make appropriations larger than what has been recommended and agreed to in committee. So in the interest of the tobacco growers, in the interest of my colleagues, and in the interest of economy, I believe the amendment should be defeated, and we should follow the rules of keeping expenses down, which his other colleagues demand every time they speak.

We are going too far in our appropriations and spending millions for agriculture, and many of our friends do not appreciate the efforts in their behalf. So let us keep within the Budget and Department recommendations here today.

Mr. VINCENT of Kentucky. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. SABATH. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. VINCENT of Kentucky. I am sure the gentleman does not want to make a statement that is in error. The benefits derived from this are for the tobacco grower and not for the Tobacco Trust. It is to keep them from stealing our tobacco in Virginia, Kentucky, Tennessee, and other places.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, 3 years ago I helped appropriate money to provide for the grading of tobacco and later on I heard that the men who had been appointed to do the grading were men recommended by the Tobacco Trust. The commission men were the ones who benefited by the grading, consequently the growers did not get any benefits. If they had, some more of the millions spent by the consumers would have reached the tobacco farmers.

Mr. VINCENT of Kentucky. Let me ask the gentleman another question.

Mr. SABATH. I want to bring out one further thought. Mr. VINCENT of Kentucky. I want to correct a statement made by the gentleman.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, there is no one in the House I would sooner yield to than the gentleman from Kentucky. I know he is honestly and sincerely always trying to help his district and people and better their conditions. If he could select and recommend these tobacco graders, the farmers' interests would be protected. But before I conclude I want to say one thing more. I read with disgust that the daughters of these millionaire tobacco barons, with the millions that their fathers have accumulated from tobacco, have spent their time and fortunes abroad buying titles for themselves, getting titles of counts and no-counts. I cannot help but look with displeasure on that when I see wonderfully capable single men right here in the House who are a thousand times better than the greatest counts abroad. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I will take just a minute. Mr. Kitchen, of the Agricultural Marketing Service, comesbefore the subcommittee with his justification and says that, for tobacco inspection, he needs $375,000, and he gives some idea of the work that has been carried on.

They have approximately 94 employees doing this work at the present time. They are grading and classifying to-bacco on 31 or 34 markets. So he comes in with language that is approved by the Budget. The Budget says it is O. K. to give him the $375,000. The committee gives him the $375,000, and that is the story.

Now comes the gentleman from Virginia and says, "Will, you not please add $150,000 to this item?" But he has not stated a single persuasive reason why the $150,000 should be added. Now, that is the story.

Mr. HAWKS. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin. Mr. HAWKS. Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to this $150,000 appropriation, not because I am opposed to the grading of tobacco but because we are not getting down to the real trouble in the tobocco industry, as I see it in my own State. The trouble with the situation today is that the poor little grower in Wisconsin cannot sell his tobacco. The great big tobacco-buying outfits will not buy it. We have a 10-cent or 12-cent price, and we are sitting there with some very fine tobacco; but these great big trusts, who have their thumbs on the whole business, will not buy it. They are trying to drive the grower down. Why do you not provide: $150,000 for an investigation of the Tobacco Trust?

Mr. FLANNAGAN. I am in favor of that. Is it not a fact that under the grading law the small tobacco grower has an opportunity of knowing what he has to offer for sale?

Mr. HAWKS. There is no question about that.

Mr. FLANNAGAN. It is a protection to the tobacco grower. Mr. HAWKS. There is no question about that.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, has the gentleman from Illinois consumed his 5 minutes?

Mr. DIRKSEN. No: I yielded to the gentleman from Wisconsin. This is still part of my 5 minutes.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that cannot be done. The gentleman from Illinois relinguished the floor.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin and I will stay on my feet.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair may state the gentleman from Illinois has not yielded the floor, and the gentleman from Illinois has yielded to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, time cannot be yielded under the 5-minute rule.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I yielded for a question and quite inadvertently I took my seat.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands that the gentleman from Illinois has yielded to the gentleman from Wisconsin, the gentleman from Illinois retaining the floor.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I am yielding to the brilliant young gentleman from Wisconsin for an observation and for some questions.

Mr. HAWKS. What is the use of having grading, what is the use of improving the quality of your product, what is the use of appropriating money for these purposes when you do not have any control and the grower has no control over the price he gets for his products?

Mr. VINCENT of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky. Mr. VINCENT of Kentucky. The gentleman understands this will not be effective until two-thirds of the growers vote for it on that particular market.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I have 5 minutes remaining. I ask unanimous consent that I may be permitted to allot 2 minutes of that time to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. Cooley].

Mr. RICH. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Chairman, I think he ought to give him 21/2 minutes, at least.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Chairman, it is perfectly obvious to those who understand the Tobacco Grading Act, that the gentleman from Chicago does not understand the act at all. The very purpose of the act was to aid the tobacco farmer and to furnish him with expert information regarding the grades of his tobacco. The legislation was supported by every man in Congress from a tobacco growing State. The bill was introduced by Mr. Flannagan, of Virginia, and was actively supported by Mr. Fred Vinson, a former Member of this House from Kentucky, by Mr. Chapman, of Kentucky, and, for that matter, by every other Member of Congress interested in the tobacco farmer.

Mr. SABATH. And I voted for it.
Mr. COOLEY. Now the gentleman spends a lot of time talking about the great tobacco trust and the millionaires in the tobacco business. There are no millionaires that I know of who are tobacco farmers and this Inspection Act is for the benefit of the tobacco farmer and not for the tobacco trust. I want to say to the gentleman from Illinois and to the members of the Committee that the tobacco farmers of this Nation have received less direct relief in the way of payments in money than any other class of farmers in the entire country. The tobacco programs enacted by Congress under this Democratic administration have been very beneficial. The fact is the tobacco programs have been more successful than any other and have cost the Government less money than any of the other programs.

The funds provided in this section are for the purpose of employing expert graders to go upon the markets and grade the tobacco ahead of the graders and buyers employed by the tobacco companies. Government graders give farmers who are not familiar with the different grades valuable information with regard to the quality and value of the tobacco which is being sold. Many farmers are entirely ignorant as to grades and quality and value of their tobacco and unless someone is there to assist them they are entirely at the mercy of the tobacco buyers. As pointed out by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. Flannagan], Government grading should be expanded and if the service is to be extended the Department will need additional funds. Of course, if the Department does not intend to extend the service it may be that they can get along with the funds carried in this bill. If two-thirds of the farmers selling on any market want the service it certainly should be made available to them. Again I want to remind you of the fact that the tobacco tax collected by this Government brings in more money than is carried in this bill for the entire soil-conservation program for all American agri-

Mr. PATRICK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. COOLEY. Briefly.

Mr. PATRICK. Does the gentleman know of any tobacco farmers' daughters who have gone abroad?

Mr. COOLEY. I do not.

Mr. Chairman, I hope that the amendment will be adopted. Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to yield one of my remaining 3 minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. VINCENT].

Mr. RICH. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Chairman, he ought to give the gentleman a minute and a half.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

Mr. VINCENT of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I want to clear up the statement the gentleman from Chicago made, "that this amendment would benefit only the Tobacco Trust." We are making an effort to free our people from the Tobacco Trust. Tobacco grading will protect them from the trusts and stop them from taking our tobacco for a song. You ought to see how they sell our tobacco. A crop that will take 12 months for a man and his family to grow, they will sell and buy-for they do both-in 5 seconds. heard it said that an article sometimes is sold for a song, well they take our tobacco with a song and this is the way they do it: "B-r-r-r aye aye aye, B-r-r-r-r-r aye aye aye aye, B-r-r-r-r-r. Stolen by the American." [Laughter and applause.] This is uttered in unintelligible language, in muttering and chanting. When interpreted means, skin this farmer, and I'll skin the next one." They select the auctioneer and they restrict the buyers and the buyers have to have a license to bid. We complained to the Department of Justice that there was no semblance of a sale. The farmers had no rights and they could not even bid on their own tobacco. That the antitrust laws were being violated. They sent two "goslins" down to investigate, and after several days of listening to the chanting and mutterings of these pretended sales they reported a good time in Kentucky and that the sales were clean and fair. And all the time they knew, if they had a wink of sense, that the farmers were being robbed and that they could not pay their taxes, or interest, or have enough money to buy shelter and food for their families, when these tobacco companies were shipping the tobacco, they took with a song, to foreign markets and filling their pockets with money they did not earn. If Hitler had these auctioneers and buyers on his staff he could take the world in 30 days without half trying. Now, give us this extra money to protect our people from the greatest dictators this country has ever seen.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, the committee has made every effort to cooperate with our friends in this matter. In this case we went as far as we could and gave them the full amount allowed by the Budget.

I regret that some one has suggested that the industry has not received fair treatment. You know the Federal Treasury paid out to tobacco growers and to the tobacco industry and the tobacco administration last year in excess of $11,000,000. It should also be noted that the tobacco industry is the most prosperous of the agricultural industries and has a higher index number in price and income than any other agricultural group. We have endeavored to be more than fair in the formation of this section of the bill. Last year we increased this item $100,000 over the previous year.

Mr. VINCENT of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I only have half a minute.

Mr. VINCENT of Kentucky. I just want to ask one question. Did we not pay in Federal taxes $600,000,000 last year?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Tobacco is one of the most heavily taxed of all commodities and pays into the Federal Treasury one of the largest revenues received by the Government. But it must be remembered that these huge sums are merely transmitted through the industry and in reality are paid by the smokers of every State in this Union [applause], and, Mr. Chairman, in view of the fact we have reported the full amount requested by the Department, the full amount as justified by the representatives who came before us, an increase of $100,000 over 1938, we ask that the House sustain the committee.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. McCormack). The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. FLANNAGAN].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. Flannagan) there were—ayes 40, noes 85.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Market news service: For collecting, publishing, and distributing, by telegraph, mail, or otherwise, timely information on the market supply and demand, commercial movement, location, disposition, quality, condition, and market prices of livestock, meats, fish, and quality, condition, and market prices of livestock, meats, fish, and animal products, dairy and poultry products, fruits and vegetables, peanuts and their products, grain, hay, feeds, cottonseed and seeds, and other agricultural products, independently and in cooperation with other branches of the Government, State agencies, purchasing and consuming organizations, and persons engaged in the production, transportation, marketing, and distribution of farm and food products, $1,119,802.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment. The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Hendricks: On page 76, line 15, strike out "$1,119,802" and insert "$1,122,302."

Mr. HENDRICKS. Mr. Chairman, I believe this is the first time I have ever offered an amendment to increase the amount of an appropriation recommended by the Appropriations Committee, and I hope that I will not have to do that very often, but I sincerely believe when I explain why I have done this, the Members of the House will agree with me that this amendment should be adopted. You will note I have not increased this appropriation more than $2,500. I knew that in view of some of the other amendments that have been offered, I would be considered a "piker" for doing this, but this amount is sufficient, and I want to explain the purpose of it. It is to provide a marketing specialist for the full celery season at Sanford, Fla.; for the tomato season in Tennessee: and for the peach season in Illinois.

There has been a need for this service for some time, and the Department of Agriculture has recommended it. The people at Sanford have been so anxious for this service that they offered to pay for the service themselves, but the Department of Agriculture had to refuse it, because this was only for 8 weeks and they could not keep a trained man there for 8 weeks, but they did say they would ask for this service, and they did, and I want to read a portion of a letter that the Department sent to me and which you will find in the record of the hearings. The letter states:

The Florida people desire the service now furnished at Sanford continued for the additional period of April 20 to approximately June 20. It is not possible for us to do this with our present personnel because the man in charge of our office at Sanford must leave there about April 20 to open an office at Mobile, Ala., scheduled for that time. The office at Sanford is a temporary one and is similar to about 40 other offices operated during the shipping season in important fruit—and vegetable-producing areas. It is not possible to employ a qualified man to handle the work at Sanford for a period of about 8 weeks. Therefore, to provide the additional service desired at Sanford really requires the appointment of a junior marketing specialist at a salary of $2,000 per year. Additional operating expenses would require an additional $500, or a total of $2,500.

When the man appointed was not needed for the additional work desired at Sanford, he could be sent to Tennessee and later to Illinois, conducting temporary offices during the tomato—and peach—marketing seasons, respectively, in those States.

You will observe that the people at Sanford themselves have offered to pay for this service, but cannot get it. I do not believe anyone can contend that this amendment is improper. I called on the chairman of the subcommittee sometime ago and asked him if he would grant us this amount. He asked me at that time if the Department had approved it and if the Bureau of the Budget had recommended it, and I said no. He said, "Well, I cannot permit you to amend the bill, but whenever the Bureau of the Budget does approve it, then, maybe, we will be able to do something about it," indicating if we got the approval of the Bureau of the Budget we might get this amendment in the bill. Now, the Bureau of the Budget has approved this amount and the amount is $2,500. This does not mean any increase above what the Bureau of the Budget recommended. This $2,500 was carried in an item of $31,000 which the Bureau recommended, which item has now been cut by the committee to $7,500, and if my amendment is adopted, the item will still be only $10,000.

I believe we actually need this service. I think, as a matter of course or as a matter of policy, the chairman of the committee will probably have to oppose this, but I believe, deep down in his heart, if you Members join me in carrying this amendment, the chairman of the subcommittee will not be greatly displeased. [Applause.]

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 5 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment. Many years ago, before many of you came here, I helped to create the market news service in the belief that it would be of great benefit to growers and farmers but, unfortunately, it has not turned out to be of any service to them. Instead, it serves those who manipulate the market prices of the products of the farmer. The provision provides-

For collecting, publishing, and distributing, by telegraph, mail, or otherwise, timely information on the market supply and demand, etc.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SABATH. Yes.

Mr. HENDRICKS. The gentleman is absolutely mistaken as to the purpose of this money. This marketing specialist would provide information at Sanford and other places.

Mr. SABATH. But I am not speaking about the specialist. I am speaking about the appropriation of $1,119,000 for the market news service-information that we thought would help the farmer.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a point of order. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HOFFMAN. The gentleman from Illinois is not talking to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Florida. The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order.

The gentleman is talking to the paragraph.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, I am sincere in this, as I helped to create this Bureau because of my personal interest, and because I realized that the farmer was at a disadvantage in not knowing prices. Unfortunately, this service has been utilized primarily by speculators, brokers, produce gamblers, and others to the disadvantage of the farmers.

The gamblers use this information against the farmer and in that way it is today a detriment instead of a benefit, and the appropriation for this service should be reduced. In fact, I believe that if a real investigation were made, the findings would result in our striking out at least one-half of this appropriation. I hope that what I have said today will be of some help in the future, so that this information, if it is of any value, shall be given to the farmers of the country instead of to the commission men and the gamblers in products of the farm.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Florida.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Perishable Agricultural Commodities and Produce Agency Acts: To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to carry into effect the provisions of the act entitled "An act to suppress unfair and fraudulent practices in the marketing of perishable agricultural commodities in interstate and foreign commerce," as amended (7 U. S. C. 499a-499r), and the act entitled "An act to prevent the destruction or dumping, without good and sufficient cause therefor, of farm produce received in interstate commerce by commission merchants and others and to require them truly and correctly to account for all farm produce received by them," approved March 3, 1927 (7 U. S. C. 491-497), $149,628.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

Amendment offered by Mr. Hull: Page 77, after line 2, insert a new paragraph, as follows:

"Surplus commodities: Section 32 of an act entitled 'An act to amend the Agricultural Adjustment Act, and for other purposes' approved August 24, 1935 (Public Law No. 320, 74th Cong.), as amended, is amended by striking out '30 percent' and inserting in lieu thereof '60 percent."

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order on the amendment.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I realize that possibly a point of order will be made on this amendment, but when we stop to consider the whole situation with reference to this bill, exceeding a billion dollars in appropriations, recognizing the fact that possibly in its present form it will vastly expand the expenditures for agriculture, at the same time something else is happening to dairy farmers who will receive practically nothing under this bill. They are having taken away from them funds which the Seventy-fourth Congress provided in order to stabilize marketing conditions. As has been said on the floor, there is practically nothing in the bill for the dairymen, especially those of Wisconsin, Minnesota, Michigan, and other States in the Middle West. The only benefits they will receive from the bill is a little amount for soil conservation which will not exceed an average of $50 per farm in my State and other sections in that country.

In 1934 Congress passed an act setting aside for the purpose of assisting agricultural-marketing conditions, 30 percent of the customs receipts. Under that law practically all of the expenditures have been made for the purchase of dairy products, fruits, vegetables, and other products for distribution under relief. The amount which the dairymen have received under this law and under this attempt of the department to stabilize market prices, has been relatively small.

Last year the receipts under that 30-percent provision amounted to approximately $150,000,000, and of that amount about $33,000,000 was expended to stabilize the price of dairy products. In the past 6 years the total amounts of such aids to dairymen, through this and other provisions, have amounted to approximately $67,000,000. That is about $1,600,000 less than the adjustment funds which have been granted to the cotton crop alone last year. Comparatively, the figures indicate how little dairying has received in the past, and what a small portion of agricultural-aid funds has been received by the dairy farmer. The Government now holds 11,000,000 bales of cotton, upon which it has loaned in excess of $500,000,000. It now has $70,000,000 loaned on corn, and $48,000,000 on wheat in this year's operations.

In the past 6 years the purchases of surplus dairy products by the Surplus Commodities Corporation have been as follows: 1934, $10,958,000; 1935, $9,718,000; 1936, $4,001,134; 1937, $4,009,004; 1938, $5,876,592; 1939, $33,080,000; or a total of $67,642,730.

The customs receipts, which were in excess of $400,000,000 in 1937, will approximate $307,000,000 for 1938. Consequently, the funds available for marketing purposes will be about $92,100,000. Under the law, only 25 percent of such receipts can be used for dairy purchases. Instead of $33,000,000 for stabilizing dairy prices, there will be about $22,000,000 available, which amount will be further reduced by the holdover of the Dairy Marketing Corporation.

In the last few weeks the Department has stopped going into the market to make purchases to stabilize dairy prices. The consequence is the price of butter, cheese, and whole milk, all dairy products, has been rapidly going down. Milk is down to as low as 1¾ cents per quart in Wisconsin, or about 85 cents per 100 pounds. That decline will continue if the Government stays out of the market for lack of funds.

At present the Dairy Marketing Corporating is holding approximately 70,000,000 pounds of butter, obtained on a loan out of this $33,000,000. That 70,000,000 pounds is going to be gradually decreased by the distribution of some of the product to the relief agencies; but by the 1st of July there will still be 50,000,000 pounds of butter in the storage houses under the Dairy Marketing Corporation. Fifty million pounds of butter; and the Commodity Credit Corporation will probably undoubtedly ask for the payment of the loan. Unless we can obtain additional funds that entire 50,000,000 pounds of butter will be forced on to the market, or else distributed for relief, to be paid for from the $22,500,000 available from customs receipts.

The enormity of the loss of the dairy farmers which has occurred already, since the Government pulled out of the principal markets and turned to the Dairy Products Corporation for relief purposes, has been approximately 20 percent on our prices. An expert in the Department of Agriculture this morning advised me that undoubtedly unless the market is further supported, butterfat will go down to 15 or 16 or 17 cents a pound.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 2 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HULL. In brief, what does this mean to the dairy farmers of the principal butter and cheese-producing States? If butterfat should go down to even 18 cents a pound you will have approximately a 33½-percent reduction in the income of about 450,000 or 500,000 farmers out there in a few States of the Northwest. That will result in the loss of not $50,000,000 but from $100,000,000 or $125,000,000 in the price the farmers will receive for their cream in that section of the country. That decline in farm purchasing power will not only be devastating to the dairy districts but the effect will be felt nationally as well as locally.

Unless this amendment is adopted and at least 60 percent of the customs receipts shall be made available for purchases of dairy products, or some other plan is adopted of deriving a larger amount of these customs receipts, which will amount to only $307,000,000 total this year, then all that the Department of Agriculture can do is to take over the butter already in the hands of the Dairy Marketing Corporation and turn it over to the relief forces and let the market take the natural course. It will have less than $10,000,000 with which to assist in maintaining even relatively low prices on a product valued at one and one-half billions of dollars.

I realize that possibly a point of order may be made upon this legislation upon an appropriation bill, but it does seem to me that the importance of this matter to 2,000,000 dairy farmers should be sufficient to prompt those who may desire to make the point of order to withhold their objection and permit the dairy farmers, poultry raisers, fruit and vegetable growers to have this additional portion of the customs duties devoted to saving their markets to some degree. Otherwise, while more than a billion dollars will go to those who grow cotton, corn, wheat, tobacco, and rice, the funds for dairymen and other farmers will be reduced by 40 percent or more. Unless a point of order is made, I am confident the House will adopt this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has again expired.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a ruling on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state the point of order.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. The point of order is that the amendment proposes legislation on an appropriation bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Wisconsin desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. No, Mr. Chairman. I want to be heard on the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Obviously it is legislation on an appropriation bill. The point of order is sustained.

The Clerk read as follows:

Total, salaries and expenses, Bureau of Home Economics, $325, 085, of which amount not to exceed $273,350 may be expended for personal services in the District of Columbia.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to return to page 54, for the purpose of restoring the two items that were stricken from the bill yesterday, namely, in line 1, the Mexican fruitfly control, and in line 5 the citruscanker eradication.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman also incorporate in his unanimous consent request the request to return also for the consideration of the Dutch elm appropriation?

Mr. DIRKSEN. There actually has been some substantial controversy on that item, but there has been no controversy on the two items I mentioned, except for the point of order made on the ground that there was no authorization for it.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, of course I would never take a position of a recriminatory nature and under no consideration would I object because of failure to return to something that a number in this House are vitally interested in.

I think the appropriation should be made. I will not object to it, but I hope the gentleman will also incorporate in his unanimous-consent request or if this is granted, he will immediately thereafter submit a unanimous-consent request, separate from these two items, so that these items will not become involved in the other one, to return for the consideration of the Dutch elm appropriation.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I amend my request to include the item in line 5 on page 56, dealing with the gypsy and brown-tail moth control and the item in line 20 on page 56, for Dutch elm disease eradication.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois, as modified?

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, and I have no objection to the request, I would like to ask if the gentleman will also include the sweetpotato weevil control item, so as to substitute the language of the bill for the language of my amendment.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I think the language of the bill is infinitely more acceptable than the language offered by the gentleman from Georgia, and I shall be pleased to include sweetpotato weevil control, line 15, page 54.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, in order to expedite consideration of the bill, inasmuch as it is getting late, and we must make progress if we expect to complete the bill tonight, I will object at this time.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is heard.

The Clerk read as follows:

Enforcement of the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act: For enabling the Secretary of Agriculture to carry into effect the provisions of the act of June 25, 1938 (21 U. S. C. 301–392), entitled "An act to prohibit the movement in interstate commerce of adulterated and misbranded food, drugs, devices, and cosmetics, and for other purposes"; to cooperate with associations and scientific societies in purposes": to cooperate with associations and scientific societies in the revision of the United States Pharmacopoeia and development of methods of analysis, and for investigating the character of the chemical and physical tests which are applied to American food products in foreign countries, and for inspecting the same before shipment when desired by the shippers or owners of these products intended for countries where chemical and physical tests are required before the said products are allowed to be sold therein, $2,288,380: Provided, That not more than $4,280 shall be used for travel outside the United States.

Mr. HOOK. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last

Mr. Chairman, I intend to take only a couple of minutes to say a few words with regard to the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetics Act. Large shipments of foreign cheese have come into this country from South America, cheese which has contained extraneous matter and cheese that contains injurious bacteria, cheese that cannot possibly qualify under the stringent regulations governing domestic cheese manufacturers and under which they must operate in order to ship their product in interstate commerce.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOOK. I yield.

Mr. REED of New York. Is it not true that nothing is written into the trade agreements to protect our people?

Mr. HOOK. The law as it now stands would if actually enforced protect our people, but it has not been enforced through proper inspection of imported products at the port of entry.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. HOOK. I yield.

Mr. REED of New York. But the trade agreements themselves take the place of treaties, and become the supreme law of the land.

Mr. HOOK. I understand, but treaty agreements do not provide for the bringing in of cheese containing extraneous matter and containing injurious bacteria. This cheese is brought in to compete with domestic cheese and I hope those responsible for the enforcement of the Federal Food and Drugs Act see that these importations of cheese are inspected at the port of entry. If they are inspected we will keep out at least 5,000,000 pounds of cheese annually that competes with our local cheese industry.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOOK. I yield.

Mr. MAPES. For information, may I ask the gentleman from Michigan whether the customs officials or the food and drug officials are responsible for inspection of foodstuffs at the port of entry?

Mr. HOOK. The Food and Drug Administration is responsible for inspection at the port of entry.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. HOOK. I yield.

Mr. RICH. Does not the gentleman believe that it would be a good thing to have a tariff on imported cheese?

Mr. HOOK. I do not. I believe the reciprocal-trade agreement has the tariff beat a thousand ways. If we had not had the tariff the farmer would not be in the predicament he is in today.

The Clerk read as follows:

Total salaries and expenses, Soil Conservation Service, $23,645.584, of which not to exceed $1,734,636 may be expended for personal services in the District of Columbia, and not to exceed $100,000 shall be available for the purchase of motor-propelled and horse-drawn passenger-carrying vehicles necessary in the conduct of field work outside the District of Columbia.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Johnson of Oklahoma: Page 88, line

Amendment offered by Mr. Johnson of Okianoma: Page 88, line 3, strike out the period, insert a colon and the following:

"Provided, That of the funds made available in this paragraph not exceeding $500,000 shall be available for general administrative expenses in the District of Columbia, and not exceeding $1,300,000 of such funds may be expended in the District of Columbia for personal services in connection with research and investigations. cooperative relations and planning, map reproduction, and technical supervisory and inspectional activities."

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I have offered the pending amendment in the interest of both economy and efficiency in the Soil Conservation Service. Many amendments have been offered to this bill this afternoon and yesterday to increase the total amount several millions of dollars. The amendment offered by me does not increase the total amount but merely would limit the overhead in the Washington office to what is considered a reasonable figure. would cut $52,000 from the personnel-service item in the District of Columbia and would reduce the general expenses under the research item from $1,631,000 to $1,300,000. This amendment would make a total saving in overhead of $383,000. Every dollar that this Congress can save in overhead here in Washington could be used in helping the farmers of your districts in receiving assistance in technical and engineering advice in the conservation of their precious soil.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I yield to the distinguished gentleman from New York.

Mr. TABER. The gentleman's amendment does not increase the total amount appropriated but simply requires that more of it be used on the job instead of in the offices in Washington.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. That is the purpose of the amendment, I may say to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. Chairman, as I was saying, whatever we may be able to save in overhead could be added to the amount allocated by the Soil Conservation Service to take over the soil-conservation districts in your State and giving technical information to which the farmers are entitled. No doubt, most of the Members of this House are sincerely anxious to have more of the money appropriated for the Soil Conservation Service expended in the field where it is intended to go. In my own State of Oklahoma the farmers have established, under law written by the Soil Conservation Service, some 27 soil-conservation districts in that State. They did it believing that the Soil Conservation Service was going to take over such districts and operate them. In fact they had such assurances from the representatives of the Soil Conservation Service here in Washington. But now it develops that at least 10 of those districts will not be taken over by the Soil Conservation Service because, they are told, of the lack of sufficient funds with which to operate them. Inference has gone out that Congress has been stingy and unfair with the Soil Conservation Service.

At the same time we see the sorry spectacle of a constantly growing bureau here in Washington. Only a few years ago there was a mere handful in the Washington office, but it has grown until now there are more than 700 people in the Washington office and more than 1,300 socalled experts and others in and under the 11 regional offices. Then they have the State offices and their socalled area offices. In the State of Oklahoma there are three area offices which are costing the taxpayers, so I am advised, more than the 9 or 10 soil-conservation districts that are now in operation in that State. The Soil Conservation Service should be told in no uncertain terms to eliminate its unnecessary overhead, to eliminate at least some of the supervisors who are supervising supervisors and actually to expend a more reasonable amount of the money appropriated for the soil-conservation districts, the so-called demonstration areas, and for the giving of technical and engineering advice to the individual farmers. [Applause.]

Mr. MASSINGALE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. MASSINGALE. Is it not true that if the gentleman's amendment is adopted it will be possible to man all of the 27 districts in Oklahoma and that we cannot do it without?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I would not say that this one amendment would enable them to take over all of the 27 districts, unless they put the entire amount saved in Oklahoma, which, of course, would not be done, but certainly it would help that much.

There are many Members of Congress who state they would like to increase the amount of the appropriation if they knew the money would go out into the districts where it belongs. When we find a constant increase in overhead, with 123 doing research in the Washington office, and Members are told they are unable to spend money out in the field, it seems time for Congress to call a halt on such an agency. This Congress has the right and duty to direct that a more reasonable amount of the appropriations be spent on the demonstration projects and legally constituted soil conservation districts.

Mr. REED of New York. Will the gentleman yield.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. REED of New York. Has it not been the practice of these bureaucrats for many years to take the money and put people on the pay roll here, then tell the people out in the country that the Congress will not appropriate sufficient money?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. We know that. It makes no difference whether it happens to be a Democratic bureau, a Republican bureau, or an independent bureau that is supposed to be nonpolitical. Unfortunately, when the Congress creates a bureau, agency, or board, the general rule is that they immediately begin to build up themselves by bringing pressure on Congress for bigger and better appropriations.

It is not necessary to tell the members of this body that I am tremendously interested in the program of the Soil Conservation Service. You Members know that I have supported it enthusiastically in the past and irrespective of the arrogant high-hatted attitude of some of those in authority in the Washington office toward Members of Congress generally, I shall continue to support appropriations for the Soil Conservation Service. But I insist now and shall continue to insist in the future that the money herein appropriated shall be expended primarily for the farmers and not in order to build up a constantly expanding and arrogant bureau in Washington. | Applause.]

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman. I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 3 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. Johnson]?

There was no objection.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I have referred to this Bureau that I have supported enthusiastically in the past, as being arrogant. But I want to make it plain that this is not a personal matter with me. The policy of the Soil Conservation Service, however, is worse than arrogant. It has thrown the cloak of self-importance about it and assumed a holier-than-thou attitude. It is fast becoming more difficult for a Member of Congress to talk to one of these bureaucrats over the telephone.

Some of you may not be aware of the fact that the Soil Conservation Service has a rule in Washington that before any of the 700 employees in the Washington office is permitted to call a Member of Congress over the telephone or call at his office in the Capitol, he must get permission from his Chief. Then before permission is granted, the employee must advise on what subject he wishes to discuss with the Member of Congress. And if he is fortunate or unfortunate enough to secure permission, the employee must note carefully what he says to the Congressman and what the Congressman says to him, and then he must report back to the Chief everything that transpired while he was in the Congressman's office. That sounds ridiculous and, of course, is absurd. But I have as my authority a letter under the signature of the Chief of the Soil Conservation Service admitting that this is the rule and actually attempting to defend such a tyrannical and almost unbelievable regulation.

Moreover, if any of the 1,300 people under the jurisdiction of the 11 so-called regions of the Soil Conservation office should happen to want to write a Congressman a letter, he must get permission of his chief in order to do so. Word has gone out, so I am advised, to the project managers on the so-called demonstration projects, that under no circumstances are they to write Members of either House of Congress concerning matters in which the Congress may be interested without permission.

The only way a Member of Congress can secure information from the Soil Conservation Service, so I am advised, is through the Chief of the Soil Conservation Service, and I have the evidence that information given out from that source cannot always be relied upon. For example: Under date of January 20 I addressed a letter to the Soil Conservation Service asking for certain information. Sixteen days later and after I wrote a second letter demanding a reply and other definite information, I received a letter from the Soil Conservation Service purporting to answer my questions. Among the several questions I asked was this: "Please advise the exact amount of the appropriation made that actually reaches the field and is spent in field operations." The answer was: "Of the regular appropriation of $23,645,584 to the Soil Conservation Service during the fiscal year of 1939 it is estimated that $21,483,444 will be spent in field operations.

Checking on this statement I find that at least 123 employees are permanently stationed in Washington but paid out of this particular fund. Yet they have the unmitigated gall to advise Congress that this money is being actually expended in the field.

I have evidence that other letters have gone out of Washington calling on the boys in the field, on the pay roll of course, to have their friends write Members of Congress, especially members of the Appropriations Committee, suggesting that this appropriation be increased $4,000,000. So, no doubt, we are due to receive such letters from some of our constituents within the near future.

There is just one way, as I see it, to establish or at least curtail the constantly growing overhead in the Soil Conservation Service and that is to do it by limitation such as the amendment I have offered, and I sincerely trust that Members will take advantage of this opportunity and cast a vote in the interest of efficiency as well as economy. [Applause.]

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 8 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Cannon]?

Mr. VINCENT of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I object.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 8 minutes.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. ANDERSON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I offer a preferential motion.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. ANDERSON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. Anderson of Missouri) there were—ayes 109, noes 84.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I ask for tellers. Tellers were ordered, and the Chair appointed Mr. Cannon of Missouri and Mr. Anderson of Missouri to act as tellers.

The Committee again divided; and the tellers reported there were—ayes 129, noes 104.

So the motion was agreed to.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Will it be in order in the House to have a yea-and-nay vote to discover who wants to quit and lean on their shovels instead of staying on the job and finishing the day's work?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes; if the yeas and nays are demanded in the House. The Committee will rise.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and Mr. RAYBURN, having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. Patman, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 5269, the agricultural appropriation bill, 1940, and had come to no resolution thereon.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. Hinshaw (at the request of Mr. Carter), for 1 day, on account of sickness in his family.

SENATE

The Chaplain, Rev. Z@Barney T. Phillips, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, eternal Father, who declarest Thy glory in the heavens, while the firmament showeth Thy handiwork, who hast made man in Thine own image and endued him with the possibilities of growing up into Thy likeness: Speak to us at this morning hour; and if we have been engulfed by the tides of indolence, self-seeking, or sordid pleasure, strengthen Thou our world-worn hearts, and by Thy creative spirit drive us once more to the heights where we may behold the things that matter for our Nation-duty, honor, true patriotism, and sacrifice, most heavenly attribute of God and man, clothed in love's pure vestment—that having caught the vision, there may be restored to us all the throbbing hearts' high courage, hope transcending pain, and joy that has companioned with sorrow to the understanding of life's deepest mysteries. In this spirit of true service may we walk today. We ask it in the name of the divine Workman, Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following joint memorial of the Legislature of Oregon, which was referred to the Committee on Claims:

Senate Joint Memorial 8

To the Honorable Senate and House of Representatives of the

To the Honorable Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled:

We, your memorialists, the Fortieth Legislative Assembly of the State of Oregon, in regular session assembled, respectfully show, request, and petition as follows: That

Whereas to carry on activities during the late World War the Federal Government incorporated a company known as the United States Production Corporation; that this company purchased and took title to certain lands in Lincoln County, Oreg.; the land so acquired included 12,000 acres containing a stand of selected spruce timber, a mill site of approximately 10 acres of land located at Toledo, Oreg., on which a mill building was constructed; and for the purpose of transporting spruce logs to Toledo the Federal Government also constructed two railroad spurs, one running south and another running north from Yaquina Bay, from whence logs were rafted to the mill and Toledo; and

Whereas at the close of said war, and on December 17, 1920, all of the above property so purchased was disposed of by the United States Production Corporation under contract of sale to the Pacific Spruce Corporation, a private company organized under the laws of the State of Delaware, which contract of sale exempted said property.

Whereas the Federal Government, in disposing of such land under contract of sale to private owners, in exempting such land from taxes, deprived Lincoln County of a source of taxable revenue it should be entitled to have; and

Whereas in order to remedy the situation the Honorable Charles I. McNary, senior United States Senator of this State, introduced on January 25, 1939, into the Senate of the United States, a bill numbered S. 997, providing that the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States be directed to pay to Lincoln County, Oreg., a sum of money equal to the amount Lincoln County would have received as taxes for the years 1919, 1920, 1921, and 1922 from the United States Spruce Corporation if the real and personal property of such Corporation, exclusive of improvements made thereon by the United States Spruce Corporation, or any other agent of the United States, were taxable as property privately owned; that such sum be in full satisfaction of all claims of Lincoln County against the Corporation or any real or personal property thereof, or against the United States, in respect of such Corporation or property for such taxes for such years. For the year 1923 and each year thereafter, as long as such property remains the property of the Corporation of the United States, or of any corporation 51 percent or more of the shares of which is owned by the United States, the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay to Lincoln County an amount equal to the amount which would be payable as taxes on such property to Lincoln County if such property were taxable as property privately owned: Now, therefore, be it

CONSTITUTION SUNDAY

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, I introduce a joint resolution, which I ask may be printed as is usual and referred to the Library Committee, designating the Sunday immediately preceding September 17 of each year as Constitution Sunday. I believe this is a resolution worthy of the thoughtful consideration of all our citizens. I am glad to have had a part in the observance of September 18 last year as Constitution Sunday. I ask that a statement prepared by the Reverend Henry C. Offerman, who has loyally worked for the official designation of this day, be printed in the RECORD as a part of my remarks following the resolution itself.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be received, appropriately referred, and printed in the RECORD, together with the statement referred to by the Senator from

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 100) designating the Sunday immediately preceding September 17 of each year as Constitution Sunday was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on the Library, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Sunday immediately preceding September 17 of each year is hereby designated and shall hereafter be known as Constitution Sunday, to be held in grateful remembrance for the privileges enjoyed under the Constitution of the United States, and the President is authorized and requested to issue annually a proclamation calling upon the people of the United States to observe such Constitution Sunday in an appropriate manner,

The accompanying statement presented by Mr. Davis is as follows:

CONSTITUTION SUNDAY

(By the Reverend Henry C. Offerman, pastor of Christ Lutheran Church, New York City)

The growing birth of "isms" in old Europe and their uniform relegation of religion to a minor place in life reminded us most relegation of religion to a minor place in life reminded us most forcefully of our own religious freedom in America. What was it that had given religion such an asset of appreciation here? It was the Constitution of the United States. The ploneers of our country, coming primarily to secure religious liberty, had bequeathed this heritage to their children and children's children as the root tradition of the New World. The fathers of the Constitution gathered to give definite form to these convictions. Not only did they write religious freedom into the Constitution, but they mellowed that entire document with an appreciation of religion that made it the fundamental keystone of succeeding generations.

When one recalls that Harvard, Yale, and Princeton were founded as religious schools for the training of young men for the ministry of religion, the emphasis on religion as the basis of American life

Reflecting on these things a year ago, and visualizing the churches from cathedrals to smallest portable mission chapels, from the Atlantic to the Pacific, from Canada to Mexico, sponsored and fostered entirely by the voluntary sacrifices of our citizens; remembering the many colleges throughout the land founded and endowed by Americans who wanted the basis of higher education to be religious; calling to mind the thousands of excellent hospitals be religious; calling to mind the thousands of excellent hospitals opened and largely endowed by church people; mindful of the millions of dollars given voluntarily each year by the churches of America for charitable work of all kinds; and conscious that all this was completely voluntary, I could find the explanation for this is only one thing, namely, the basic implied emphasis on religion as guaranteed in our Constitution.

Accordingly, last year I wrote to Senator James J. Davis and a number of my friends in the ministry suggesting the observance of Constitution Sunday. Senator Davis immediately responded, and churches of all denominations in all the States of the Union participated. The need of a simple guide service was felt, giving a brief summary of our religious privileges under the Constitution and a simple order of worship that would express basic American desires for peace and freedom. It seemed to strike home. Everywhere churches asked for it. Constitution Sunday was heralded over the radio. Religious pages of newspapers carried announcements of it. Such spiritual rebirth calls for a continued observarce of Constitution Sunday to remind us of the great privileges of religious freedom accorded by our great charter of liberty.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED

The bill (H. R. 4860) to amend existing law so as to provide for the exclusion and deportation of aliens who advocate the making of any changes in the American form of government was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Immigration.

TAXES ON VEGETABLE OILS, ETC.-AMENDMENT

APPORTIONMENT OF SUGAR CROP

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, on last Thursday the Senate passed Senate bill 69, more properly known as the Ellender sugar bill. At the time it was under discussion on the floor the senior Senator from Utah [Mr. King] asked whether the existing quotas would be altered for Hawaii, Puerto Rico, and other parts of the United States dominions. The Senator from Louisiana [Mr. ELLENDER] said they would not, and in good faith made that reply. The Senator from Colorado [Mr. Adams] likewise answered in the negative, in good faith.

It so happens, however, that the bill as passed does reduce the Hawaiian and Puerto Rican quotas quite substantially. Therefore I had intended to make a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed, because it was not the intention of the sponsors of the bill that that should be done. I have learned from the Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS] and the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. ELLENDER] that they intend to write to the appropriate committees in the House of Representatives and ask that the correction be made in the House, and they will protect in conference the position which I have outlined. For this reason I shall not make the motion to reconsider, relying on the good faith of the sponsors of the measure.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

The VICE PRESIDENT. The routine morning business is closed. The consideration of bills on the calendar under rule VIII is in order.

Mr. BARKLEY. I ask unanimous consent that the call of the calendar be dispensed with.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

SALE OF COTTON ABROAD BELOW COST

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate Resolution 107.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I desire to make an inquiry of the Senator from Georgia, which I might as well make on the motion to take up the resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The motion to take up the resolution at this hour is not debatable.

Mr. BARKLEY. That is true.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion . of the Senator from Georgia.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution (S. Res. 107) submitted by Mr. George on the calendar day of March 20, 1939, opposing sales of American cotton during the present world crisis to foreign purchasers below the cost of production, which was read, as

Whereas the world is today confronted with an international crisis of the gravest magnitude; and Whereas the market for American cotton is rapidly becoming demoralized; and demoralized; and

Whereas cotton is a vital commodity to national defense; and Whereas the United States Government is in possession of the largest quantity of raw cotton in the world; and Whereas there is now under consideration the disposal of American cotton to the foreign trade below the cost of production and considerably below its cost to this Government; and Whereas such policy is fraught with the gravest dangers and injustices to the American farmers, American industry, and the national economy: Therefore be it

Whereas such policy is fraught with the gravest uniques and injustices to the American farmers, American industry, and the national economy: Therefore be it

*Resolved, That it is the sense of the Senate that pending this world crisis no American cotton be sold to foreign purchasers at a price below the actual cost of said cotton to the Government of the United States, and that the Secretary of Agriculture is directed to negotiate no sales of American cotton to the foreign trade below its cost to this Government without the approval of the Congress.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Georgia.

Mr. GEORGE. I now yield to the Senator from Kentucky, if he desires me to yield at this time.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I suppose the Senator from Georgia is about to discuss his resolution. During the discussion I may make some inquiries of him concerning it. Probably I had better pursue that course than to ask the questions now.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, it will be noted that the resolution does not express the sense of the Senate to be that sales of American cotton to foreign purchasers be discontinued, but merely that such sales below the cost of cotton to the American Government be abandoned, and that the Secretary of Agriculture is instructed to negotiate no sale of American cotton to the foreign trade below the cost to this Government, without the approval of the Congress.

It is not the purpose of the resolution to cut off sales by the Government of American cotton either to domestic buyers or to the foreign trade, but it is frankly the purpose of the resolution to express the sense of the Senate against the sale of any of the cotton now held by the Government to the foreign trade below the cost to the Government of the cotton, without the approval of the Congress.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GEORGE. I yield.

Mr. McNARY. Has the Senator the figures showing the amount of cotton now in the hands of the Government under liens held by the Commodity Credit Corporation?

Mr. GEORGE. I was about to make a statement upon that point.

Mr. McNARY. Then will the Senator cover another vital proposition, that is, the average price per pound the Government has loaned on the cotton which would come within the purview of the resolution?

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, the Government now has on hand approximately eleven and a half million bales of cotton. That cotton, of course, has been accumulated since 1934. Loans were made all the way from 8.3 cents per pound, on the 1938 crop, to 12 cents under the first loan announced by the Government. The average cost to the Government of all this cotton. I am advised, is today approximately 10 cents per pound. The most accurate figures I have been able to obtain, figures applicable about 30 days or more ago, but during the present session of the Congress, were to the effect that the average cost of all the cotton in Government loans now, including the original loans and carrying charges, amounts to 10.1 cents per pound, approximately 10 cents per pound.

Undoubtedly there are some negotiations on foot for the use of what is called the two-price system, that is to say, one price on American cotton to the American buyers, and another price to the world trade. That is merely a euphonious way of saying that the Government now contemplates, through some of its departments or agencies, the giving of a subsidy on the sale of American cotton to the foreign trade.

It matters not what particular method may be adopted; the purpose is to sell the cotton to the foreign trade at a price below the cost to the Government. The purpose is actually to stimulate exports of cotton, and it is thought by some of the departments and agencies of Government that exports of American cotton may be stimulated if a subsidy be paid to foreign purchasers of cotton, directly or in-

Obviously that is true. If the subsidy be great enough, it follows naturally that the exports of cotton will be greatly stimulated. If the subsidy be low, if it does not amount to as much as 2 cents per pound, it is problematical how much cotton will be moved under the plan, that is to say, how much stimulation will be given to export of American cotton. It is certain, of course, that if the subsidy be great enough, foreign exports of raw cotton will be stimulated.

At the present rate of consumption of American cotton at the present rate of movement, at the end of this fiscal year we will have exported somewhere in the neighborhood of three and a half million bales of cotton. That is the lowest export of American cotton in 60 years. It is alarming to some of the departments of Government to contemplate the effect of these low exports upon a farm program which has here drastically reduced production, and at the same time, in the working out of that program, coupled with other influences, has greatly curtailed the foreign demand.

Exports of American cotton at the end of this fiscal year cannot exceed, at the present rate, more than three and a half million bales, and, if I may repeat, that is below exports of our cotton through the long period of 60 years.

Mr. President, it is obvious that if we sell cotton abroad by virtue of an export subsidy we will upset the world market in cotton. It is obvious that we would be compelled to impose tariffs or to fix quotas in order to protect our own markets against the return of that cotton in raw or finished form. and provide further subsidies especially in order to enable our manufactures to compete in the foreign markets.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President-

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. GEORGE. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. This whole cotton situation to me, and I think to nearly everyone else, is the most complicated proposition that confronts the Government and the people of the United States. I do not think anyone has the last word on the subject. If he has, I should like to meet him.

I understand that about 11,000,000 bales of cotton are now held by the Government, on which it has liens by reason of loans it has made. That is correct, is it? Mr. GEORGE. Very nearly eleven and a half million bales.

Mr. BARKLEY. Well, eleven and a half million. I understand that the average amount of money loaned on that cotton is probably 81/2 cents. Would that be approximately the correct figure?

Mr. GEORGE. No; the loans run higher than that. The loans plus the actual accumulated charges on the cotton approximate 10 cents.

Mr. BARKLEY. I am speaking of the loans originally made. They ran from 8.4 up to 9 cents.

Mr. GEORGE. From 8.3 to 12 cents. There is still some cotton in the hands of the Government that was taken in under the 12-cent loan.

Mr. BARKLEY. The eleven and a half million bales, so to speak, are impounded and under the control of the Government, through the Commodity Credit Corporation, or the Secretary of Agriculture, or both, probably the Reconstruction Finance Corporation having some control over it also. Who would have the power to sell this cotton now if it were sold? Whose single word could determine whether it should be sold or not?

Mr. GEORGE. I do not think that legal authority exists to sell any of it save on the initiative of the producer of the cotton. He may request a sale of the cotton.

Mr. BARKLEY. The title to all this cotton is still in the producer. The Government has a lien on it, just as any lender would have a lien where a loan was made and a lien taken. The title does not vest in the Government, as I understand, and it would not have the legal right to sell the cotton, certainly without the consent of the owner, and the Senator says that it would not be authorized except at his request. Is that true?

Mr. GEORGE. That is my interpretation of the law.

Mr. BARKLEY. I did not know this matter was to come up this morning. I thought that, in view of our colloquy a few days ago, it would go over, along with the bill on the calendar, until all parties could see whether they could come to any understanding about the proposition. I understand they are to confer tomorrow on the subject to see whether they can work it out. But the matter is before us now, and, frankly, I am somewhat confused about the effect of the

If no one in the Government has any authority to sell the cotton without the request of the owner, who is the producer, what is the real effect of the resolution? If they cannot sell it now without such request, how would this resolution change the situation, so far as the law is concerned?

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I was merely giving to the Senator from Kentucky my own interpretation of the law. I do not know that in that interpretation the departments of the Government fully concur.

Mr. BARKLEY. I understood from the Secretary of Agriculture that he interpreted the law to mean that he could not sell the cotton.

Mr. GEORGE. Yes. Mr. BARKLEY. Whether anyone else can sell it or not, I do not know. I am merely seeking information.

Mr. GEORGE. If the Senator will bear with me, I will try to cover that exact point.

Mr. BARKLEY. Let me ask the Senator another question also. The resolution sets out in the first preamble that "the world is today confronted with an international crisis." Then it is provided in the resolution "that it is the sense of the Senate that pending this world crisis no American cotton be sold," and so forth.

If the resolution is to have any effect, who would determine, under it, how long the crisis referred to existed, and who would have the authority to say at any time, "The crisis is over; therefore we will proceed to sell this cotton if we can"?

Furthermore, how can the Senate "direct" the Secretary of Agriculture in a Senate resolution to do or not to do a certain thing which he might have the authority to do? The Senator's resolution undertakes to have the Senate "direct" the Secretary of Agriculture not to sell any of this cotton, or to negotiate any sale.

Mr. GEORGE. It expresses it as the sense of the Senate. Mr. BARKLEY. I do not understand that the Senate by itself can "direct" the Secretary.

Mr. GEORGE. The resolution merely expresses the sense of the Senate.

Mr. BARKLEY. It expresses the sense of the Senate to be that pending the world crisis no cotton be sold to foreign purchasers "below the actual cost of said cotton to the Government of the United States." Then, "that the Secretary of Agriculture is directed."

Mr. GEORGE. That it is the sense of the Senate that he be directed.

Mr. BARKLEY. This may be technical, but it seems to me that if the resolution is to be agreed to the word "directed" should be changed to "requested," because the Senate cannot, in a Senate resolution, direct the Secretary of Agriculture to do anything. It can only request him to do it; and if we are merely expressing the sense of the Senate, it should not be a direction to the Secretary. I am calling attention to this because it might put the Senate in the attitude of assuming that it could direct the Secretary of Agriculture to do it.

Mr. GEORGE. On that point, I would have no objection to using the word "instructed" or "requested" rather than "directed."

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, will the Senator from Georgia yield to me?

Mr. GEORGE. I yield.

Mr. SMITH. I did not know that this matter was to be brought up this morning. I should like to call attention to a circular letter which has been sent out to all the holders of the loan cotton, to the effect that if upon a reexamination of the grade and staple of cotton stored by any borrower, a bale is found which does not come up to what it should be in the judgment of the examining committee of the Commodity Credit Corporation, if a bale or bales, in whatever number the holder has, shall be found not to be of grade and staple to warrant the loan which has already been made, the Commodity Credit Corporation will sell his entire "loan" cotton.

Mr. President, I have sent for the letter to which I referred. I wish to read it so there can be no question as to its contents. Under such a provision, under such a rule the Government authorities can place every bale of the loan cotton upon the market.

The Senator from Alabama [Mr. Bankhead] and I called these gentlemen in and asked them if the letter was true. They said yes, they had sent the letter. We protested that that was an indirect way of getting control of the cotton which under the provisions of the law enacted last year they cannot repossess themselves of until August 1, 1939. Then they are at liberty under the law to call the loan and take possession of the cotton.

Another letter was sent subsequent to the one I first referred to, stating that if and when a bale of cotton is found to be below the specifications requisite to get a loan, then the holder must make good that difference or they will sell. They give him a chance to make good the difference.

In respect to the dropping off of exports, I will say that some gentlemen from Liverpool were in my office, and we discussed the subject. I think it is very evident to all those who know the cotton situation that the reason exports have dropped off is because we have eleven and one-half million bales tied up in the Government loans, and no one knows what we are going to do with that cotton. It is not known whether Mr. Wallace is going to turn it loose at a discount to the foreign buyers or whether there is going to be some other method of disposing of it, and consequently, being thrifty gentlemen, the foreign buyers have just laid off.

I wish to call attention to a significant fact. Senators, listen to this: The amount of American cotton consumed abroad for the first 6 months ending in February is exactly equal to what was consumed the previous 6 months. In other words, the stock that is always held abroad for emergencies has been used up, so that the amount of American cotton consumed in the mills abroad is exactly equal to what it was the previous year and the year before that. I will get the statement from the Department and read it into the Record.

Mr. GEORGE. I thank the Senator.

Mr. SMITH. I wish to make the further observation that the dropping off in export was caused by the uncertainty as to what we were going to do with those eleven and one-half million bales.

I state here and now, and will get the figures to prove it, that America sets the price for world cotton. Senators have heard a great deal about the price of American cotton being out of line with the price of foreign cotton. I will take the testimony of the Liverpool buyers, the Bremen buyers, the Barcelona buyers, the Genoa buyers, and the Munich buyers, and I will show by the actual figures that as American cotton goes up all South American and European cotton goes up all south American and European cotton goes down. In other words, they hedge all their purchases of foreign cotton in American cotton.

I will have more to say about that later.

Mr. McNARY and Mr. REYNOLDS addressed the Chair.

Mr. GEORGE. I shall be glad to yield, but my time is rather limited. However, I will yield to the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. McNARY. I asked the Senator to yield for a very brief observation followed by a request. I have in mind no criticism of the purpose of the Senator from Georgia, but I do not agree with the objective of his resolution. I know the cotton problem is a national problem. I shall treat it as such. I have always tried to leave the solution of the cotton prob-

I have always tried to leave the solution of the cotton problem to the Senators from the South, but it is my experience, over many years—for two decades—that there are just as many opinions with respect to the cotton question as there are Senators from the Southern States. That is why it is a good thing to have a northern, eastern, or western Senator present his views on the subject.

I wish to make a statement only to this extent. If we adopt the resolution and follow the suggestions of the Secretary of Agriculture the result will be a complete embargo. We know that the price of cotton at Liverpool, where it is fixed, is 7 or 8 cents a pound. We know that the cotton loan made by the Commodity Credit Corporation on the impounded cotton is about 10½ cents a pound. Consequently there will be no market for the impounded cotton on the world market if we place an embargo in this fashion on exports of any of the cotton.

Let me say one more word. I shall discuss the plan a little later. A resolution which so fundamentally affects the philosophy with respect to the cotton industry should, I think, go to a committee for study. I have some knowledge of the present tragic condition with respect to cotton. I know that if the resolution were agreed to we could not export any cotton. The very able Senator from Georgia knows that heretofore we have always followed out what we called a two-price system, in respect of some of our rural commodities, which I think is just as logical today as it has been at any time. What we need is to get rid of the impounded cotton.

Mr. GEORGE. The Senator from Georgia does not know that we have ever followed a two-price system in respect to cotton.

Mr. McNARY. It has been generally observed in the channels of trade, because we pay the Liverpool price plus the cost of marine insurance and transportation. Under the provisions of the old bill which I presented years ago we offered a subsidy of 2 cents a pound for cotton which was sold abroad, and that was charged up against the whole cotton crop. Under the bill offered by the able Senator from South Carolina an attempt will be made to find the parity price of cotton and pay on that basis if it is less than the loan worth of the cotton today. The Senator must keep this in mind: If the resolution is agreed to, while there is only a lien on the cotton held by the Secretary of Agriculture, held by the Government, a foreclosure must take place before the Secretary would have a right to dispose of the cotton by virtue of the terms of the resolution.

Assume the Secretary of Agriculture had the title to the cotton and could sell it or not. Under the A. A. A. Act we passed last year up to 75 percent of the parity price could still be borrowed on cotton. Consequently the maker of the cotton crop this year could continue to borrow money and pile up the impounded cotton, which now amounts to nearly 12,000,000 bales.

Mr. GEORGE. Let us not get into what we are going to do with the cotton crop of 1939.

Mr. McNARY. That is certainly a part of the whole pro-

Mr. GEORGE. We are trying now to begin a movement which will enable us not to accumulate more cotton under loan. I fear the Senator has not studied the problem-

Mr. McNARY. Excuse me; I think the Senator from Georgia has not studied the problem in this instance.

Mr. GEORGE. No; I think the Senator from Oregon has not studied the problem.

Mr. McNARY. I know the Senator from Oregon was very active in opposition to the bill last year. He knows that the cotton on which we have loaned money now is too great an amount ever to be sold or disposed of in the foreign market. He knows that we still have recourse to the lending of Government money through the Commodity Credit Corporation, and if the producers of the crop of 1939 should take advantage of the loan, we would still be impounding millions and millions more bales of cotton.

We may both be mistaken. I do not want the Senator to think that any statement I make casts a reflection upon him, or intimates that he does not know about his subject, but I appeal to him at this time to have the resolution referred to the Committee on Agriculture, which may study the question in connection with existing legislation, the cotton which is impounded, and the bill presented by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] and which is on the calendar, and let the whole subject matter be studied.

I should have to oppose the resolution today by my vote, which probably would not at all embarrass the situation, but I think if the Senator from Georgia, able as he is, were to ask to have the resolution referred to the committee for study in connection with the bill pending on the calendar, and in connection with the subject of cotton upon which loans have been made by the Commodity Credit Corporation and which is now impounded, and the A. A. A. Act, that the whole subject matter could be understood in a clearer way than it can be today. I appeal to the Senator to follow that course.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I appreciate the Senator's attitude, but I am not willing to concede that I do not know whether I want to sell an American product in the foreign market cheaper than it is sold at home—whether I am going to pay a subsidy to induce foreign traders to buy American cotton. That is all there is in the resolution.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to make one more observation?

Mr. GEORGE. I yield. Mr. McNARY. I am not opposing or concurring in the plan suggested by the Secretary of Agriculture at all. I will ask him only this simple question: If the resolution were adopted by the Congress and the title to the cotton were in the hands of the Secretary of Agriculture, what would follow the injunction not to sell unless he found that the world price was not below the American price? The world price being 2 cents less than the American price, has he any chance in the world to sell any of the 12,000,000 bales of impounded cotton?

Mr. GEORGE. If the Senator will permit me, I will say that he assumes that the only American cotton there is is under the Government loans. That is not true, in the first

Mr. McNARY. Pardon me. I am just discussing the 12,000,000 bales concerning which we would have some choice in the matter of disposal. The resolution does not affect the free cotton, the cotton that is loose.

Mr. GEORGE. The resolution does not affect that cotton at all.

Mr. McNARY. Therefore, I am keeping myself within the issues involved by the resolution.

Mr. GEORGE. That is true. But the resolution does not affect the free cotton at all. The resolution simply affects the cotton on which the Government has made a loan. The resolution simply says that pending the crisis we will not sell this cotton by means of subsidy to the foreign purchaser without bringing the matter to the attention of the Congress.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Mr. GEORGE. I wanted to make a rather coherent statement. However, I will yield to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. BARKLEY. How much free cotton is there which is subject to be sold to the foreign market or to anyone else, outside of the eleven and one-half million bales of cotton now in the hands of the Government?

Mr. GEORGE. I will say to the Senator from Kentucky that I think there is a sufficient amount to meet the foreign demand at the present rate of consumption.

Mr. BARKLEY. That free cotton which is being sold to the foreign market is being sold at the world price, is it?

Mr. GEORGE. Yes. Mr. BARKLEY. It could not very well sell for more than the world price and they would not take less.

Mr. GEORGE. No.

Mr. BARKLEY. And that world price is less than the cost to the Government of the impounded eleven and one-hal? million bales; is that not true?

Mr. GEORGE. I would not say that, but that gets into another field which I did not want to enter into a discussion of now because the effect of the Government's loan and its release from the loan to stimulate the market here, so far as the domestic buyer was concerned, has pulled it up beyond the quoted exchange markets here.

Mr. BARKLEY. Let me ask the Senator a question. In whose hands now is the three and one-half million bales of free cotton? Is it in the hands of the producers, or is it in the hands of those who have bought it from the producers with the view of profit upon it? Does the Senator know what proportion of the free cotton is now still held by the farmers who produced it?

Mr. GEORGE. I can only approximate it. It is held by the mills, by the buyers, and by the producers, but in just what proportions I am unable to say.

Mr. SMITH. The latest figures are nearer 6,000,000 bales than 3,000,000. I have sent for the report of Mr. Zimmerman, who, under the Department of Commerce, is charged with keeping the statistics.

Mr. BARKLEY. With respect to the cotton which is now owned by the buyers, who undoubtedly would like to dispose of it at a profit in the foreign market or the domestic market, did the buyers pay for that cotton more than the present world price of the product?

Mr. GEORGE. Yes; the mills did. The buyers did.

Mr. BARKLEY. The mills, of course, buy cotton for their own use.

Mr. GEORGE. Yes.

Mr. BARKLEY. They work it up into finished products.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, let me correct an error. The price paid by the mills for the free cotton is the world price for American cotton.

Mr. GEORGE. The Senator asked about the price when they bought it.

Mr. SMITH. When they bought it they paid the world

Mr. GEORGE. I understood the question to be whether or not the world price then was higher than the present world price.

Mr. BARKLEY. My question was whether or not they paid more for it when they bought it than the present world price.

Mr. SMITH. Since Mr. Wallace announced the amount he would lend on cotton, which amount was graduated from about 9 cents down to approximately 7 cents, according to grade and staple, and averaging about 8½ cents, the entire world cotton, including foreign and domestic, dropped to that level and stayed there.

Mr. GEORGE. I understand that. I understood the Senator's question to be whether or not that cotton was purchased at a price above the present world price.

Mr. BARKLEY. That is correct. That was my question.

Mr. GEORGE. I think, on the whole, that is true.

Mr. SMITH. No; it is not true. The world price of cotton has not varied as much as $1.50 or $2 a bale since Mr. Wallace announced his price. The world price stayed at the same level. Of course, market speculators would run the price up a little by bidding on one day and dropping out the next so as to make a profit of something like 75 cents or $1 a bale. However, the market has been dead ever since the price was announced.

Mr. GEORGE. I had the impression that the price was somewhat higher at the time of purchase.

Mr. SMITH. No.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Georgia one question.

Mr. GEORGE. I yield to the Senator from North Carolina.
Mr. REYNOLDS. If the Secretary of Agriculture should sell to interests abroad some American cotton on which a loan was made, thus providing the interests abroad with a subsidy, I ask the Senator if that procedure would not be injurious to the American textile manufacturer who has already bought cotton prior to this time and at a higher price?

Mr. GEORGE. I do not think there is any doubt that it would be destructive of the buyer as well as the producer, who now has the cotton. Such a course would wipe out all the equity, if there be any equity, in the eleven and a half million bales of cotton still owned by the producer, but on which the Government has a lien.

Mr. President, I should like to put into the Record the provisions of the Farm Control Act of 1938 relating to cotton held under Government loan. I read from subsection (b) of section 381 of the act:

(b) Any producer for whom a loan has been made or arranged for by the Commodity Credit Corporation on cotton of his 1937 crop, and who has complied with all the provisions of the loan agreement except section 8 thereof, may, at any time before July 1, 1938, transfer his right, title, and interest in and to such cotton to the Corporation; and the Corporation is authorized and directed to accept such right, title, and interest in and to such cotton and to assume all obligations of the producer with respect to the loan on such cotton, including accrued interest and accrued carrying charges to the date of such transfer.

Mr. President, subsection (c) of section 281 of the Farm Control Act of 1938 provides:

(c) The Commodity Credit Corporation is authorized on behalf of the United States to sell any cotton of the 1937 crop so acquired by it, but no such cotton or any other cotton held on behalf of the United States shall be sold unless the proceeds of such sale are at least sufficient to reimburse the United States for all amounts (including any price-adjustment payment) paid out by any of its agencies with respect to the cotton so sold.

I should like to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that the question of policy has been decided. The policy is written into the act of 1938. The last session of the preceding Congress provided specifically what my resolution calls for; no more and no less. There is a single exception under which it may be legal to acquire possession of the cotton and subsidize its sale to the foreign trade. Continuing reading subsection (c):

After July 31, 1939, the Commodity Credit Corporation shall not sell more than 300,000 bales of cotton in any calendar month nor more than 1,500,000 bales in any calendar year.

That is an absolute embargo, an absolute prohibition. The policy is written in the law.

Section 382 provides that-

SEC. 382. The Commodity Credit Corporation is hereby authorized and directed to provide for the extension, from July 31, 1938, to July 31, 1939, of the maturity date of all notes evidencing a loan made or arranged for by the Corporation on cotton produced during the crop year 1937-38.

I direct special attention to this clause:

This section shall not be construed to prevent the sale of any such cotton on request of the person liable on the note.

It has been stated on the floor of the Senate by the distinguished Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] that notices are now going out to farmer-producers of the eleven and one-half million bales of cotton that if one bale of their cotton be below the grade and staple at which it was received the Commodity Credit Corporation will declare the whole note due and take over the cotton. Why? Beyond all doubt a subsidy to the foreign purchaser of American cotton is contemplated, and that alone is what I am resisting. Moreover, under the exception extending the maturity date of the loans until July 31, 1939, it is provided that—

On Thursday I stated that my understanding of the program was that a total subsidy would be offered to the foreign purchaser of American cotton, but that a small part of the subsidy, namely, $1.50 a bale, would be paid to the producer for his request to the corporation to release or sell the cotton.

'Mr. President, I am surprised that the distinguished Senator from Oregon [Mr. McNary] has raised the question that we wish to prevent the export of cotton by a simple resolution of the Senate expressing its sense that the cotton should not be sold under certain circumstances during the present world crisis. In the act of 1938 every precaution was taken against its sale below the cost to the Government. A direct and expresss provision against its sale for less than the cost to the Government was included in the act. However, after accumulating cotton since 1934, some of the agencies of Government have suddenly discovered that we must get rid of the eleven and one-half million bales of cotton at any cost.

Mr. President, we can always give the cotton away. We can give it away to the foreign traders if we wish to do so. There is no difficulty in getting rid of it if we want to give it away in the foreign market.

The question is clear-cut. It has nothing to do with the future policy of the Government as to the making of loans upon the 1939 or 1940 crop of cotton. The question is whether it is wise, just, and right to subsidize the sale of American cotton abroad in the face of the act which lays down the policy of the Government that it be not sold for less than the cost to the Government.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President-

Mr. GEORGE. I yield to the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. McKellar. I rise to ask for information. I have been informed by an officer of the Commodity Credit Corporation that in 1935, acting under the law which has been referred to, the Commodity Credit Corporation sold 1,300,000 bales of cotton before the 1st of July of that year in order not to affect the price of the incoming crop; that while the Commodity Credit Corporation was selling off that 1,300,000 bales the price continued to rise instead of fall; that in the succeeding year, 1936, pursuing exactly the same policy, the Commodity Credit Corporation sold an additional 1,400,000 bales, or a little more than the amount sold the preceding year; and that while that process was going on the market continued to rise; not to a great extent, but continued to rise. I should like to ask the Senator whether or not those are the facts as he understands them?

Mr. GEORGE. Let me ask the Senator whether or not the sale of the cotton to the foreign trade was subsidized?

Mr. McKELLAR. My recollection is that the Government was in exactly the same position it is now in. It had a lien on the cotton, but it had to obtain the farmers' consent to sell the cotton before it could be sold.

The consent was obtained by paying the farmers, if I correctly recall, approximately $1.25 a bale. The cotton was sold on a market which was going up at the time and continued to go up to some extent until July 1, when the sales stopped, because it was feared at the time that if the sales continued until the new crop came on, the price would be adversely affected. That is what I have been told. The question I am asking the Senator is, does he have that understanding of the facts as to the years 1935 and 1936, to which the act he has just read refers?

Mr. GEORGE. I have a recollection that some cotton was disposed of, of course, by the Commodity Credit Corporation; but I have no recollection that they paid a subsidy to the foreign buyers of the cotton.

Mr. McKELLAR. No; they paid $1.25 a bale.

Mr. GEORGE. That was to secure its release; and then, as I understand, the cotton went on the market without subsidy to the foreign buyer.

Mr. McKELLAR. Then they sold it at the market price.

May I ask the Senator another question for information? It has been claimed that at present, while there are about 6,000,000 bales of free cotton, certain grades of staple are not to be found in the 6.000,000 bales, but that they are to be found in the 11,000,000 bales which the Commodity Credit Corporation has, and it is believed that the cotton of a better grade of staple probably could be sold without adversely affecting the price.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, if the Senator from Georgia will yield to me-

Mr. GEORGE. I yield to the Senator from South Carolina. Mr. SMITH. Ever since the Government had any cotton it has been claimed that the Government had a little better cotton than was available outside, and therefore that the Government cotton must be turned loose, or the mills would stop. The fact of the matter is that all this unusual embarrassment comes from the fact that the buyers do not know what we are going to do. They have no confidence. They do not know whether or not Mr. Wallace is going to succeed in turning loose a third of the cotton. Who would buy any cotton for storage or speculation if he did not know what is going to happen to this avalanche of 11,000,000 bales?

I do not desire, however, to take up the time of the Senator from Georgia. I shall speak in my own time, and see if I cannot get my colleagues here to understand the simplicity of this problem. It is not complicated. Some sharks who want cheap cotton to cover their mistake of selling ahead at a low price, and going short on it, now want the Government to turn its cotton loose and get them out of the hole. That is all there is to it.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I have read the law enacted by the Congress, and which declares the policy of the Congress. I have called attention to the two methods by which the release of the cotton from the Commodity Credit Corporation may be secured; and I have called attention to the fact that an effort is under way, or at least a plan is under consideration, to sell as much as this American-held cotton as can be sold by means of a subsidy to the foreign purchaser.

I have no objection to the sale at any price of the free cotton; and the resolution does not even refer to the free cotton, which I stated to be about three and a half million bales in amount, and which my colleague from South Carolina [Mr. Smith] and others now say amounts to around 6,000,000 bales. The resolution does not affect that cotton at all. It applies only to the cotton on which the Government has made loans. I have directed attention to the law passed under which the cotton was acquired, which definitely and distinctly and absolutely declares the policy of the law; but if there were no declaration in the law it would be a simple matter to determine whether or not we want to subsidize the foreign purchasers of American cotton.

Mr. President, I ask to have read from the clerk's desk a statement by the cooperative organizations of the country. The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the clerk will read, as requested.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

NEW ORLEANS, LA., March 21, 1939. Senator WALTER F. GEORGE.

Senator Walter F. George,

Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.:

The directors of the American Cotton Cooperative Association, representing farmer owned and controlled cotton cooperative marketing associations in 16 States, with a total membership in excess of 280,000 farmers, in session here, strongly protest the proposed export subsidy on cotton for the following reasons:

First. That it provides cheap cotton to foreign nations at the expense of American consumers and American taxpayers.

Second. That it will encourage similar action by other cotton-exporting countries.

exporting countries.

Third. That the probable cost will not justify the small increase in exports which will be obtained.

Fourth. That it will seriously threaten the success of the reciprocal-trade program.

In lieu of an export subsidy program our directors urge that the Commodity Credit Corporation, upon the advice and approval of the Secretary of Agriculture, be authorized and directed to imediately start the orderly liquidation of "loan" cotton, and that cotton adjustment payments be increased to protect and maintain the cotton farm income during the period of liquidation of loan stocks. loan stocks.

Our directors believe such a program will increase domestic consumption, will regain on a competitive basis a substantial portion of our lost world markets, and will permit cotton producers the normal use of their present acreage allotment, with a gradually increasing market level and will result in less expense to the Government than any subsidy plan, which in the words of Secretary Wallace, in the final analysis is self-defeating.

N. C. WILLIAMSON,

President American Cotton Cooperative Association

President, American Cotton Cooperative Association.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I send to the desk and ask to have read the views of a cotton producer and a country merchant purchasing cotton who happens to be a resident of my home town.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the communication will be read.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

VIENNA, GA. March 24, 1939.

Senator W. F. George (Personal),

342 Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.:

Until the Government cotton loan was announced last fall cotton was selling readily here at 9 cents, round lots. Loan conditions were so complicated was impossible or practically so to get a loan approved. Farmers usually became disgusted and sold their cotton rather than borrow on it. Small country merchant cotton buyers were the goat. We had been able to sell freely at 9 cents round lots, so we presumed we still could do so. Within a few days we found ourselves loaded up. In my case with 500 bales 9-cent cotton. When it was offered for sale through the usual channels found all demand dried up. Ought the Government to throw its cotton over at low price and leave me and others all over America, small country buyers who are carrying the burden, to take our losses? We do not believe it fair. Either keep Government loan cotton off market or take our cotton at cost. We are American citizens also. Please read this to Senate.

W. EDMOND PORTER,

County Merchant Cotton Buyer.

County Merchant Cotton Buyer.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I now desire to read a short excerpt from the address of Secretary Wallace, of the Department of Agriculture, delivered at Fort Worth, Tex., in September of last year. Speaking directly upon this point, he said:

If consumption of American cotton is to be subsidized, the subsidies ought to be applied to domestic consumption rather than export. If any gifts of cotton are going to be made under the present administration, our own people ought to come first. Why not, for once, give our own consumers and our own workers a break?

Mr. Wallace was profoundly sound in September of last year, Mr. President. If the Government puts into operation the scheme which is now contemplated of stimulating exports by paying a subsidy to the foreign consumers of American cotton, we shall have taken the first step toward the actual destruction of cotton as an article of foreign commerce.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Mr. GEORGE. I yield to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. BARKLEY. I think I asked the Senator earlier who it is whose word is necessary, and whose contemplation is necessary, in order to bring about the sale of this cotton. I have been unable to find out who it is that can sell it and is planning to sell it.

Mr. GEORGE. The Commodity Credit Corporation can release the cotton for sale.

Mr. BARKLEY. When the Senator refers to certain agencies of the Government that are contemplating this sale, does he refer to the Commodity Credit Corporation?

Mr. GEORGE. It would take the efforts of more than one agency to carry out this program, as I understand. I will state frankly to the Senator that the cotton cannot be released unless the Commodity Credit Corporation releases it.

Mr. BARKLEY. Do they contemplate releasing it? If so, upon whose request?

Mr. GEORGE. The Secretary of Agriculture is a director of the Commodity Credit Corporation, and he is practically controlling so far as farm products are concerned.

Mr. BARKLEY. Does the Senator think the Secretary of Agriculture, either as Secretary of Agriculture or as a member of the Board of Directors of the Commodity Credit Corporation, contemplates initiating a program of sale for this cotton?

Mr. GEORGE. I can only say that the trade in America and throughout the world understands that to be the case; and I can only say that day after day the mills and the merchants and the producers have appealed to me to prevent such a thing, which necessarily would break down the price of cotton, to the hurt and injury of the mills which did go in and buy, of the producers who have carried it, and of the merchants who have bought it and who have stocks on hand. If the Senator wishes me to say that I have been informed by any department of Government that they intend to carry into execution this scheme, I am not able to make that positive statement.

Mr. BARKLEY. I am not attempting to put the Senator "on the spot" in that regard; but I am very strongly of the belief that somebody in authority in connection with this cotton ought to have been brought before a committee of the Senate to ascertain what the plans are. All these rumors may be without foundation. It may be that no such plan is contemplated; and, if it is not, those in authority ought to have been allowed to say so. If it is, they probably should have been allowed to explain their plan, their program, and why they contemplate it. But with as much ignorance as we have here about any plan, it is difficult to understand what ought to be done.

Mr. SMITH and Mr. TAFT addressed the Chair.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I will state in my place that this plan has been in contemplation. I know that there can be no mistake upon that point.

Mr. BARKLEY. By whom? I am asking in good faith for information. By whom has it been under contemplation?

Mr. GEORGE. This cotton cannot be released except through the Commodity Credit Corporation. The Commodity Credit Corporation is largely controlled by the R. F. C. Mr. Wallace, the Secretary of Agriculture, is a director of the Commodity Credit Corporation, and his voice is at least very powerful with respect to agricultural products. Undoubtedly this plan in substance has been under consideration, is now in contemplation, and, in my judgment, if the Senate does not act, it will be carried into execution.

Mr. BARKLEY. Is it under contemplation by the R. F. C., by the Commodity Credit Corporation, by Secretary of Agriculture Wallace, or by all three of them acting in conjunction?

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, if the Senator from Georgia will allow me, the Senator from Kentucky was present in the conference when Mr. Wallace gave us three plans. One was the subsidy plan. The Senator from Kentucky was present.

Mr. BARKLEY. I was present. The Secretary did not give us three plans. He described the three plans that were being discussed, one of which was the bill of the Senator from South Carolina and two others.

Mr. SMITH. And one was the subsidy.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Secretary committed himself to none of the three.

Mr. SMITH. I know he did not.

Mr. BARKLEY. He simply described the difference between them, and the probable cost to the Government in the event anyone of the three should be adopted; but the Secretary did not commit himself to any one of them.

Mr. SMITH. He said, if the Senator from Kentucky will recall, that the subsidy plan, based upon 6-cent cottonthe Senator will remember he kept saying "6-cent cotton," which is about 2 cents under the present level-would cost less to the Government. Of course, it would cost a great deal to other people; but he gave me the impression, and I think he gave every other man who was there the impression, that he was more favorable to the subsidy proposition than he was to the other two.

Mr. BARKLEY. I thought the Secretary tried to emphasize that he was not recommending any one of the plans.

Mr. SMITH. He did.

Mr. BARKLEY. But he explained how much each one would cost. It may be that he put emphasis on his voice on the smaller amount to come out of the Treasury. I do not recall about that.

Mr. GEORGE. Just on the point the Senator from Kentucky raised, in order to relieve the matter from any uncertainty so far as I may, I will say that I do not think the Reconstruction Finance Corporation contemplates a sale of cotton to foreign purchasers through subsidy, and I do not think the Commodity Credit Corporation contemplates the sale of this cotton through a subsidy, but I say positively that it has been under consideration in the Department of Agriculture, and I state that from my knowl-

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President— Mr. GEORGE. I did not want to go into that. I thought it would be immaterial in connection with this matter.

Mr. BARKLEY. Of course, that eliminates all three of these agencies except the Secretary of Agriculture, so if neither the Reconstruction Finance Corporation nor the Commodity Credit Corporation contemplates it, there is no one else who could contemplate it except the Secretary of Agriculture. I stated the other day, and I think the Secretary would reiterate it, that he is not contemplating it; that he not only is not contemplating it but could not do it. Certainly he could not do it alone.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, it comes to my attention that those contemplating this are depending on section 12 of the present law, which reads as follows, if the Senator from Georgia will allow me.

Mr. GEORGE. I yield.

Mr. SMITH. I read from the law:

SEC. 12. Whenever the Secretary finds that the exercise of the powers conferred in this section will tend to carry out the purpose specified in clause (5) of section 7 (a), or will tend to provide for and maintain a continuous and stable supply of agricultural commodities adequate to meet consumer demand at prices fair to both producers and consumers, or both, he shall use such part as he deems necessary of the sums appropriated to carry out this act for the expansion of domestic and foreign markets or for seeking new or additional markets for agricultural commodities or the products thereof or for the removal or disposition of surpluses of such commodities or the products thereof.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Georgia yield for a question?

Mr. GEORGE. I yield.

Mr. LODGE. I should like to ask whether the Senator from Georgia or the Senator from South Carolina has any information bearing on the rumor which has been current that some of this cotton has gone to Germany.

Mr. GEORGE. I have not.

Mr. SMITH. Nor have I.

Mr. GEORGE. If subsidized to the foreign purchasers, of course, it might go wherever anyone would take it at the reduced price.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator from Georgia vield?

Mr. GEORGE. I yield.

Mr. TAFT. As a member of the Committee on Banking and Currency I have received notice of a meeting to take place tomorrow morning at which Mr. Jesse Jones will appear in behalf of Senate Joint Resolution 78, introduced by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKellar]. As I read that joint resolution, it authorizes the sale of cotton at the present market price regardless of the loan value. Is the Senator familiar with the movement to have that joint resolution considered by the committee, and adopted by the Senate?

Mr. GEORGE. I did not know about it. I may say to the Senator that I did know, and I have acted upon the information, that some plan was in contemplation for the exportation of cotton held under Government loans.

Mr. TAFT. Let me read the joint resolution and see whether the Senator considers it does have that effect. The joint resolution authorizes the Commodity Credit Corporation "to dispose of commodities held as security for loans made to producers by allowing the producers to redeem such commodities upon payment of the market value thereof as determined by the Corporation less such amounts as the Corporation may determine as proper compensation."

Would not that in effect permit the Corporation to sell that cotton by releasing it to the owners? Is not that the purpose of the joint resolution?

Mr. GEORGE. I would think so; but the purpose of the joint resolution also might be to permit the sale of it at home to domestic buyers, as well as to foreign buyers.

Mr. BARKLEY. Of course, Mr. President, they can release the cotton now if the borrower pays what was loaned on it. They can do as they please with it. The only difference the joint resolution would make would be that it would authorize the Commodity Credit Corporation to sell the cotton for less than the amount the Government has loaned on it.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I had hoped to discuss briefly the merits of the resolution. I had thought that no question would arise with respect to the policy of the Government, so far as the cotton now held under the loans was concerned.

I do wish to say that some other countries with which we have been dealing are interested in cotton as well as ourselves. If the United States subsidizes cotton to the foreign trade, at one single stroke all of the good will of the cotton-producing countries in South America, including Brazil, may disappear, because Brazil, for example, produces cotton; she has her trade agreements; she has entered into a family relationship with the United States, so to speak. If the United States sells cotton to British, to Japanese, to French, to German, to Italian spinners by means of a subsidy—that is to say, at a reduced price—if that method is used to stimulate exports, certainly we will violate every agreement we have with other countries, which countries also have raw cotton, and undoubtedly the price of cotton will go down if we subsidize the sale of it to the foreign trade.

Not only is that true, but we will be compelled to raise tariffs or quotas in order to protect the American market for American manufactured products. We cannot raise these quotas and put them into operation, nor can we increase tariffs under any provision of our tariff act overnight. It takes months to accomplish that end. It takes a long time to do it. We have agreements certainly with Great Britain, certainly we are not free to invoke quotas or to raise tariffs against not only our neighboring nations to the South of us, which have these agreements with us, but with respect to Great Britain itself, which would be vitally affected.

Mr. President, not only is that so, but, as I was saying when interrupted, the moment we subsidize the sale of cotton in foreign trade, we destroy the very integrity of cotton as an article of commerce; we make of it an article of politics and economy. We will use it to suit our economy or to suit our political ends, and at this time, above all times in the history of the world, why should we subsidize the foreign buyer of American cotton in order to induce him to own it, to take it out of the hands of the Government here? Why should we?

The distinguished Senator from Kentucky says, How are we going to know when this emergency passes, or when this international crisis is at an end? I think we will know it. I think we know that one does exist, and that it is one of real moment. It is not inconceivable that the economic structure of Europe may collapse and drag us down. Here is one of the most valuable assets America can have, in peace or in war, to wit, an entire crop of American cotton, and why give it away in whole or in part, why subsidize its sale to Europe under existing conditions? Why not say, "You shall not have that cotton unless you pay us what we have in the cotton," at least until the Secretary of Agriculture comes to the Congress and has the advice of the Congress, at least until this world crisis shall have passed?

Mr. President, in my judgment, it would be the most monumental stupidity of time for us to give away in whole or in part a whole crop of American cotton to European nations, under existing conditions.

On the first day this rumor got abroad, cotton broke more than a half a cent a pound, and on the following day the Liverpool market went down half a cent a pound, and therefore I presented my resolution, with some feeling that the Senate at least should express it to be the sense of the Senate that we would not subsidize foreign purchases, but that we would adopt the philosophy, the good philosophy, of Mr. Wallace himself in his September speech in Texas last year, when he stated that if we subsidized anyone we would subsidize our own people, or, to use his own language, "would give to the American consumer and the American producer for once 'a break.'"

Mr. President, it is not possible to sell cotton abroad at a price below that for which it is sold to our own mills, and fully protect those mills by tariffs or by quotas. It is not possible to protect the cotton industry fully by quotas or tariffs without a long delay, involving months and perhaps years of study. Cotton, since it is an essential part of some 30 different commodities, or products, does not go alone into textiles. We would be utterly powerless to protect the American market for the American producer and manufacturer and for the labor which is at work for those producers here under any quota or any tariff we could raise under existing law

Mr. President, do I need to argue a fact which the whole cotton trade, which every economist and every merchant must know, that if we subsidize the sale of the raw cotton to the foreign trade, that the business of the American manufacturer in the foreign countries must suffer? How could we protect it? We would have to turn around and give to him a subsidy on all the cotton which he exported, and that would be only a clumsy, an inefficient, and an imperfect way of protecting the American manufacturers of cotton.

Mr. President, if the proposed scheme is put into effect and if it does succeed in greatly stimulating American exports in cotton, it will seriously cripple if not destroy the great bulk of American manufacturers of cotton, the cotton merchants and retail merchants who have stocks in hand made of cotton, the price of which we were trying to protect in order to aid and assist our producers.

Moreover, it will destroy all those cotton producers who have held their own cotton, and it will destroy the small buyer everywhere in America who has any appreciable amount of cotton.

Not only that, but it will really do the great shippers little good, because, as I have already said, it will seriously challenge and ultimately destroy the integrity of the great commodity which through long years has furnished America the balance of trade. It will destroy the commodity that enters into and is a vital part of the economy of every cotton-growing State. It will destroy an industry which, in order to meet the demands and requirements and to subscribe to a farm program, has already had its output reduced, constantly reduced. Now it has to sit idly by while the foreign market itself is being destroyed by the use of a subsidy or by the subsidizing of the price of that commodity to the foreign trade.

If we subsidize American cotton to the foreign trade, we may expect instability of the world price of cotton affecting our own price. Whether the world price fixes our price here or the American production of cotton itself controls the price, is immaterial. We may expect trade war of a kind that we have not seen before. We may expect to find that the Latin-American republics which produce cotton and which are vitally interested in this matter will regard trade pacts made with them as insincere. The United States cannot afford to have its neighboring nations to the south question our sincerity. If the State Department were consulted, I am sure it would say that in no circumstances ought we to resort to this scheme to get rid of our cotton. Mr. President, we have $15,000,000,000 of gold buried in the hills of Kentucky, as we understand, and yet this Government has the jitters because it cannot immediately sell one crop of American cotton against which it is carrying a loan. The Government has some $600,000,000 invested in the cotton. I wish to see the cotton sold. I wish to see it move in an orderly fashion. However, there is but one fair way to do it, Mr. President, and that is to announce its orderly distribution 1 year from this July 1, or at least at the end of the next marketing year. That will protect those who make the American market for us, who support and sustain the American industry; that will protect the merchant, the small buyer, and the large buyer, and that kind of a program, Mr. President, will also protect the producer, because the producer of cotton is in a poor way when his foreign market is taken away from him; is seriously threatened, when he himself has consented to such drastic reductions in his production, until now under ordinary circumstances and weather conditions he can hope to produce no more than an elevenor twelve-million-bale crop.

Why sell it? It is not the sale that someone wants. It is a sale to the foreign trade at a discount, at the cost of the whole cotton industry of the Nation, and at the cost of the national economy. Why sell it? Why give away 2 cents a pound on it, or 3 cents a pound on it, or all of it? Why not keep it until the emergency has passed?

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HERRING in the chair). Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. GEORGE. I yield.

Mr. SMITH. I may suggest to the Senator that if the Government officials are so anxious to reduce the surplus. they will find in the bill I have introduced that I have offered a plan which worked before. Why not substitute the present existing cotton for production in 1939—that is, turn it back to the farmers at a reasonable price, for it is now below the cost of production. If we are going to lower the surplus, let us turn it back to them in lieu of production, at a reasonable figure, and whatever rise there is subsequent to the reduction of the surplus, the farmer will be the beneficiary. Why not give it to our people?

Mr. GEORGE. Exactly. Why not give the American consumer and the American producer a break for once, as the Secretary asked in Texas last September?

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GEORGE. I yield.

Mr. NEELY. The Senator from Georgia in his very illuminating address stated, as I understood him, that the Government owns or holds a lien on $600,000,000 worth of cotton.

Mr. GEORGE. The Government has a loan totaling approximately $600,000,000 on the eleven and one-half mil-

Mr. NEELY. At present prices, how many bales of cotton would that sum purchase?

Mr. GEORGE. At the American price from eleven million to eleven and a half million bales.

Mr. NEELY. About the total estimated production for the

Mr. GEORGE. Just about. The estimated production for 1939, with fair-weather conditions, might be placed at around eleven and one-half million bales.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GEORGE. I yield. Mr. BARKLEY. Assume that the Government keeps the eleven and a half million bales it now has, and makes loans on the 1939 crop, which I have understood is estimated at around 12,000,000 bales—but whether it is eleven or twelve million bales is not material—how much additional cotton would the Government have under its control at the end of the present year and in the coming cotton season, if we produce 11,000,000 bales this year?

Mr. GEORGE. At the end of the 1939 season?

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes. Mr. GEORGE. That would, of course, depend entirely on the price of cotton. If the loan value was higher than the price it would go under the loan, of course.

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes. In other words, all of it would go under.

Mr. GEORGE. Yes. Mr. BARKLEY. So that we would have at the end of the 1939 season practically twice as much cotton as we now have in the hands of the Government?

Mr. GEORGE. That would be true, Mr. President,

Mr. BARKLEY. That is, assuming that all producers applied for the loan and received it.

Mr. GEORGE. Exactly, Mr. President. Of course, if all of it went under the loan we would have approximately twice as much, but I have already stated to the distinguished Senator from Oregon that those of us who are interested in this problem are simply trying to take the initial step that will enable us to keep cotton out of the loan in 1939. We cannot take all the steps at one time, Mr. President. We do not have it in our power to do so.

If anything is now done that will break the price of cotton down to 6 or 7 cents or 5 cents you may take it for granted that cotton will go back under the loan. But if you let us hold the cotton up, if you will let us prevent at least the destruction of the price of cotton until we can get to another piece of legislation, which I think the cotton Senators ultimately must agree upon, we will be able to avoid the covering under the loan of any cotton from the 1939 crop.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GEORGE. I yield.

Mr. LEWIS. I come from the corn country. I do not understand all the features touching the cotton. I am, naturally, solicitous that no precedent be set as to cotton or any other substance which in its very nature will influence or control the operations with respect to corn.

I ask my able friend from Georgia if he would define for me what he means by the word "subsidy." His interesting address has rather caught my fancy as well as bewildered my intellect. In what way does the selling to a foreigner subsidize him, and what is it that causes the subsidy? I should like to have my able friend define that, because I am really seeking intelligence on the point.

Mr. GEORGE. I think the distinguished Senator from Illinois must have been absent from the Chamber when I commenced my remarks. A subsidy, of course, is simply a premium paid to the foreign purchaser to accept or take cotton, if the product is cotton, and that is what we are, of course, discussing. As I understand the plan, it is simply this, I may say to the Senator from Illinois: That upon the release of the Government-owned cotton by the Commodity Credit Corporation it will be accompanied by a certificate, which certificate will entitle the foreign purchaser to a subsidy, to cash amounting to two or more cents per pound. In other words, when the cotton is released, if it is purchased by a British spinner, or by a spinner in Japan, or by a spinner in Germany, or elsewhere in Europe, anywhere in the foreign trade, that purchaser will receive a rebate, or a subsidy, of, say, 2 cents per pound. I am not stating the exact amount of the subsidy, because about that I do not know.

I may say to the Senator from Illinois that this matter involves very much the same philosophy of which he complained a few days ago, to wit, the published notice of a transaction between the international bank and one of the South American countries. What I wish to do, Mr. President, is simply to say to the Department of Agriculture and to any other agency of the Government whose cooperation is necessary, "You cannot sell the cotton now held in the Government loan below its cost to the Government unless you come back to the Congress." It is true that a Senate resolution is not a law. It is merely a Senate resolution expressing the sense of the Senate that the foreign purchaser should not receive a preference or a subsidy in the purchase of our cotton.

Mr. President, I realized that this matter could not be disposed of before the expiration of the morning hour. I have now concluded my remarks. Of course, they have been broken by the interruptions of those who are interested in the subject matter. I wish to say again that the whole purpose of the resolution is to state the sense of the Senate on the subsidization of cotton in foreign trade. If subsidies must be granted, let them be granted to American manufacturers, American laborers, and American producers. They should not be granted to the foreign buyers of American cotton, especially at a time when no one can foresee what lies ahead in Europe, or, for that matter, in other parts of the world.

There could be no possible reason for an unreasonable desire upon the part of our Government to stimulate the export to foreign traders and manufacturers of raw cotton, an invaluable material in peace and in war. There could be no possible reason why that course should be followed when no man can foresee, and no one can foretell, what may happen in world affairs.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GEORGE. I am about to yield the floor, but I yield to the Senator.

Mr. LUCAS. I should like to ask the able Senator from Georgia one question with respect to the resolution. My question deals with the resolving part, wherein it is stated that it is the sense of the Senate that pending the world crisis no American cotton should be sold, and so forth.

I should like some interpretation of what the Senator has in mind with respect to the world crisis and some information as to whether or not there is any limitation of time upon the world crisis, and just about how long the Government might be compelled to hold eleven and one-half million bales of cotton, assuming that the price did not reach the world price.

Mr. GEORGE. No one could answer that question, Mr. President. Of course, "world crisis" may be a rather indefinite term. However, we have been asked to increase our armaments upon the possibilities growing out of the world crisis. We have been asked to stimulate our national defense. We have been asked to take precautionary measures to put our country in order, we must assume, both for war and for peace. We seem to have a fairly good sense of an unsettled and abnormal condition in Europe.

I wish to direct the Senator's attention to the fact that the provision of the resolution is not against the sale but against the sale at a price below the cost to the Government.

Mr. LUCAS. I appreciate that.

Mr. GEORGE. No one could fix an absolute limitation.

Mr. LUCAS. In the resolution there is no limitation of time on how long the Government will be compelled to hold the cotton.

Mr. GEORGE. At cost.

Mr. LUCAS. At cost.

Mr. GEORGE. That is true.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GEORGE. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. In that connection, evidently, what is troubling the Senator from Illinois is the same thing that troubled me earlier in the day, when I inquired to the same effect. The resolution states that it is the sense of the Senate that pending the world crisis none of this cotton shall be sold under certain circumstances. The resolution does not say who is to be the judge of when the crisis shall end. If the resolution is to be passed at all, does not the Senator think there ought to be a time limitation on it? For instance. I assume that before the adjournment of this Congress some effort will be made to solve the cotton problem; and if it is solved, of course, the solution will deal with the cotton now held by the Government.

Mr. GEORGE. I think so.

Mr. BARKLEY. Such action might make this sort of resolution unnecessary. Would not the Senator feel that a time limit of 3 months, or 6 months, or at least during the remaining days of this Congress, ought to be long enough at least to give Congress time to deal with the subject? If the resolution should be passed, it would be the sense of the Senate that pending the crisis, which may be 10 years or 5 years, although we hope not, none of the cotton referred to should be sold under the circumstances outlined, notwithstanding the fact that an act of Congress might be passed, or some understanding might be reached among the Government agencies, Congress, and the Executive, as to the solution of the matter. Does not the Senator feel that if the resolution is to be adopted it ought to fix a time limit which would give Congress time enough to deal with the subject, so that if it did deal with it there would be no need for the continuation of the sense of the Senate on the subject beyond that date?

Mr. GEORGE. I think there would be no more difficulty on the point the Senator from Kentucky makes than on the other question he raised, as to the word "directed" instead of "requested." I think there would be no disagreement on that score. However, I should not want to subscribe to a policy of granting a subsidy on raw cotton sold in foreign trade, even if we had no abnormal or unusual world conditions.

Mr. BARKLEY. I understand the Senator objects to that policy as a solution of the cotton problem.

Mr. GEORGE. Yes.

Mr. BARKLEY. Either temporarily or permanently?

Mr. GEORGE. Yes. However, with reference to the existing unsettled and disturbed condition of world affairs, the difficulty can be very easily obviated, either by fixing some time or providing that the resolution shall remain in effect only until the matter is again referred to Congress.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, the main object of the resolution is to forbid whatever department has the matter in charge subsidizing the sale of our cotton abroad at a lower price than is made to our own people.

Mr. GEORGE. Of course, the resolution is intended to apply to an immediate situation and condition.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, while I am on my feet I wish to say that I shall discuss the matter when the bill which I have introduced shall come before the Senate. I am now waiting for the action of the House on a matter which is very pertinent to that bill.

I deplore the fact that so few Members of the Senate understand the cotton question and the system of marketing cotton which has grown up over a long period of years. It is necessary for someone who does understand it to try to bring about legislation which is in accord with the system of marketing, without bringing disaster to the producers and the consumers. I think, Mr. President, that with what knowledge I have of the subject I can at least make the subject clear enough to the Members of the Senate so that they will understand that the question is not as complicated as it seems to be.

I think the bill I have introduced offers a solution. Whether or not the figures in the bill are workable will depend upon the sense of the Senate. However, I am of the opinion that in the face of the law, if we are going to subsidize anybody, we should subsidize the producer. My bill provides that the Government will guarantee the producer up to 75 percent of parity. Whatever the world price is, let him sell his cotton and the Government will supplement what he receives with a subsidy. That method is direct, and without complication. If cotton were to bring 9 cents a pound, and it is figured that 75 percent of parity is 12 cents, then the Government would subsidize the farmer to the extent of 3 cents, which would permit the farmer to sell his cotton wherever he pleased, take his sales account and go to his agent and receive a check for the difference. I have also proposed in the bill that the loan should be abandoned by making it more attractive to take the subsidy. I fear that the loan feature is disastrous.

I am merely outlining the bill. I shall take time later to explain it more fully. Let me outline another feature of the bill. In view of the fact that, according to the Department, it costs 11 cents plus to make a pound of cotton, I propose to take some of the cotton we have on hand, which we want to get rid of, and say to a farmer, "In lieu of your contemplated production under your allotment for 1939 you may take 50 or 60 percent in the form of the cotton already on hand." In other words, if I make 100 bales of cotton, the Government will say, after July 1, "We will give you 50 bales of cotton if you will guarantee not to reproduce that many bales on any land owned or controlled by you."

That procedure seems to me to be fair. The farmer produced the cotton in 1938 and obtained a loan on it far below the cost of production. The Government may offer the producer that cotton in lieu of production, without prejudice to his acreage. The committee fixed the amount at which the producer would take such cotton at 3 cents. I think he would take it even now at 6 cents or 7 cents, because every farmer knows he cannot make it for less than 12 cents; and if the present surplus is returned to the producer at a reasonable figure in lieu of production we will help him, help the Government, and still maintain an American supply of cotton for the world.

I have outlined the two principal features of the bill which I have introduced.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. SMITH. Yes.

Mr. McNARY. Is it the present purpose of the Senator from South Carolina to bring his bill before the Senate for

Mr. SMITH. I am going to bring it before the Senate for consideration, but I am waiting for the action of the House.

Mr. McNARY. The Senator was going to bring up the bill a few days ago, but he did not do so.

Mr. SMITH. That is true; because the House began to take such action that it looked as though it might help matters; and I have tried, as the Senator from Oregon has, to use discretion.

Mr. McNARY. I thank the Senator. I have always tried to use discretion as a guide. I am glad the Senator from South Carolina occasionally follows me.

Mr. SMITH. Or the Senator from Oregon follows me; I do not know which. Honors are even.

Mr. McNARY. Seriously, is it the purpose of the Senator from South Carolina today or tomorrow, when the first opportunity arises, to make his bill the unfinished business?

Mr. SMITH. Just as soon as the House acts; and I am informed that it will act tomorrow. As soon as it does so, I am going to make an effort to have the bill made the unfinished business

Mr. McNARY. Just as soon as the House acts on what?

Mr. SMITH. I understand that the House will act, and I give notice-

Mr. McNARY. The House often acts; but acts on what? Mr. SMITH. On the farm bill.

Mr. McNARY. The Senator's bill?

Mr. SMITH. No, oh no.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, if the Senator from South Carolina will yield at that point, the House now has under consideration the agricultural appropriation bill, providing for appropriations of a billion and some odd dollars, in which the question of parity appropriations is involved.

Mr. SMITH. That is correct.

Mr. BARKLEY. It is about the only controversial matter pending in the bill.

Mr. SMITH. That is correct.

Mr. BARKLEY. I understand that the Senator from South Carolina may be governed to some extent by what the House does on that subject.

Mr. SMITH. That is exactly correct. If the House appropriates $250,000,000 for parity paymentsMr. McNARY. I assume that that is the bill of which the Senator spoke. He did not say what bill he referred to. I know there is a provision in the appropriation bill carrying $250,000,000 for parity payments. If the parity provision should stay in the appropriation bill and come to the Senate, is it then the purpose of the Senator from South Carolina to move to make his bill the unfinished business?

Mr. SMITH. Yes. Mr. McNARY. The Senator is going forward here with his bill, irrespective of what the House does?

Mr. SMITH. I am going to go forward with certain modifications of the bill if certain things happen in the House. I mean that I may ask to have some modifications made of my bill to conform to what the House does. Is that plain enough?

Mr. McNARY. Then the Senator means that if the agricultural appropriation bill passes, and the item of $250,000,-000 for parity payments remains therein, and the bill is messaged to the Senate, the Senator then may modify his bill and ask us to consider it here?

Mr. SMITH. Yes; I may modify it in one particular.

Mr. McNARY. Does the modification affect the loan provision or the subsidy provision?

Mr. SMITH. The subsidy provision.

Mr. McNARY. The subsidy provision now calls for 3 cents a pound on cotton that has been impounded.

Mr. SMITH. Five cents.

Mr. McNARY. I think it is 3 cents.

Mr. SMITH. Oh, that is the 3 cents to turn the cotton back to the farmers.

Mr. McNARY. That is what I say. Does the provision work in this fashion? I am a cottonmaker. I have impounded with the Commodity Credit Corporation my cotton, upon which they have loaned me sums aggregating, carry-over and all, 11 cents a pound. I go to the Commodity Credit Corporation and give them 3 cents a pound, and they turn back to me the cotton upon which they hold a lien of 11 cents. Is not that correct?

Mr. SMITH. That is correct. That is wherein I said I thought the provision might be modified, and I believe they would take the cotton at 7 cents. It was not my proposition to make it 3 cents.

Mr. McNARY. I think they would take it at 7 cents, too. Mr. SMITH. The 3-cent proposition was not mine. It was the committee's proposition. The original bill had a provision for 6 cents.

Mr. McNARY. Well, that is fair; but it seems to me strange that a man who owes the Government $10 or $11 could take $3 and get back his note and pay his obligation.

Mr. SMITH. Yes; and the Government of the man who has worked like a dog in the field and produced cotton at 12 cents is trying to sell it at 6 cents.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President-

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, the hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, I understand that the Senator from Georgia does not intend to press his resolution at the moment; and, in view of the program to take up the War Department appropriation bill, the resolution will go to the calendar subject to a similar motion when the Senator can obtain recognition for that purpose.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, that is true. I had hoped the majority leader might suggest that after the appropriation bill had been taken up we might recur to the resolution.

Mr. BARKLEY. I shall be glad to talk to the Senator about it.

Mr. GEORGE. I shall be glad to let the resolution go

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, the parliamentary situation, as I understand it, is that there is no unfinished business. Therefore, the resolution does not go to the calendar at 2 o'clock but goes on continuously in the absence of unfinished business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is correct.

Mr. McNARY. The subject matter before us now is the resolution of the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. BARKLEY. That is true; but I understood that the Senator from Georgia had indicated his willingness to lay the resolution aside temporarily in order that the War Department appropriation bill might be taken up. I have no objection to recurring to the resolution. There was some conversation here as to language that might be worked out a little more carefully if it were done deliberately in accordance with the suggestion I made; but there is nothing before the Senate that would prevent the resolution being considered further at this time.

Mr. GEORGE. I ask that the resolution be laid aside temporarily.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. McNARY. Does that mean for the day? I should prefer to have the resolution go over for the day. I have not had an opportunity to consider it at all.

Mr. BARKLEY. I have to go to a conference in a short

Mr. GEORGE. I agree with the Senator on that point. I think it will mean that the resolution will go over for the

Mr. McNARY. With the explicit understanding that the resolution goes over until tomorrow, I shall make no objection to the request.

Mr. GEORGE. I make my suggestion definite by asking that the resolution be temporarily laid aside, and be not again taken up during this day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Georgia? The Chair hears none, and the resolution will go over.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, I had intended to address the Senate on the pending resolution; but, since it has gone over, I shall defer my remarks until a later date.

WAR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATIONS

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 4630, the War Department appropriation bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Oklahoma.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 4630) making appropriations for the Military Establishment for the fiscal year ending June 30. 1940, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Appropriations with amendments.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I ask unanimous consent that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with and that it be read for amendment, the amendments of the committee to be first considered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered. The clerk will read

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read the bill.

The first amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the heading "Salaries, War Department," on page 4, line 2, after the word "Provided", to strike out "That until the compensation of incumbents of positions on July 1, 1939, whose annual rate of compensation on such date is $1,800 or less, and who, under the provisions of the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, merit an increase in compensation, has been increased in accordance with such law, no part of such sum shall be available for increasing the compensation of the incumbent of any position receiving a higher rate of pay on such date, except in consequence of a change in position or a reallocation of position: Provided further", so as to read:

In all, salaries, War Department, $5,026,885: Provided, That the number of warrant officers and enlisted men on duty in the offices number of warrant officers and enlisted men on duty in the offices of the Chiefs of Ordnance, Engineers, Coast Artilery, Field Artillery, Cavalry, Infantry, and Chaplains on March 5, 1934, shall not be increased, and in lieu of warrant officers and enlisted men whose services in such offices shall have been terminated for any cause prior to July 1, 1940, their places may be filled by civilians, for the pay of whom, in accordance with the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, the appropriation "Pay of the Army" shall be available.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, this is an important appropriation bill. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-five Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present. The question is on agreeing to the first amendment reported by the com-

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I think perhaps a brief statement relative to the committee's recommendations regarding the War Department appropriation bill might not be amiss.

When the bill came to the Senate it carried items totaling $499,857,936. The Senate committee has recommended the addition of $13,330,946 to that sum. So the bill as reported to the Senate, if agreed to by the Congress, will carry a total of $513,188,882.

The bill as reported to the Senate is still $7,116,986 under the estimates for 1940. The main item in the bill as recommended to the Senate is $6,332,480 for the purchase of new machinery for arsenals. The War Department asked for a total of $16,000,000 for that purpose. It asked for $10,000,000 for the coming year and for $6,000,000 for the second year. The Senate committee recommends that we give the War Department first the amount they requested for the second year, which is the sum of $6,000,000 for the purchase of new machinery for the several arsenals located throughout the United States.

The evidence before the committee shows that this machinery in the main is 20 years old. Some of it is much older than that. It is out of date, entirely antiquated, and, while it is being used, it is not considered to be economical. So that is the main addition made to the bill by the Senate committee.

The second addition of consequence, though not perhaps in amount, is a million dollars added to the bill for experimental research in aviation.

Another item is for the finance department, $1,495,000 for the payment of additional officers provided for by the Sen-

Another item of $1,355,000 is for the construction of camps for the National Guard. There is an additional item of $610,000 for the current camp located at Fort Sill, Okla., which, added to the National Guard amount, makes it approximately $2,000,000.

The bill provides for the modernization of 40 of our existing 75-millimeter guns. The Congress provided for the modernization of a few of those guns last year. These guns are now on hand, and they are in perfectly good condition, save that they are not what the authorities call "modern." They have iron tires on the wheels, for example; the guns do not have a very large swing right and left, and the elevation is retarded. In the modernization of the guns new wheels, with rubber tires, are provided, so that the guns can be transported more rapidly. Secondly, the swing of the guns right and left is increased materially, and the elevation is corrected so that the guns can be raised and lowered. The range of the guns after modernization is 13,000 yards, and without modernization the range is only about 7,000 yards.

The cost of the modernization is $8,000 per gun. A new gun costs $25,000. The appropriation is for the purpose only of modernizing these guns as fast as we can do it with our limited financing. Forty guns at $8,000 per gun makes up the item provided for in the bill.

The bill also provides for the employment of some 31 additional flight surgeons. This question has been at issue in the Congress for the past several sessions. The bill as it came from the House provided for only 5 flight surgeons. The Senate committee added 31, making a total of 36.

When doctors enter the service as a rule they are qualified to become flight surgeons. A flight surgeon is a physician who is an expert on the condition of the pilot when he takes a plane up in the air. In order for the flight surgeon to watch the pilots and get their reaction in the air, the surgeons must go up in the air with the pilots. Before these doctors go up in the air they must, of course, agree to go up, and heretofore they have received added compensation of $1,440 a year for their services as flight surgeons. The committee recommends that we increase the number from 5 to 36, but cut down the extra pay from $1,440 to $720 a year. We make that recommendation in the bill.

Another item at issue between the House and the Senate is over the improvement of an airfield in the Panama Canal Zone. At the present time we have two fields in Panama, France Field and Albrook Field. France Field is in a bad state of repair, and the War Department is abandoning the field, and at the same time they desire funds with which to build up Albrook Field. So, if this item shall become law we will have one first-class airfield in the Canal Zone, known as Albrook Field, and France Field will be abandoned. The House eliminated the Budget item of $1,500,000 for new buildings and new equipment necessary to put Albrook Field in the condition desired by the War Department.

I think that in the main those are the amendments, excepting some minor ones. The Senate committee recommends the creation of 54 additional R. O. T. C. units. I think that every college of importance in the United States wrote to the committee asking for an expansion of the R. O. T. C. activity, and, pursuant to those requests from the colleges of the country, the committee recommends the creation of 54 additional R. O. T. C. units. The expense in toto will amount to about $1,000,000.

In that million dollars we have the expense of the selection of 234 additional officers. The War Department reports that they are now short 234 officers who are necessary to man the existing R. O. T. C. units. That means they are running short of officers, and that noncommissioned men are now doing the work in the colleges where there should be commissioned officers to do the work.

I think this statement in the main covers the items, unless there shall be some questions as the amendments are read.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. FRAZIER. I did not understand how much of an increase over the House provision was called for in connection with the R. O. T. C. units.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. If the Senator will turn to page 4 of the report, he will find that under the Reserve Officers' Training Corps there is provision for 1,435 additional advanced-course students, amounting to $138,702, for the installation of 37 new senior units, at a cost of $377,657, and for the installation of 17 new junior units, at a cost of $136,000. The other items are for the necessary number of enlisted men to fill up the personnel of the units.

Mr. FRAZIER. What will the total cost be?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. For everything, it is $766,569.

INCREASE OF APPROPRIATIONS FOR WORKS PROGRESS ADMINISTRATION

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, on March 16 I introduced Senate Joint Resolution 94, proposing to deal with the President's $875,000,000 emergency relief budget for W. P. A. on a basis which would not require any additional appropriation at the present time, yet which would permit the President and Administrator Harrington to go on with their own uninterrupted program for the time being. I suggested that these results could be obtained by the simple process of shortening the period for which our January appropriation of $725,000,000 was made. It was made originally to cover the period to June 30, the end of the fiscal year. I offered Senate Joint Resolution 94, which would shorten this period to May 31. This would have accomplished three things:

First. It would have given W. P. A. all the funds sought by the President up to May 31 and permitted W. P. A. to proceed with its own program instead of involving the extraordinary lay-offs threatened unless additional appropriations were made before April 1.

Second. It would have obviated the necessity for any additional W. P. A. appropriation at the present time under the stress of demand for action prior to April 1. No additional appropriation would have been necessary until June.

Third. Thus it would have given Congress 2 more months to study the whole W. P. A. situation, and either specify some of the economies which it had in mind when it cut $150,000,000 off the first appropriation or to perfect an entirely new substitute relief system.

Mr. President, my purpose in rising this afternoon is to say that since Senate Joint Resolution 94 was introduced I have been in communication with Administrator Harrington on the whole subject. I now have a letter from him which states that the $725,000,000 already appropriated will not be exhausted until June 7, instead of May 31, the date carried in the original joint resolution. Therefore there is no need for the supplemental appropriation, whatever its size, until June 7. I am correspondingly amending my original joint resolution, therefore, and presenting it in new form to include the date of June 7. I summarize again, briefly, to this extent: I assert that if the measure under which the original $725,000,000 was appropriated for W. P. A. is changed to permit the full expenditures up to June 7, instead of June 30, the entire W. P. A. program can proceed precisely as the President and Colonel Harrington have outlined it and wish to have it proceed. That can be done without the appropriation of another single nickel to W. P. A. until June 7. Therefore Congress has 2 full months in which to comprehend this problem. Instead of proceeding on the theory that we have an April the 1st emergency which we must meet under pressure, we have 2 months in which to determine what ought to be the subsequent final status of the relief situation in the United States.

I ask unanimous consent to be allowed to introduce the new joint resolution, which I ask to have referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

(See Joint Resolution 103, under its appropriate heading, introduced by Mr. VANDENBERG and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.)

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I also ask that there be printed at this point in my remarks Colonel Harrington's letter, in which he indicates that the appropriation already in hand will be sufficient to June 7, 1939.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Michigan?

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Works Progress Administration, Washington, D. C., March 24, 1939.

The Honorable ARTHUR H. VANDENBERG,

MY DEAR SENATOR VANDENBERG: Acknowledgment is made of your letter dated March 23, 1939, requesting information as to the date the Works Progress Administration would reach an obligation point of $725,000,000 if the program maintained its operating schedule as contemplated at the time the President requested an appropriation of $875,000,000 to complete the current fiscal year.

The request for $875,000,000 was predicated upon maintenance of the following employment schedule:

February	3, 000, 000
March	3, 000, 000
April	2,900,000
May	2, 800, 000
June	2, 700, 000

On the above basis and under normal operating conditions, the Works Progress Administration would have exhausted the $725,-000,000 by June 7, 1939. The additional $150,000,000 would be necessary to continue operations between June 7 and June 30, 1939, in accordance with the schedule proposed by the President.

Yours very truly,

F. C. HARRINGTON, Administrator.

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, I have something to say on the subject just referred to by the Senator from Michigan.

The Gallup poll, taken recently, shows that 83 percent of the Democrats who are on relief favor Roosevelt, and 74 percent of the lower-income group, including "reliefers," favor Roosevelt. This is undoubtedly due to the fact that these Democrats think he is a great humanitarian. The definition of a humanitarian is as follows:

One who is actively concerned in promoting the welfare of "his kind"—a philanthropist.

If the President qualifies within this definition, and if he and Commissioner Harrington, of the W. P. A., wanted to aid humanity in the broad sense, they would come out now and say to the Conference of Mayors and to the W. P. A. workers:

"We agree with Senator Vandenberg's joint resolution and suggest that Congress pass the same. This joint resolution amends the original grant of $725,000,000 by allocating its use to the period ending May 31, instead of June 30, thus making it unnecessary to cut the W. P. A. workers; and thus, also, giving Congress and W. P. A. further opportunity to study the situation."

Have the President and Colonel Harrington said anything of the kind? They have not. Instead of that, letters and telegrams come in from "the mayors of cities" in my own State and from other groups, because these people are fearful that a large number of W. P. A. folks will have to be put off the pay roll on April 1.

Now, let us get this straight: If the President should approve this joint resolution, it would stop the fear and the worry and the distress which are, in a large measure, the result of propaganda. If this joint resolution should become law-and it would become law if the President and Colonel Harrington approved it—then the President and the W. P. A. would have the full fund that was to have been expended up to June 30. They would have this fund to expend up to May 31, and thus the immediate crisis would be eliminated. I say emphatically that the poor people on W. P. A. in my State are panicky over this situation, and I am saying this as a challenge to the Executive of this Nation to urge the enactment of the joint resolution introduced by the Senator from Michigan. In other words, it would eliminate the allegedly pressing need for the appropriation of the additional $150,-000,000, and it would give Congress over 2 months in which to see if a better system could not be evolved. If that could not be done, and if appropriations were necessary, Congress could make those additional appropriations in May. But we have heard nothing from the White House in relation to this resolution. The machinery of the Democratic Party has been kept well oiled to keep the 84 percent of the Democratic relief votes for the President.

The talk about economy, so far as the President and his advisers are concerned, is "simply talk." Everyone feels that if a little economy were used in the W. P. A. money it would be sufficient to last until June 30. The President has said that if you cut 17.4 percent in the appropriation it would mean a cut of 33½ percent in the number employed. W. P. A. had better look to its overhead if that statement is correct. In other words, if the appropriation is cut 17.4 percent, at once the number of employed is cut 33½ percent.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Mr. WILEY. I yield.

Mr. BRIDGES. As I understand, the Senator's position is that first and foremost it would be a step in the right direction if there should be a halt in the so-called appeasement program of the President, which has not developed or materialized, and which has been just a vague, vacant gesture to date, first to cut the overhead and waste and this money would last; but that, in view of the fear that is being created, the second best thing would be the adoption of the Vandenberg joint resolution, which would allow the use of this money up to June 7 and allow the Congress to study the question. Is that the Senator's position?

Mr. WILEY. Yes. I thank the Senator for his contribution. In other words, what we need in this country if we are "going places" is to reestablish the morale of our people, and we cannot do it by disseminating false knowledge. We must get the truth to them.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WILEY. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. Just as I came into the Chamber the Senator spoke about the question of overhead.

Mr. WILEY. Yes.

Mr. BARKLEY. I think it would be appropriate to suggest to the Senator at this point that out of every dollar spent by the W. P. A. 85 cents goes directly into the pockets of the employees; $11\frac{1}{2}$ cents goes for the purchase of material; and $3\frac{1}{2}$ cents goes to overhead.

Mr. WILEY. May I ask the Senator where he got his

Mr. BARKLEY. I got the figures from the director of the W. P. A. I do not think there is any serious dispute about that. Of course, part of the $11\frac{1}{2}$ cents that go for materials goes indirectly to labor.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question at this point?

Mr. WILEY. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Does the Senator from Kentucky know whether this particular overhead percentage is merely the general supervisory overhead, or whether it includes the project overhead also?

Mr. BARKLEY. I am not able to tell the Senator whether it includes all the supervisors, the timekeepers, and the area engineers who are on the ground, on the job, supervising the project itself. But the entire overhead, including the employees in Washington and the supervisory officers in the States, amounts to 3½ cents.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Of course, the other figure could be a substantial addition in overhead, and probably is.

Mr. BARKLEY. If the local engineers, the local timekeepers, and the supervisors of the individual projects are not to be regarded as employees in the sense that they get this money into their pockets, that would make a different figure for calculation.

Mr. VANDENBERG. The Senator has no percentage on that point available?

Mr. BARKLEY. No; I have no percentage on that point available.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WILEY. I yield.

Mr. HATCH. I made inquiry about the subject which is being discussed just now, and which was dealt with in the question asked by the Senator from Kentucky a moment ago. My information is that, including all nonrelief work of every kind, the overhead is less than 5 percent.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WILEY. I yield.

Mr. BRIDGES. If the figures which have been given here by the Senator from Kentucky are true, certainly the picture which the country has gotten and I have gotten, and which certainly many other Members of the Congress have gotten, is not an accurate one, because certain figures were developed in the House proceedings indicating that the average cost of the W. P. A. worker per year was $994, and the cost of material, as the Senator says, is limited to a certain percentage or a certain figure, and it is only necessary to multiply the number of weeks and the pay of a W. P. A. worker and we will see a difference left, that pretty largely goes to the nonrelief supervisors and supervisors and foremen with political connections.

Mr. BARKLEY. I have no doubt that the country has obtained an erroneous idea about the relative percentage of the W. P. A. money which goes to the workers, because there have been certain individuals and certain interests in this country, political and otherwise, which have been biased, undertaking to create a misapprehension on the part of the people on the subject. But we are interested in knowing how much of this money is going into the hands of persons who are employed on projects of the W. P. A. and who need work, whether they are what may be called relief workers, or include the 5 percent outside the relief workers.

I think there can be no successful dispute on the question of the percentages I have given to the Senate. I am glad to give them because they may, insofar as they have any influence over anyone, correct some of the misapprehensions and mistakes which have been propagated in the country with respect to the work of the W. P. A.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WILEY. I yield.

Mr. LODGE. I was interested in what the Senator said about the difficulty of computing the percentage of the W. P. A. appropriation, the cost of overhead and the percentage that goes to the man on relief, and the difficulty of ascertaining that figure lies in the fact that it all depends on what we want to class as overhead and what we want to class as relief. Before the Special Committee on Unemployment and Relief last year Mr. Hopkins, who was then W. P. A. Administrator, testified that these funds were used for the publication of brochures and pamphlets and expensive printed matter to advertise the W. P. A., which was not done with relief labor. He testified that moving pictures were produced to advertise his theories of the way things ought to be running. And none of those things was done by relief labor, yet all of them came out of the relief appropriation. The question of what percentage is to be attributed to overhead and what percentage is to be attributed to relief labor all depends on how we would interpret those activities. I think the Senator is right in contending that all of the money should go to the men who need relief, and should not be used for these private matters.

Mr. WILEY. I thank the Senator. I want to go back now to the main issue. I am not discussing this afternoon the inaccuracy of the bookkeeping methods of W. P. A., nor am I saying that the figures given by the Senator from Kentucky are inaccurate. If I were to express my own opinion, I would say that it was a matter of bookkeeping, and they being the sole judges of their bookkeeping, throw into whatever column they want to the figures they think should belong there. But what I am saying, and I am saying to the country here today, is that we should have the President and Colonel Harrington back of the joint resolution of the Senator from Michigan. It will stop heartache. It will stop the fear and the worry; it will stop a further break in the morale.

When I stated that the President had said that if we take off this $125,000,000 or $150,000,000 it will mean a reduction of 331/3 percent in the working force, whereas it only amounts to a cut of 17.4 percent in the actual money, the figures somehow do not bear his conclusion out. There is something wrong in that set-up. And the explanation of the Senator from Kentucky was no explanation in that respect. He merely stated, quoting the record of the W. P. A., that there was such a percentage spent for overhead or administration, so much for material, and so much for labor.

I should like to get back to the main issue now.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Mr. WILEY. I yield.

Mr. NEELY. Does the Senator mean that a break in the morale of the W. P. A. workers would be avoided by the adoption of the Vandenberg amendment?

Mr. WILEY. Certainly yes; for this reason, that they have been told, and they have been educated, and they have been propagandized to the effect that if we do not allow $150,000,000 by April 1, 2,000,000 or 1,000,000 persons will be cut off the pay rolls, whereas according to the letter the Senator from Michigan received today from the head of the W. P. A., if we agree to his resolution there will be sufficient funds until June 7. Therefore let the country know that not one worker will be taken off by any action of the House or the Senate up to this time if we pass the resolution, and they will have continuous work until June 7.

Mr. NEELY. Does the Senator have any information to the effect that the W. P. A. workers favor the Vandenberg resolution?

Mr. WILEY. I have no information at all except the information which comes from common sense. If a man knows that his job is safe until June 7, he is in favor of anything which will keep him on the job. But if he is worried by agents who, after all, are but propagandists of the idea that Government must do the work, feed the people, and provide everything—the situation becomes different. Those who hold such a view are earnest and sincere, but they are just as wrong as were the people four centuries ago, when the Protestants and Catholics of Europe burned each other at the stake, thinking that God Almighty liked the smell of burning flesh. They were wrong, however.

Mr. NEELY. The petitions and letters which I have received from the W. P. A. workers of West Virginia are almost unanimously in favor of the additional appropriation of $150,000,000 which the President has recommended.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HATCH in the chair). Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. WILEY. I yield.

Mr. BRIDGES. I suggest that the Senator from Wisconsin ask the distinguished Senator from West Virginia, who is my friend, whether or not he has heard from others in West Virginia besides those on the W. P. A., and if they take the same position as the W. P. A. workers.

Mr. NEELY. I have received but one expression of opposition to the additional appropriation, from anyone in West Virginia. All the requests but one which I have received about this matter have been in favor of granting the President's request for $150,000,000 more than the Congress has yet provided.

Mr. WILEY. Why are they in favor of it?

Mr. NEELY. Presumably because they desire employment, and detest starvation for their wives, their children, and themselves.

Mr. WILEY. I will accept that as a clear-cut statement as to why they are in favor of it. Yet it has been demonstrated today by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDEN-BERG] that if we pass the Vandenberg resolution, there will be continuous employment until June 7. In the meantime, those who are supposed to be the trustees of the American people's money will have an opportunity to see whether or not some of the ideas which have been put forth will materialize, and to see whether or not the big war program we have will provide more labor, and whether or not some of the other things that are under way will take men off the W. P. A.

Until that time arrives, everything is conjectural. Yet, without any thought, it is desired to spend $150,000,000 of the people's money just because someone has convinced someone else that it should be done. If we pass the Vandenberg resolution no one will be injured. Not one person will be taken off the W. P. A., according to the record of the Democratic administration itself which has been produced

Recently I have been receiving letters, not alone from my own State, but from all over the country, calling my attention to the fact that the political pets hold plenty of good jobs. If we could get rid of some of the pets, there would be more money to help the needy.

After all, the W. P. A. has not been such a clean thing. The indictments in New York and other things are significant, but they are beside the question. The real question is, now that we know that none of the labor will be injured, now that we know that men and women can keep on working until June 7 if we pass the resolution, why should we hesitate? Why should we not pass it? We who are just as interested as is the Senator, in those on the W. P. A. rolls, we who wish to see the constructive thing done, say that if it develops during the next 2 months that more money is needed, it can be provided. But no; we must rush into it now. Why? Because the whip has been cracked. We owe some allegiance to the people who are paying the taxes of this country, and who are bearing the burden.

The new law, which we passed a short time ago, has teeth in it. The teeth in the law will start to have effect and we shall find that there will be less politics in W. P. A. in the next 30 to 60 days. We know that parasites have been preying upon helpless workers in the W. P. A. The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY] knows that that situation is true in his State. As the Senator knows, his colleague [Mr. Holt] is ready to expose the condition. Conditions in other places will be exposed.

Let us get back to the main issue. The main issue is, Shall we pass the Vandenberg resolution? We know that there is need for a probe, with a view not merely of eliminating waste, but of obtaining information which will result in the transformation of the whole relief system.

The Sheppard Committee on Campaign Expenditures has published startling revelations of the political exploitation of W. P. A. workers.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President-

Mr. WILEY. I yield.

Mr. MINTON. Did I correctly understand the Senator to say, awhile ago, that there have been some indictments of W. P. A. officials in New York?

Mr. WILEY. My understanding is that a year ago in New York there was an investigation by the grand jury which developed some very startling and significant facts.

Mr. MINTON. Does the Senator have in mind the investigation by the grand jury in Buffalo, N. Y.?

Mr. WILEY. I have not in mind the exact place.

Mr. MINTON. I remember reading a report of the investigation by the grand jury in Buffalo. A "blue ribbon" grand jury investigated the situation under the direction of a Republican judge, and the "blue ribbon" grand jury found nothing on which to indict officials in the county in which Buffalo is located.

Mr. WILEY. I call the Senator's attention to the fact that, irrespective of that statement, we are discussing the advisability of passing the Vandenberg resolution, so that if and when any of the things on which we may differ shall come to light within the next 60 days, we shall have more light to determine the course of our action as to the need for the additional $150,000,000.

Mr. MINTON. All I was trying to do was to obtain some information from the Senator as to whether or not there was some other place in New York of which I had not heard where indictments had been returned against W. P. A. officials.

Mr. WILEY. I think the records can be obtained when the matter comes up. I understand that one of the other Senators, when he regains his health, intends to expose the matter in detail. At that time we shall probably have the records available.

As I said, the Sheppard Committee on Campaign Expenditures has published startling revelations of the political exploitation of W. P. A. workers. Personally I feel that if relief funds are to be conserved the local committees must be given some incentive to see that the funds are used to the best advantage. There will be no desire to economize so long as the unemployed are taken care of by the Federal Government, because the desire to economize will be subordinated to the desire on the part of the local community to get as much as possible from the common "jackpot."

Some weeks ago I received a letter from a farmer's wife telling me of the critical situation of the farmers in Wisconsin, and comparing the farmer's lot with that of the W. P. A. worker. I published that letter, putting it into the Congressional Record. Since then I have received letters from many other farmers concerning the situation, and stating that they are worse off than W. P. A. workers.

After 6 years of failure to spend ourselves into safer times, after 6 years in which the farmer's lot has become worse and worse, after 6 years in which the management of industry and the industrial workers find themselves less and less secure, and after 6 years in which the lot of the W. P. A. workers has not been improved, we find the people everywhere questioning the ways and means which have been used to effectuate recovery and prosperity.

A short time ago some persons did not like the idea of "going back." The words "going back" were not very pleasant. However, today people want to go back to the days of decent wages, decent jobs, and an American standard of living for those willing and able to work.

Instead of addressing the Senate, I now address the occupants of the galleries, and say to them, "Why not wire the President and your Representatives asking them to support the Vandenberg resolution, and thus assure W. P. A. workers who are entitled to work that there will be no lay-offs before June 7?"

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WILEY. I yield. Mr. NEELY. Let me inquire of the able Senator from Wisconsin if he meant by one of his allusions, which was not quite clear to me, that someone purposes to expose corruption in the administration of Works Progress in the State of West Virginia.

Mr. WILEY. I believe I asked the Senator if he had any information on the subject.

Mr. NEELY. I did not understand the Senator to ask that question. But now I venture to answer it by saying that my information is to the effect that this agency has operated properly, successfully, and satisfactorily in West Virginia. No one of any political standing in the State has, to my knowledge, charged the W. P. A. in West Virginia with corruption.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, I merely wish to make a few comments relative to the remarks of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. Wiley] with which I agree. I think he has made a very able presentation.

In the first place, I think it ought to be very clearly understood that it has not been proven as yet that the extra $150,000,000 is needed. I do not believe anyone connected with the W. P. A. or the administration, from the President down, has made a good case for the increase, in spite of what the Senator from Indiana [Mr. MINTON] is going to say.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President-Mr. BRIDGES. I yield.

Mr. MINTON. How are we to pay the extra money which the Republicans promised to W. P. A. workers in the last campaign, if we do not obtain more money?

Mr. BRIDGES. I think we can take care of the problem very well if we eliminate the political hacks who have been doing the work for the administration in the various sections. If we could eliminate them and let the money go to the W. P. A. workers who are in need, the country would be better off.

Mr. MINTON. Is it only Democratic political hacks that the Senator wants to dispense with?

Mr. BRIDGES. The Senator may have more information, but I do not know of many Republican political hacks who have jobs under the W. P. A. These instances must be very rare.

Mr. MINTON. I am sorry to say there are a great many out in Indiana.

Mr. BRIDGES. The Senator has more information than

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BRIDGES. I yield.

Mr. NEELY. Let me inform the Senator from New Hampshire that since 12 o'clock today a distinguished Republican from West Virginia told me in the Senate reception room that he had resigned a W. P. A. appointment last year to run for a high office on the Republican ticket; that he had been defeated, and now desires that I help him to obtain

I assured him that I would render him every proper service in my power. Many prominent Republicans have long held important W. P. A. appointments in West Virginia, without opposition from me. My support of an additional appropriation for the W. P. A. springs from no desire to provide for the "hacks" of any political party, but from a devout yearning to supply the absolute necessaries of life to the needy, whether they be Democrats or Republicans. Mr. BRIDGES. I am very happy that the Senator from West Virginia has indicated that he has a kindly spot in his heart for some Republicans in his home State. It is very refreshing to hear that statement.

Mr. NEELY. I trust that the Senator from New Hampshire will not limit my friendly sentiments to the Republicans of West Virginia who have so frequently honored me with their support. These sentiments extend to reputable Republicans in New Hampshire, and every other State in the Union.

Mr. BRIDGES. I thank the Senator.

The point I want to make here is, first, that as far as my personal position is concerned, we can have economy and we can make a step in that direction by refusing to grant the $150,000,000 additional, and no one will suffer. We can have economy if we at once start to eliminate some of this unnecessary overhead, and the political hacks who have been holding the nonrelief jobs under W. P. A. around the country for the past few years; and in addition we could eliminate some of the projects that are just building up the continuance of W. P. A.

We are told that W. P. A. is spending $250,000 or $300,000 to put on an exhibit at the world's fair in New York. What justification can there be for granting relief money to put on an exhibit at the world's fair in New York? If people in this country are hungry let that money go to the hungry people rather than going into making moving pictures, putting on various programs, making exhibits at the world's fair, and so on. No one yet knows how the unnecessary overhead referred to by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Lodge] is figured. I am sorry the Senator from Kentucky is not here; but I have seen him in action many times, and I never saw him more indefinite than he was today when he was talking about percentages, and what went into various percentages. I respect him for it, because I do not think he was entirely sure of what he was saying, and therefore he wanted to talk with some moderation.

I think there is another wrong philosophy. My good friend the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. Neely] has referred to the W. P. A. workers in West Virginia being unanimously for this increase. He also said he had heard no adverse comment from other persons in West Virginia. I think we are concerned with a great body of citizens all over the country. We are not going to have prosperity unless we have permanent prosperity; and neither you, Mr. President, nor anyone else in this country can picture, outside of temporarily taking care of persons in need in this country, which is necessary and we are all for it, any permanent good that came forth from W. P. A. in many of its activities.

Some of the activities of W. P. A. are worth while, but many are not. We might as well have dumped part of this money into the Atlantic Ocean. For all the permanent good accomplished, outside of temporary benefits, we have taken a very expensive method of accomplishing results.

Now, do not get me wrong. I know we have never had many persons starve to death in this country. So far as my political party is concerned, so far as I know, they have always stood for the principle that no man, woman, or child in this country should go hungry or cold. We want to continue relief as long as needed, but we want to eliminate some of the waste and some of the overhead that is so unnecessary and that is building up and piling up the costs of W. P. A.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BRIDGES. Certainly.

Mr. NEELY. Does the able Senator from New Hampshire really believe that all the expenditures which have been made by the W. P. A., excepting those to save human life or prevent great suffering, have been lost, and that they have produced nothing of permanent value to the people of the United States?

Mr. BRIDGES. I said that, aside from keeping people from being actually hungry and cold, it is only in certain instances that we have gained anything of permanent value as the result of our vast expenditure of money.

Mr. NEELY. The W. P. A. has constructed enough modern highways to extend twice around the world.

It has improved more than 159,000 miles of roads and streets; it has constructed 130 airplane landing fields and improved 136 more; it has laid more than 4,000 miles of water lines and more than 6,000 miles of storm and sanitary sewers; it has built, modernized, and improved more than 20,000 schoolhouses and more than 30,000 other public buildings; it has planted more than a billion trees to prevent soil erosion and floods; it has bound more than 20,000.060 library books; it has made more than 95,000,000 pieces of clothing for the poor; it has provided more than 129,000,000 lunches for the needy school children of the Nation.

Does not the Senator think that practically all of these achievements are of great permanent value?

Mr. BRIDGES. I will answer the Senator by saying that in many instances these things were needed, and in many instances money has been spent for unneeded projects. Some permanent good has been accomplished, but it is creating a heavy and tremendous overhead for the maintenance of many of these new projects.

Of course, the Senator has distinctly picked out the better things. I admire his ability and his discretion. He has not brought out the facts about the monkey houses or similar projects that the W. P. A. has built, and about some of the other boondoggling projects. He has brought to the surface the very best things.

Mr. NEELY. I thank the Senator for the undeserved compliment which he has so graciously paid me. But will he not inform the Senate, if he can, of just one of the 20,000 schoolhouses that have been built by the W. P. A. that was not needed or that does not represent a valuable investment?

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, I am not on the inside of what the W. P. A. has been doing. The administration forces seem to be able to get all the necessary information. Being a Republican, and a little out in the cold, I have not been able to get all of it, so I do not know where these schoolhouses are located; but I should say, with reference to the school buildings as a whole, that that is one of the most wortny things the W. P. A. has done.

Mr. NEELY. Can the Senator specify a single mile of road or street construction or repair by the W. P. A. that is not indicative of present utility and permanent value?

Mr. BRIDGES. Let me answer that question by saying that I am not technically informed on the details. I cannot tell where these projects have been built, or anything of the kind; but, if the Senator would like to have me do so, I should be glad to present to this body a list of the unneeded, wasteful, uncalled-for projects that come in the other category from the type of project the Senator has been discussing.

Mr. NEELY. Is the Senator of the opinion that any of the 20,000,000 garments that have been made, and given by the W. P. A. to the poor of the country, were not needed by those who received them?

Mr. BRIDGES. No; that is right in line with what I am saying, that we must keep people from being hungry and cold. That keeps them from being cold, and I am heartily in favor of it.

Mr. NEELY. Then, so far as the W. P. A. appropriations have been used to build roads, construct schoolhouses, plant trees, bind books, lay water lines and sewers, and provide clothes for the naked and food for the needy, the Senator from New Hampshire approves them?

Mr. BRIDGES. I should say to the Senator that he has listed the good things of the W. P. A.

Mr. NEELY. There are, of course, many more than I have enumerated.

Mr. BRIDGES. I could very easily enumerate very many more of the projects. I said at first that I was for economy, and I thought it had not been proven that the $150,000,000 was needed. I said we should cut out some of the waste and the overhead and the political hacks who are doing the work for the administration around the country. Let us spend our money in helping the poor and the unfortunate people of the Nation.

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BRIDGES. I yield to the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. WILEY. In my remarks I stated that the matter I wanted to discuss was the advisability of passing the resolution introduced by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. Vandenberg]. After concluding my remarks, a letter was handed to me by the junior Senator from South Dakota [Mr. Gurney] which has some bearing on what I said in relation to that issue.

I stated that if we should pass the resolution we would better the morale of the persons who are fearful that if we do not appropriate $150,000,000 now they will be out of a job, who have been propagandized into that belief by persons in positions of authority, and who, I think, will find that there are teeth in the new law, and this letter confirms that position.

Here is a letter signed by M. A. Kennedy, Works Progress administrator of South Dakota, dated February 15, written to Miss Mary Waterman, of Tyndall, S. Dak.:

DEAR MISS WATERMAN: The reason you have not been employed on a W. P. A. project is that we have only been given sufficient money to employ a certain number of persons eligible for employment. At this time we are employing every person we can possibly pay, and naturally there are a number of people awaiting assignment who will not be employed.

Now we are getting down to it:

Congress in recently appropriating money made an appropriation of $150,000,000 less than was recommended by the President and less than was needed for continuing on jobs all those now employed in the Nation. I do not anticipate employment will be increased in the future, and undoubtedly after April 1 further reductions will be mandatory.

will be mandatory.

At the present time it is not possible for us to add any new people.

Yours very truly,

M. A. KENNEDY, Works Progress Administrator.

The point I am making is that this man, who is the servant of the people, in effect, told this woman that Congress had no judgment, no sense, no right—that is what it amounted to—when all Congress said was, "Give us time, and we will, if necessary, appropriate the additional amount; but give us time. We think we are the custodians of the fund; we think we are the trustees of the people's property, and we want to be heard. We do not want one man to go off the rolls who should be there, but we do not want the grafters and the chiselers and the political hacks to remain on the job. We think it will take a little more time." But no; according to this letter, this woman is not employed, and cannot remain on the job, because Congress refuses to appropriate the $150,000,000!

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BRIDGES. I yield to the Senator from New Mexico. Mr. HATCH. Returning to the statement the Senator made a while ago about the "useless" projects that have been built all over the Nation, and the statement that in effect, except for feeding people, the larger part of this expenditure has been made for projects which are of no use and of no permanent value—that was the Senator's statement, as I recall it—

Mr. BRIDGES. In part only. I qualified my statement.
Mr. HATCH. I also have just been reading a copy of the Republican platform of 1932, which says that, true to American tradition, responsibility for relief should be a State and local matter, and I have heard the Senator many times subscribe to the same general thought. I know the Senator wants to be fair, but I now desire to call his attention to the fact, which is known to every person in this Chamber to be true, that at no time has the Works Progress Administration initiated any project anywhere. Is not that correct?

Mr. BRIDGES. No; I cannot say that it is.

Mr. HATCH. Is it not correct that all the projects which are sponsored and brought into existence are brought forth by the local communities, the subdivisions, the cities, the towns, and the States?

Mr. BRIDGES. Sometimes the administration of the W. P. A. certainly has drummed up trade.

Mr. HATCH. I think the Senator evades the question. I am sure he knows that what I have said is true, that all projects start locally.

Mr. BRIDGES. May I ask the Senator, then, who originated the exhibit at the world's fair?

Mr. HATCH. I know nothing about the exhibit at the world's fair. I am talking about the general program of the Works Progress Administration. All the schoolhouses and highways and other things about which the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. Neely] was speaking, with the exception of certain "white collar" projects, were initiated by local communities. If there were exceptions, there were only a few of them. The general program and policy has been as I have stated. Is not that correct? Let us be fair about it. Is not that the way it works?

Mr. BRIDGES. In theory that is the way it works; but I say, and the Senator knows, that in many instances the Administration has drummed up trade for certain types of projects.

Mr. HATCH. I think there is plenty to criticize in the W. P. A.

Mr. BRIDGES. I agree with the Senator's last statement.
Mr. HATCH. I think criticism can be well founded; but why place it on a false basis? We know that the local communities sponsored these projects. They are the ones who started them; and if the projects are useless, if they are worthless, the condemnation should go against the cities and the school districts and the various subdivisions all over the United States, with the exception of those to which I have referred.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Bone in the chair).

Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. BRIDGES. I do.

Mr. LODGE. Speaking to the distinguished Senator from New Mexico [Mr. Hatch], is it not true that while the projects start locally, most of them have to be approved right here in Washington?

Mr. HATCH. Certainly.

Mr. LODGE. So if a project is a failure there is a certain local responsibility, but there is a national responsibility too, and the national authorities cannot get away from it.

Mr. HATCH. I do not attempt to evade any responsibility at all.

Mr. LODGE. I thought the Senator would not do so.

Mr. HATCH. Certainly not. I say there are plenty of things to criticize. There have been in various agencies. I do not deny that; but why say the Works Progress Administration is responsible for all these things when it cannot initiate the projects in the first instance?

Mr. LODGE. There is a dual responsibility.

Mr. HATCH. There is a dual responsibility, and any possible condemnation must be heaped upon the local communities and cities and towns and villages and school districts, although I emphatically disagree with what the Senator has said about the uselessness of the projects. I say they have been of permanent value.

Mr. BRIDGES. Would the Senator say they have all been useful?

Mr. HATCH. Certainly not; I would make no such exaggerated statement. I would prefer to let exaggerated statements come from those who are heaping such wholesale condemnation on the plan.

Mr. BRIDGES. I think the record of W. P. A. in some sections of the country, with the political racket which has been run in connection with it, in certain States, and the waste and the overhead and the unnecessary projects, probably deserves wholesale condemnation in those particular States. In other States it has functioned reasonably well.

Mr. HATCH. I am quite sure the Senator feels that way, and I have heard him so express himself many times. I am asking the Senator only to be fair.

Mr. BRIDGES. I shall try to be fair. Now, let us get back to the original premise, first, that we need economy, and that there has not been a proper demonstration of the need of $150,000,000 additional requested. There has been no determined effort to eliminate politics, waste, and unnecessary overhead. I want the poor to be cared for, but let us not throw money around to those not in need.

In case there is any legitimate or real fear, or in case there is any real need, probably the next best thing would be some step along the lines of the proposal of the Senator from Michigan [Mr. Vandenberg], which has been so ably presented by the Senator from Michigan and the Senator from Wisconsin. I think that is the second best step.

I do believe that Senators on the other side who have been talking themselves know, just as well as I do, of the political hacks who occupy positions today under W. P. A. and the waste, the extravagant overhead, and the way politics runs right down the line through W. P. A. in some States. I have no complaint in some States.

Of course there have been some useful projects; of course it has done good, but there have been many projects which were not useful and much waste which could have been eliminated. Let us give the needy of the country the breaks rather than the New Deal henchmen, who have found their way into many of our relief set-ups and who are utilizing money which the taxpayers of the country will some day have to pay and that the poor people of the country need. CONGRESS HAS NO JUDICIAL POWER EXCEPT AS TO IMPEACHMENTS

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, intermittently I receive letters chanting a jeremiad, or, with caustic verbiage, inveighing against the Senate Committee on the Judiciary because, forsooth, that committee does not "get busy and report out a constitutional amendment proposing to take from the courts the power to invalidate an act of Congress."

Some of the letters are intemperate in tone and some are written by persons who in good faith seek light upon this question.

No conceivable energy at my command could, by correspondence, furnish to every person making such inquiry a dissertation upon the necessity, in a constitutional government, of reposing in the Federal courts the power to declare invalid and void such acts as Congress had no power to enact.

Some of the complainants take the view that since we derived our legal procedure from England and that inasmuch as the British courts did not exercise the power to declare an act of Parliament void, it was, therefore, unprecedented and unauthorized for courts of the United States to explore an act of Congress with a view of ascertaining if such act

It will be remembered that the colonial governments in America were grants from the King and were connected with Great Britain through the medium of the Crown and not through Parliament. The colonial charters were, in fact, through Parliament. The colonial charters were, in fact, constitutions, and the words "our Constitution" in the Declaration of Independence have particular reference to the colonial charters or grants. These charters differed somewhat as to the powers granted or denied, but they all appear to have contained the provision that legislation enacted by the Colonies should not be contrary to the laws of England; hence the colonial laws were frequently tested by the charter or by the law of England, and some acts of colonial assemblages were annulled because they were not in accord with the Constitution; that is to say, with the colonial charter—the grant. Thus, the American colonists became familiar with that system and practice.

The address delivered before the Bar Association of the City of Charleston, W. Va., on January 25, 1936, by the Honorable John H. Hatcher, president of the Supreme Court of Appeals, State of West Virginia, is one of the clearest expositions of this subject that may be found. It would seem to me that if we are to maintain a constitutional government and protect the inviolable rights, privileges, and immunities that accompany free men, we should not strike down what is called "judicial review."

In tyrannical governments the supreme magistracy, or the making, construing, and enforcing the law, is vested in one and the same man or one and the same body of men.

In a government where one and the same magistracy makes, construes, and enforces the laws, whether such magistracy be lodged in one man or in a body of men, there can be no public liberty.

The question of the power of the courts of the United States to declare "unconstitutional" such acts as Congress had no authority to enact was not an issue that divided the framers of the Constitution into opposing political parties.

Thomas Jefferson was not a member of the Constitutional Convention, but Jefferson and his supporters, on this particular question, differed in no essential respect from Alexander Hamilton.

Jefferson and Hamilton each took the view that the courts should have the power to declare void such legislation as Congress had no authority to pass, and Jefferson went further on this subject than did Hamilton. Jefferson's letters indicate he desired that the power be given to the courts to invalidate legislation not only because the legislation was in opposition to the Constitution, but he was content to grant to the courts the power to invalidate laws on questions of policy also. What both Jefferson and Hamilton seemed to fear was the despotism of unchecked majority rule.

One hundred and seventy-three despots would surely be as oppressive as one. Let those who doubt it, turn their eyes on the Republic of Venice. As little will it avail us, that they are chosen by ourselves. An elective despotism was not the government we fought for; but one which should not only be founded on free principles, but in which the powers of government should be so divided and balanced among several bodies of magistracy, as that no one could transcend their legal limits, without being effectually checked and restrained by the others.

It is true that in Great Britain the courts at the time of the formation of our Constitution recognized the supremacy of acts of Parliament. Such recognition, however, did not flow from any legislative immunity from review but flowed from the fact that Parliament acted in a double capacity—that is to say, as legislature and as court. Parliament possessed legislative and judicial power. Parliament was a court, the old curia regis or aula regis—a court established in England by William the Conqueror in his own hall—long before Parliament possessed the legislative power. In other words, when our American Government was formed there were reposing in Parliament both legislative and judicial power; hence, an act of Parliament was both supremely legislative and supremely judicial.

In this connection it must be remembered that when our Constitution was formed much care was taken to see to it that the three powers of government—to wit, the legislative, the executive, and the judicial—should be lodged in different magistracies, different officials, and that these powers should not be permitted to repose in or be exercised by one and the same magistracy.

The Constitution of the United States (art. II, sec. 1) says:

The executive power shall be vested in a President of the United States of America—

And (art. III, sec. 1) that-

The judicial power of the United States, shall be vested in one Supreme Court, and in such inferior courts—

Bear in mind that the executive power shall be vested in a President and the judicial power shall be vested in one Supreme Court, and so forth. The Constitution did not vest in the Congress all legislative power, but only such powers as were granted and enumerated. The Constitution says that—

All legislative powers herein granted shall be vested in a Congress

* * . (Art. I, sec. 1.)

Observe the scrupulous phrasing wherein executive power is granted to the President, judicial power to the courts, but that only such legislative power as is granted is lodged with the Congress, and this was done because the makers of the Constitution desired it to be crystal clear that the Congress was to be of limited power and that certain rights and powers of the States were not granted to the National Government but were reserved to the States. The States possess all the rights and powers not denied to them by the Federal Constitution, whereas Congress possesses only such power as was granted to it by the Federal Constitution.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ASHURST. I yield.

Mr. KING. If the Senator will pardon me for interjecting an observation into his very able address, I think he might with propriety call attention to the fact that we have 48 States, and I do not recall that in a single State where the people make their own constitutions they have suggested that the supreme court which they established should not have the authority to declare unconstitutional any enactment of the legislature.

Mr. ASHURST. The Senator is correct.

Mr. KING. So that the people who are complaining about the Supreme Court of the United States declaring laws unconstitutional probably have voted upon the constitutions of their own States, certainly in the cases of the more recent constitutions, in which they conferred power upon their own supreme courts to declare unconstitutional enactments of the respective legislatures.

Mr. ASHURST. Quite so.

The British Parliament was not a body of men with delegated limited authority. It was a body of men supremely legislative and supremely judicial. The Congress of the United States is a body of men with delegated, limited authority, with no judicial power except as to impeachments and the qualifications of its own Members, and it is not even supremely legislative, as the States possess the powers that were not granted to the Congress. The belief that Congress possesses absolute and unlimited power is a devastating error into which many well-meaning persons have fallen.

The Constitution makers would have recoiled from the suggestion of granting to Congress the judicial power, and they would have recoiled with repugnance and alarm from the suggestion of granting to the judiciary the legislative

Not a few of the founding fathers were philosophers, and they knew that power, like alcohol, exaggerates the ego, hence the care exercised by the founding fathers to distribute the powers of government among various magistracies. Many of the founding fathers were men of ripe scholarship and large experience. Some of them had served in the Continental Congress, officers in the Continental Army, in State legislatures, as State judges, in State constitutional conventions, as Governors, as signers of the Declaration of Independence, and as signers of the draft of the Articles of Confederation. More than 25 of them were from the various colleges: for example, some had studied at Princeton, William and Mary, Harvard, Yale, King's, and Pennsylvania. Eleven of them had been educated either entirely at British universities or had gone there from the American colleges.

One will observe that whilst the Constitution makers lodged the judicial power of the United States in the courts of the United States, these Constitution makers knew the history of the judicial abuses and tyrannies, not only the troublous days of the Tudors and the Stuarts, but the judicial abuses of their own century as well, and they used care to see to it that whilst granting the judicial power to the courts, there should be ample checks and balances in the Constitution to enable Congress to prevent judicial abuses and usurpations should the courts attempt the same.

Legislative power is the power to make laws. Judicial power is the power to declare laws. Executive power is the power to enforce laws.

The power to declare the law, of course, comprises the duty to determine what is the law and what is not the law. Article VI of the Constitution, among other things, says:

This Constitution and the laws of the United States which shall a made in pursuance thereof * * * shall be the supreme law be made in pursuance thereof of the land * *.

An act not made in pursuance of the Constitution is, of course, not a law. The judicial power may not make laws, but must declare, when its jurisdiction is invoked, whether an act of Congress is in pursuance of the Constitution; and if not made in pursuance of the Constitution, it is not a law.

A judicial review of acts of Congress is not an offshoot of English law, but is an American development arising from colonial practice out of a wholesome effort to keep separate the legislative power and the judicial power. It would be baleful to public liberty in our country for the legislative and the judicial powers to be centered in one and the same magistracy. Our genius of government is built upon the separation of the legislative, the executive, and the judicial powers; and I doubt if, upon serious second thought, any enlightened friend to civil liberty will argue that these three powers should be centered in one and the same magistracy.

The legislative powers granted to Congress are enumerated and limited, and such limitation was not by chance, was not fortuitous, was not accidental, but was deliberate. Instead of seeking to acquire the judicial power, we in Congress would more truly serve our country by confining our operations to our legislative power.

It is true that our powers as Members of Congress are limited; but, nevertheless, if properly exercised, they are of sufficient amplitude and grandeur to give scope and opportunity to the most zealous champions of true progress and needful reforms, the most redoubtable defenders of liberty, the most eloquent tribunes of popular government, and to soothe and assuage the most fevered ambition.

NATIONALISTIC ANIMOSITIES IN AMERICA

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I make bold to speak for a moment or two to advise the Senate concerning what I feel is something of a very great danger, which we are allowing to settle in our vicinity, apparently not heeding what it means to the union of our citizenship. I heard the distinguished Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST] present a thesis of great attraction to demonstrate that a great national government cannot hope to survive unless it shall hold together the trinity of the judicial, the legislative, and the executive, in a common cause, and in union and harmony. I should like to add to the thought by saying that the same rule must apply as to the citizenship in a country such as the United States, those who are native born, those who are foreign born, but who have been adopted by us, and those whom we have taken to be our people, without regard, sir, to their nationality.

My attention is drawn to the address delivered yesterday. Sunday, to his people, by the Premier of Italy, whom we speak of as Mussolini. We noted that that distinguished leader called on the world to note that he demanded the possession of that portion of the world called Tunisia, Djibouti, and also, in addition thereto, what he called rights in the Suez Canal.

Mr. President, I am strongly impressed with the thought that that distinguished and very erudite individual, so far as governmental matters are concerned, had never the thought in mind of demanding the Suez Canal, or any rights in the canal, but that he was artful enough to include in his expression what he has long thought of, and has no doubt conveyed to his partner in the undertaking, the Fuehrer of Germany, and that the real object is not to claim the Suez Canal, but to give notice to England that, "You keep your hands off the undertaking that I now say is my object, of taking to myself or to the country I represent these lands I have described, and if you attempt to interfere with that or with my policy or purpose, the penalty will be the pressure by me to the full extent of my capacity of a claim to that which you have held up to the world as solely your property, the Suez Canal."

But, sir, while there is this threat of possible conflict between these very great countries over their possessions, I am exceedingly anxious that this, my America, shall realize that it is no controversy of ours. I am exceedingly aroused, sir, to a high degree of alarm, when I see that in my great America, in a matter which does not touch us, processions are taking place in great cities, are being organized, and people are marching up and down, the purpose being to pass their judgments upon these foreign countries. Certain citizens of our country, but who are, some of them, of foreign birth, some of whom are naturalized in our land, thousands being of the same blood, live in America, and they take one attitude. In opposition are others, some of whom are likewise of foreign birth, some being born in our own midst. The two elements live as neighbors one with the other. We are making the blunder, I am pained to advise my colleagues in this body, of taking sides in these controversies of which we can know but little, and inviting one set of our foreign-born citizens, who are citizens of America, to enmity, rivalry, and perchance, sir, to assault upon the other set of their neighbors, who are of another foreign-born element within our land, and yet they are neighbors, one of the other.

Sir, have we forgotten what was the condition in our America just a year or two before our country entered the World War? Have we learned nothing from what we brought upon ourselves then, the enmities among our fellow citizens, how one set turned against the other, representatives in our country of different nationalities, and how we went so far in our bitterness that we turned upon that production of genius called music, and that called art, of certain people, merely because the people of other countries disliked what was being done in the fatherlands of the first peoples? Should we in America, where representatives of different peoples live together in one brotherhood of citizenship, invite a controversy among our own people whenever there arise dispute and conflict in the motherland and fatherland of the former foreigners? This is an unhappy beginning which our people seem to fail to recognize as but the repetition of that which transpired in their own midst and among their own citizens but a short while past. Sir, we must not overlook the fact that we have Italians in millions among us, that we have likewise French and Germans among us to the number of many millions. The city in which I live, Chicago, contains a larger number of people from Czechoslovakia than any other community in the

Why should our fellow Americans allow themselves to invite these people into conflict with each other? They are neighbors. They are friends. They have intermarried with each other. They have business association with each other. Is it a fair thing for our officials in Washington to overlook what may transpire if that sort of thing is continued, by which, before we know it, enmities will lead to assaults, assaults to very dangerous results, and very shortly we shall discover that the armed forces of our States or Nation will be called out to quell the enmities and disorders, and we shall find, if we look to ourselves, that we have ourselves largely brought upon our country such a condition, sir, as can awaken that power we have seen awakened, the cry of conflict, and the summoning of our country to enter into it, and before we would know it there would arise such voice, in such volume, and I may add further, such prejudices, that before we saw where we were tending we would be lifted in a whirlwind, and by the whirlwind we would be driven into the storm, and by the storm we would be deluged, and the great danger of total destruction might be upon us.

Mr. President, I take the liberty to recall the speech of the able Senator from Arizona, and warn that there must not be a failure to recognize the other unions in citizenship which are necessary if we shall have a constitutional government, a government of order.

I beseech my Government to recognize the dangers toward which we are rapidly moving. We have nothing to do with the conflict between Italy and its leader Mussolini, and France and its leadership. We in our own land should not enter into the controversy between those two—that I may make my illustration clear—any more than they would have a right to enter into a controversy between the United States and the Government of Colombia as to Panama, which we took, or between ourselves and Panama, concerning whom there is now pending some suggestion in our own Government touching further additions to the Canal.

We have nothing to do with the situation of the mere contests among themselves as to their territory. We are not involved in the business one way or the other.

While it may be regretted and deeply deplored that there should arise any such severe conflict as seems to be threatening, it must be first noted that our object, and, above all, our duty, is to preserve the peace of our own land; that we shall attend to our own duty, but above all, sir, to cling close to our friendship with all nations whose children are among our own citizens. And they must know that we shall avoid in all instances entering into conflict to oppose other lands merely because they desire to bring us in for the strength of our Army and the worth of our Treasury.

I conclude in the observation that our philosophy can be found in the famous lines of the great seer—

True to our colors, though the shadows grow dark, We will trim our broad sails as before, And stand by the rudder that governs our bark, Nor care how we look from the shore.

I thank the Senate.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Air Corps Air Corps, Army", on page 38, line 1, after the name "Secretary of War", to strike out "$94,737,281" and insert "$95,737,281"; in line 24, after the word "than"; to strike out "$66,783,529" and insert "$57,494,962"; on page 39, line 4, after the word "of" where it occurs the second time, to strike out "$66,783,529" and insert "$57,494,962", and in line 5, after the word "than", to strike out "$65,193,825" and insert "$56,113,200", so as to read:

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I inquire of the Senator the total amount which will be appropriated during this session for military purposes, and also the total appropriations which will be authorizations? I have been told that the appropriations for military and naval purposes will aggregate: more than $2,000,000,000.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, this is the first bill for our Military Establishment. The bill carries $52,000,-000 more than the bill for last year. However, it carries $7,000,000 less than the estimates made by the Bureau of the Budget. The deficiency bill just passed by the House, and which is now before the Senate Committee on Appropriations, proposes to appropriate money to take care of the expansion authorized by the bill originally passed by the Congress. I have not seen the deficiency bill and I do not know how much it embraces.

Mr. KING. I understand it carries more than $200,000,000. Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. It is quite a sum. I am advised it is $69,000,000.

The Navy bill has not been acted upon by Congress. As to the total, no one can tell until the bills are passed. No doubt the Navy will have a larger bill, just as the Army is having a larger bill. The expansion program will increase the two component parts of the service. Under present conditions it is natural to expect a very substantial increase as a result of the expansion program which Congress has already adopted.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President-Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator from Utah spoke of authorizations. There are no authorizations in the bill, are

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. There are none. Mr. KING. However, there have been bills carrying authorizations for the Army, the Navy, or both.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. That is correct.

Mr. KING. May I ask the Senator whether or not he believes the very large appropriations, which will amount to nearly $2,000,000,000 for the Army and Navy, are warranted by conditions affecting the United States?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Speaking only for myself, I am convinced that they are.

Mr. KING. What are the conditions which justify appropriations of perhaps more than $2,000,000,000 for the Army and Navy for the next fiscal year?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. If I may answer that in my own way, in former times it was customary for nations to declare war upon one another, and after the declaration of war was made it was customary to have a breathing spell.

The nations would call the men to the colors and prepare for the armed contest. After awhile, when they thought they were ready, they would march out to do battle. That time has gone. In more modern times a declaration of war is passé. China had no war declared against her by Japan. Ethiopia had no war declared against her by Italy. As I understand, Germany has not declared war on either of the countries taken by Germany. The modern policy is for a nation to march over and take what it wants without a declaration of war. That being true, as I see it, it is up to each nation to be ready at every moment of every day to defend iself. Acting upon that theory I am supporting the expansion of our military program.

Mr. KING. What nation does the Senator think contemplates attacking the United States?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I have no idea that any nation contemplates attacking the United States. However, our Nation, the richest in the world, would be subject to attack by a small nation if that nation were prepared for attack and our great nation were unprepared for attack. While I do not favor the largest army in the world, or the largest navy, I do favor a sufficient army and a sufficient navy to defend our people and our property, wherever they may be located.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, if the Senator will pardon me for saying so, it seems to me that we are governed too much by our emotions if not by our fears. We may be controlled by conditions which are perhaps entirely outside the periphery of our influence or our activity.

It seems to me that we are being influenced by fears arising from causes which relate to European concerns and which inspire and influence their conduct and arouse their fears. However, speaking for myself, I see no danger to our Republic from attacks by other nations. The Latin American states are friendly. There is now a spirit of solidarity among the nations of the Western Hemisphere stronger than any which has existed in the past. This spirit is due in part to the service rendered by President Roosevelt. He has sought to cultivate the arts of peace among our neighbors to the south, and has been successful in establishing closer relations between them and this Republic. I think the United States has never before enjoyed greater prestige or greater influence among the nations of the world than it enjoys today. I pay tribute to Mr. Roosevelt for his efforts in the consummation of that result.

The solidarity of the Western Hemisphere is manifest, and is apparent even to the most casual observers. Canada is almost a part of us. As the Senator knows, the Canadian border, 3,000 miles long, is without a fort or a gun. None is needed to protect either country, because of the community of interest between Canada and the United States.

It seems to me we have no foe across the Atlantic, unless it is the Nazi government, but many believe that it has its hands full for the present. I do not think that Hitler, notwithstanding his usurped power, will long continue to defy civilization and the moral and spiritual forces of the world. His reign will be evanescent and will come to an end. His power will be broken, as was the power of Napoleon, and as was the power of other great military leaders who struck down nations and paved the roads over which they trod with the bones of their victims.

I see no reason for the formulation of our national-defense policy upon the basis of attacks from European nations. Certainly Great Britain, France, Portugal, the Scandinavian states, Holland, Belgium, Switzerland, Finland, Poland, the Balkan states, are not enemies of this Republic, nor can they, in my opinion, ever be drawn into any combination which sought to injure the United States. Indeed, the peoples of those countries entertain a feeling of friendship and respect for this Republic and a high regard for its institutions.

I think I am justified in ascribing to the Russian Government a desire to maintain cordial relations with this Republic. The relations between the United States and Italy have been of the most cordial character, and in the World War our Government and the Italian Government were associates and their military forces engaged in the same enterprise. Certainly the relations between our Government and Spain are not tinged with any feelings of animosity or ill feeling. Great Britain and France, devoted to democratic principles, look upon this Republic as one of the mighty pillars necessary for the protection of liberty and democratic institutions.

They are menaced, directly or indirectly, many believe, by the Nazi regime, but I cannot think that they can be successfully attacked by the Nazi Government. The Nazi Government may achieve further conquests in Europe, but it will sooner or later meet a Waterloo.

Some entertain the view that there will be a conflict between the United States and Japan. Japan, as we now know, is concerned with the attitude of the Soviet Government toward her. Russia's authority and power are not limited to European Russia, but extend for several thousands of miles easterly from the Ural Mountains to the Pacific. Japan may not affront her powerful neighbor upon the north. The armies of Japan are now beating their heads against the walls of China. They are carrying on a ruthless and cruel campaign, ignoring the rules of civilized war. They have not yet triumphed over the 400,000,000 Chinese, and many persons familiar with the conditions in the Orient believe that in the end Japan will fail to achieve a permanent victory.

There seems to be some evidence to support the contention that Japan, Italy, and Germany are united in a common purpose. It is believed by some that under a tripartite agreement Japan is to have control over China; Hitler is to have a free hand in eastern and southeastern Europe and perhaps territory beyond the Hellespont; and Mussolini is to acquire territory in northern Africa and to have a rather free hand in the Mediterranean

Undoubtedly the Rome-Berlin-Tokyo axis possesses great military strength and constitutes a formidable organization to carry out aggressive policies disturbing to the peace of the world. But alliances for the purpose of conquest usually carry with them seeds of dissolution. History records the formation and the death of many combinations made for the purpose of waging unjust wars and the destruction of nations. The scales of justice may often seem to be unbalanced but ultimately there is an adjustment based upon justice, moral precepts, and the everlasting principles of truth and right-

The Rome-Berlin-Tokyo axis may function smoothly and effectively today but on the morrow or in the not distant future the day of retribution comes and tyrants and oppressors end their evil days and the fruits of their victories

But I return to the question which I suggested to the Senator from Oklahoma; in my opinion the adventures of the tripartite powers to which I have referred and their assaults upon other nations do not contemplate an attack upon the United States, nor do they constitute a proximate or, indeed, a remote menace to this Republic. I am not contending that we should not adopt reasonable military measures for the defense of our country. I know there will be differences of opinion as to what constitutes reasonable measures. It is a question which may not, academically or categorically, be determined, but I do insist that we should not be swept off our feet because of the conflicts in Europe and Asia.

I do not believe that Hitler, with all his power, is a menace to this Republic, nor do I believe that our appropriations for military purposes should be controlled or fully determined by Nazi philosophy or Hitler's open or hidden policies, or the rivalries, jealousies, hatreds, and fueds which arise among selfish and ambitious militarists. As I have indicated, there is a moral law in the universe, and though injustice may have its day, it ends in ignominy and defeat to be superseded by greater liberty and a day where justice spreads its benefactions among those who have suffered under the heel of oppression.

I cannot help but believe that the evil forces so pervasive in the world will be banished and the reign of law and order and peace be the inheritance of the children of men.

I can only repeat that I do not think we should be unduly influenced by the barbarous and indefensible policies of Hitler or that our military and naval appropriations for this year should be primarily based upon the Nazi and Fascist policies which admittedly are aggressive and menacing toward many peoples and nations. The United States, with its material resources and its moral strength, is and should be free from the fears and hates so prevalent in various parts of the world. The people of the United States desire peace; they have no ambition for conquest and there is not a foot of territory which they covet. Our policy should rest upon the concept that this Republic has a duty and a responsibility to demonstrate the energizing moral and spiritual forces of genuine democratic government.

It is not in a spirit of arrogance that the people of this Republic believe that it stands as a symbol of liberty and is and should be an example to all nations that democratic institutions are promotive of peace and essential to the reign of law and order. So, as I have stated, our Nation should be a leader for world peace, for moral disarmament, for the establishment of those enduring spiritual qualities which must find expression in the hearts and lives of the world if the highest form of civilization is attained.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President-

Mr. KING. I yield to the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. McKELLAR. But if these nations are arming, as the Senator says they are, for the purpose the Senator says they have, surely it is the part of wisdom on the part of this country to be able to defend ourselves if the Senator should happen to be mistaken and they were to start an offensive against our country.

I agree with the Senator that our appropriations ought not to be based upon the attitudes or the propensities or any other consideration of foreign countries, but they ought to be based upon what is necessary for the defense of this country, which is the richest country of them all and the greatest prize of them all; and under the circumstances we ought to be in a position to defend our country against any and all comers.

Mr. KING. I agree with the Senator that if our Nation is menaced or is in danger, or if there are to be threats against it, all necessary and proper steps should be taken to insure its protection. I am trying to indicate, however, if in taking the necessary steps for protection, it is important to determine just what amount or degree of protection is necessary, we must know against whom we are to protect ourselves; what nation is threatening to invade us or to attack our institutions, or undermine the foundations of this Republic. In appraising these questions there should be no hysteria. We boast often of our realistic approach to material and governmental questions, so I ask against whom are we to guard ourselves; what nations or combination of nations give evidence of a design to attack or invade or weaken or destroy this Republic? We sometimes hear the statement that Japan is our enemy and we must arm to protect the Republic against a Japanese invasion.

Mr. President, Japan, as I have indicated, has troubles and burdens of her own. It is unnecessary to point out her fiscal policies; the heavy drains which have been made, and are being made, upon her material resources, as well as upon her manpower. Soviet Russia is not indifferent to Japanese policies, and, as I stated a few moments ago, Japan's problem now is to defeat the army of Gen. Chiang Kai-shek and bring 400,000,000 Chinese under Japanese rule.

Obviously she could send no armies to our shores. She has no navy adequate for that purpose, even if it were possible to transport, thousands of miles across the Pacific, a military force of any considerable number. Our Navy is infinitely superior to Japan's, and, whether we appreciate it or not, the presence of Great Britain's Navy in the Atlantic may not be overlooked.

Admiral Sims testified a few years ago, before the Committee on Naval Affairs, of which I was then a member, that no nation could carry on a successful war against an enemy where it had to transport its troops thousands of miles across the Pacific, particularly where it had no naval bases or landing places or stations for refueling or repairs in the territory which it was seeking to invade.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KING. I yield to the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. MINTON. I should like to submit to the Senator's judgment this proposition:

A while ago the Senator referred to the fact that Napoleon, of course, was overcome; but Mr. Hitler has brought all of central Europe under his influence without firing a gun, whereas Napoleon had very difficult campaigns to carry out his objectives.

Now that all of central Europe has come under his domination and Mr. Hitler has become implemented with men and materials and food supplies and all necessary things to carry on war, suppose he should get into a war with England and be successful, and one of the provisions of the peace settlement should be that England should cede Bermuda, and the Bahama Islands just off the coast of Florida, or perhaps Canada, would the Senator like to live next door to Mr. Hitler?

Mr. KING. The Senator is assuming a great many things which, in my opinion, are not in the realm of reasonable assumption.

Mr. MINTON. I am assuming only one thing—that Mr. Hitler might defeat England.

Mr. KING. I do not agree with that assumption; but, even if he should defeat England, I have not the slightest idea that it would jeopardize the safety of the United States.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Mr. President-

Mr. KING. I yield to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. MINTON. Will the Senator yield to me just a minute longer so that I can finish this thought?

Mr. KING. I yield to the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. MINTON. The Senator said America could not be successfully attacked unless the attacking country had bases near our shores. That is true; but suppose Hitler got the bases from England in the peace settlement after a victory over England. Suppose he got Bermuda, right at the door of New York, or got the Bahamas, just off the coast of Florida, or perhaps got part of Canada, just to the north of us. Then would he not have all the bases he needed?

Mr. KING. Mr. President, we can assume any situation which might be disadvantageous to any country, or to any individual, or to any cause; but we are talking as realists now, and we are not predicating our course upon hypotheses, some of which have little basis upon which to rest and some of which rest only in the realm of imagination.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for one more question?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. MINTON. Was not Munich due to the fact that England felt that she was not a match for Mr. Hitler?

Mr. KING. Before I reply to that question may I revert to the former assumptions of the Senator from Indiana? I do not and cannot assume that Hitler will defeat the British Empire, take possession of Great Britain, and seize as a part of the booty some of the British possessions in the Atlantic. The British Empire contains millions of brave men and women who are ready and willing to defend their country against any foe. The British Empire with her millions of people and her great resources will not and cannot be defeated by Hitler. Moreover, there are democratic forces in the world which would be aroused to vigorous action were Hitler to determine to destroy the liberty of democratic nations of the world.

Recurring to the Senator's last question, may I say that there have been many interpretations by politicians and statesmen in various countries concerning the Munich conference?

I do not think that the British Prime Minister when at Munich believed that Great Britain was not a match for Hitler. Undoubtedly both he and Daladier regarded the military forces of Germany as exceedingly formidable. It is quite likely that they believed that Germany had a superior air force which would, in the early stages of any conflict, give to the attack of the Nazi government considerable advantage.

But England and France knew that the Maginot line of fortifications was invulnerable against any frontal attack. They knew that France possessed perhaps the best and strongest army of any nation in the world; that England's Navy would be an effective blockade of Germany and effectively aid in transporting troops from England's dominions and possessions. They also knew of the military strength of Czechoslovakia, which would be of powerful aid in a conflict with the Hitler regime.

Undoubtedly the British and French Premiers were deeply concerned over the possibility, if not probability, of war, and they attempted by what was called a policy of appeasement—which, by the way, did not appease—to avert the tragedy of another European war.

I have no doubt that Hitler overreached the two representatives at the conference; I have no doubt that he deceived them as he had deceived them before. He had given many assurances before the Munich conferences that Germany's ambitions would be satisfied when the Saar Basin was restored, when Germany had control of the Rhineland, and when Austria was brought under the control of the Reich.

Hitler further stated at the Munich conference that if the small Sudeten area were relinquished by Czechoslovakia, Germany had no further designs in Eastern or Central Europe. Unfortunately for Great Britain and France and Czechoslovakia, and I believe for Europe, the assurances and promises of Hitler at the Munich conference deceived Chamberlain and Daladier, which resulted in the destruction of Czechoslovakia and further aggressive movements by Hitler.

France and Great Britain were overplayed at Munich and the concessions there made are the direct, if not the proximate, cause of the brutal and unfortunate aggressions by Hitler since then.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Mr. President, will the able Senator yield at that point?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. LUNDEEN. If the Senator from Utah will permit me, I should like to say to the able Senator from Indiana [Mr. Minton] that there is a remedy for the Bermuda situation and the West Indies. Repeatedly on this floor I have called attention to the fact that the great European powers owe us vast debts, billions of dollars, and that we should adopt the Andrew Jackson good Democratic doctrine of laying hands on them and seizing them now, when European nations cannot budge from Europe. You say the Germans are coming—I say, let us get there first.

The other day some Senator said, "Why, that means war." Why war? One moment I hear able Senators on the floor say that England is trembling in her boots and that we must go over and save her.

Mr. KING. Let me say that I have heard no such statement, and I do not believe any American Senator believes that Great Britain needs our help to save her.

Mr. LUNDEEN. I am not attributing that statement to the distinguished Senator from Utah.

Mr. KING. I hope not.

Mr. LUNDEEN. But the statement has been made that something has to be done about the so-called democracies of France and Great Britain. If they are in fear over there, and need help from the outside, they are not coming over here to fight to prevent the payment of an honorable debt which they dishonorably failed to pay.

Mr. KING. Let me say to my friend that I do not rise to discuss foreign debts—do not desire to be drawn into a discussion of the debt question.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. KING. I have the floor in my own right. May I repeat that I rose merely to ask a few questions concerning the military bill which is before us and which carries appropriations of more than $500,000,000. I have been diverted by a number of questions which have been suggested, and my friend from Minnesota now raises another question which I do not deem relevant to a consideration of the military appropriations bill. However, I may say because of the question raised by the Senator from Minnesota that there are two sides of the question of foreign debts. It must be remembered that the United States was one of the belligerents. We took our place side by side with the allied nations and were profoundly concerned in the issues then involved. As one of the Allies we were interested in winning the war, and our obligation was to take every honorable means to accomplish that result. We extended credit to our associates in the war and they extended credits to and among themselves. Great Britain extended credit to Italy during the war to the amount, as I recall, of four and a half billion dollars, and Great Britain extended loans to Belgium of several billion dollars; and Great Britain and France both extended credits to other nations who were allies with them in the terrible conflict. The fact is that Great Britain loaned to the Allies in the war more than the United States loaned to Great Britain.

The Senator will forgive me when I say that I would repel the suggestion that we should seize Bermuda, or any part of Great Britain's territory, or, for that matter, any part of the territory of any other nation for obligations which may be owing to the United States.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KING. Wait until I get through. If the Senator from Minnesota owed me a thousand dollars, I would repel the thought that I should seize any part of his territory, or of his farm, or any of his substance.

Mr. LUNDEEN. We are doing just that, Mr. President.
Mr. KING. I would sue him in the courts, and then have the courts lay their hands upon his property.

Mr. LUNDEEN. And the sheriff would seize the property.
Mr. KING. But, as I stated, I am not going to be drawn into a discussion of that subject because there are two sides. I will make one further observation and then depart from the debt question because, as I have stated, it is not the question before the Senate.

Soon after the United States entered the war representatives of Great Britain and France made inquiry as to what our Government could and would do in order to carry forward to success the common cause. I happened to have the honor of being present at the White House when a number of Senators and representatives of our military and naval departments were present, as well as several representatives, as I recall, of Great Britain and France. The meeting had been called by the President of the United States in response to the inquiry as to what the United States would be able to do in the prosecution of the war. The reply was to the effect that we could not send to France any considerable number of troops until early in 1918. Our Chief of Staff made clear the situation and indicated the steps necessary to be taken in order to send to the battle front any considerable number of troops. During the discussion it was stated that our allies had expended in the purchase of commodities, foodstuffs, munitions of war, and so forth, substantially all of their money and a considerable portion of their stocks and bonds. It was made clear that our allies must have food supplies and munitions in order to hold the lines and to carry forward the conflict. I recall the views that were expressed by representatives of our allies that they would continue to hold the lines awaiting the arrival of our troops; and they stated in substance that they must, in order to repel their assailants, have help in food supplies, munitions, and so forth, and that they would match their boys and their blood against the food and supplies and munitions which were imperative and required in the joint undertaking. It was there arranged, as I recall, that credit would be extended to our allies to the amount of billions of dollars in order that payment might be made for the supplies which were to be shipped from the United States.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President-

Mr. KING. I yield to the Senator from Indiana.
Mr. MINTON. The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. Lundeen]

Mr. MINTON. The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. LUNDEEN] suggests that when we find England in extremity we should rush in and seize what England has to satisfy our demands upon England. In advocating that course is not the Senator from Minnesota adopting the technique of Mr. Hitler?

Mr. KING. I am afraid he is.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Mr. President—

Mr. KING. I yield to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. LUNDEEN. I had no intention of intruding this discussion into the able Senator's exposition in this debate, but merely to reply, if I were permitted, to my friend the Senator from Indiana [Mr. MINTON]. I will, however, call the Senator's attention to the fact that the policy I mentioned has been very successful in the past, not only on the part of Mr. Hitler-whose doctrines he seems to be well able to defend himself. They have proved successful in the advocacy of a great Democrat-Andrew Jackson-against France when she was in the extremity of a war with Great Britain. He did not hesitate to say, "We will seize your territory and we will seize your property, and we will take the territory that you have in the Western Hemisphere unless you pay the debt.'

He was not afraid. He was a red-blooded American. He argued for Americans and did not seek to find excuses for the nations of Europe. He held true to his own. He formed a thoroughgoing American policy.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the example of any one person, whether saint or sinner, statesman or politician, should not control us in the determination of serious questions affecting our internal welfare and our international relations. Presidents are not always sound in their views, and even great men such as Andrew Jackson was, may say and do things which are not in harmony with moral or political principles or with sound statesmanship. Statesmen sometimes do things which later they regret and which fail to command the approval of later generations. I am sure there is no similarity between President Jackson and Adolph Hitler. President Jackson never manifested any of the malignant spirit exhibited by the Nazi leader. If he was unjust at any time, I would experience regret and would be inclined to hope that in the Great Beyond where the spirit of this redoubtable leader reposes he would dissociate himself from any covetous views which he might have entertained during his public

Mr. LUNDEEN. Mr. President, the Senator does not mean to say that he regrets that we collected the debt from France? Why so much melting kindness toward debtor nations—they scorn any sign of weakness on our part-we need iron in our systems and backbone in our policies. European nations deride our scented letters and kindly notes. We need that great Democrat today who carried on so well more than a hundred years ago, Andrew Jackson. He threatened the French and collected the French debt. Why not talk about that at our Jackson Day banquets?

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I shall make no comment upon that matter. I merely state that if my friend is advocating aggressive policies, the seizure of property by reason of the fact that we are stronger than somebody else, I am not in favor of acting the bully because our Nation may be stronger, or some other nation may be owing us. I am unwilling to apply the law of the tooth-and-the-nail. I am in favor, so far as possible, of adjusting international controversies by peaceable means. I am in favor of Roosevelt's good-neighbor policy. Notwithstanding that the idea perhaps would meet with derision and scorn here and elsewhere, I think we could do nothing better for the promotion of world peace than to call an international conference for the purpose of reducing armaments, or formulating a plan under the terms of which this Nation and other nations might be relieved of the frightful burdens which are now pressing upon the people of our country and the people of the world.

We are not upon this earth to become a great military nation. We are here as a great democratic nation, and the policies of democracy are the policies of peace, not war; of world amity; of world unity; of world solidarity. Professing, as we do-and I fear too many of us are only making a profession—that ours is a Christian nation, I commend to my friend from Minnesota, who seems so belligerent today, the lessons and the teachings of the Great Master—a little forgiveness, a little charity, a little more of the spirit of peace, and a large portion of the spirit of love.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I think it is appropriate to observe that even with the provisions made in the pending bill the United States Army will still not be among the largest armies of the world. The figures I saw about a year ago indicated that the United States Army was about fifteenth in rank among the armies of the world, and I know that, speaking for myself, I was not overly impressed by current considerations in coming to my conclusion on this

I believe it is noteworthy and appropriate for me to say that the Republican members of the subcommittee joined with the majority members in approving the pending appro-

Mr. LUNDEEN. Mr. President, at this point I ask unanimous consent to introduce into the RECORD Senate Resolution 111, offered by me, which reads:

Whereas it has been widely reported that there has been developed and tested in Europe, under actual war conditions, a new type of aerial bomb of superdestructive power and supposedly liquid oxygen character; and

Whereas the officials of the United States War Department have, before the Senate Military Affairs Committee, admitted that such a superaerial bomb was tested in Spain but that they did not yet know the secret of that bomb or how to equal its power in aerial bombs of American design; and

Whereas it has been reported in the press that Lester P. Barlow, George B. Holderer, and Herbert Bugbird, of Baltimore and New York, all United States citizens and explosives experts and authori-

York, all United States citizens and explosives experts and authorities on liquid oxygen-carbon explosive and aerial bombs, have made public certain information tending to reveal an extensive war hazard in the placement of large gas and oil tanks, exposed to aerial bomb attack, within the large cities of the United States, and that such tanks, if war is declared upon the United States, may be detonated by liquid-oxygen bombs dropped from enemy bombing planes, and thereby cause widespread loss of life and destruction of vast sections of city property; and

Whereas there is grave danger of a major war in Europe; and
Whereas there is grave danger of a major war in Europe; and whereas the United States may become involved in any such war, and it is essential that any war hazards that may exist, due to large gas and oil tanks being located in the heavily populated districts, be determined at once and the proper safeguards established:
Therefore be it York, all United States citizens and explosives experts and authori-

Therefore be it.

Therefore be it Resolved, That the Committee on Military Affairs, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized and directed to make a full and complete investigation with respect to (1) the extent of the war hazards to the lives and properties of residents of the United States resulting from the location of large gas and oil tanks within heavily populated districts of the United States, and (2) the means of eliminating or decreasing such hazards for the purpose of more adequately insuring the safety of such lives and properties. The committee shall report to the Senate as soon as practicable the results of its investigations, together with its recommendations.

The bomb referred to was tried out at Barcelona, it is claimed, and before the Military Affairs Committee and other committees and before those in authority it has been held out as a bomb which would destroy human life within an area of one-eighth of a mile.

If we are to be saving the world again, let us have bigger and better bombs. I do not want any nation to have any better bombs than the United States. I want this matter investigated by experts. We have technical experts and engineers in this country as good as there are in the world. I am not worried about that. We will have as fine defenses as any other nation.

While I am on the floor I should like to say to the Senators present that when the great Democrat Andrew Jackson left the White House, because of his insistence upon the payment of debts which nations owed this country, and his collections, because of his unafraid, red-blooded, American attitude, he left the White House with a surplus in the Treasury and no debt, whereas we are plunging down and over the precipice, and almost any moment we may be rushing into destruction, financial inflation, or whatever it may be called. We had better turn back the pages a little in American history to the days of glory and greatness, and to the doctrines of the fathers and founders of this country, instead of running along after the "smart boys," who have not done so well. Jackson was a great Democrat. Let our Democratic Senators heed his advice. Let us collect those debts, the billions owed us by Great Britain and France and others. Let them pay or turn over the West Indies or other valuable property. That is good democratic doctrine.

MIR FRAZIER. Mr. President, I should like to ask the

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator in charge of the bill a few questions with regard to this increase of the appropriation for the Reserve Officers' Training Corps.

On page 4 of the report of the committee, in the last paragraph, there is noted an appropriation for the Reserve Officers' Training Corps. The first item is to provide for 1,435 additional advanced course students, $138,702. Is that additional number of students in colleges which now have R. O. T. C., or in new colleges where the R. O. T. C. training is to be installed?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. The request was for a total of 18,000. This number it was necessary to add in order to make the 18,000 in the colleges which now have R. O. T. C.

Mr. FRAZIER. From whom did the request come?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. It came from the War Department.

Mr. FRAZIER. The additional 1,435 are to be in the colleges which now have R. O. T. C. units?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. The committee was in receipt of requests from practically every college president in the United States for this increase along with some others. Mr. FRAZIER. The next item is for the installation of 37 new senior units. What does that mean?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I believe it was in 1938 that Congress created 54 units in the several colleges. This item is to increase that by doubling it, to create another 54 units.

Mr. FRAZIER. In the same colleges? Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. No; in different colleges throughout the United States. Mr. FRAZIER. The next item is for the installation of 17 new junior units. I suppose that means in high schools? Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. In junior colleges, smaller

Mr. FRAZIER. There are some in high schools.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I believe that is correct.

Mr. FRAZIER. I have noticed that a number of high schools throughout the Nation where the school boards have asked for R. O. T. C. units, they have voted on the question and voted it down.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I think the record will show that some of the most efficient units are in the high schools throughout the country. I think the one here in Washington ranks among the most efficient among the units throughout the Nation.

Mr. FRAZIER. The junior units? Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Yes. Mr. FRAZIER. That will make 54 new units in new schools? Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. That is correct.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, it seems to me rather strange that we should provide for drilling the students in the high schools and junior colleges, and even in the universities, in war courses. In practically all of the universities which have these courses, and in some of the high schools and junior colleges, the courses are compulsory. In practically all of the universities where there is military training it is compulsory. The students have to take the military training in order to get degrees at the universities. In fact, there are only three or four universities or land-grant colleges which do not have compulsory military training at the present time. One that does not have it is the University of Wisconsin, one is the University of Minnesota, and I think the third is one in North Dakota. The agricultural college in North Dakota is a landgrant college, but the Legislature of North Dakota forbade compulsory courses in military training. There are still units in both of the schools in North Dakota; they have such a course in Minnesota, and they have one in Wisconsin, but the courses are not compulsory there.

Several times I have offered an amendment to the military appropriation bill providing that none of the money should be used where there was a compulsory course, but I have never been able to get anywhere with the amendment, and I shall not offer it at this time, because I believe it is useless to urge the amendment. But I have not changed my mind in regard to the matter. I still think that it is against all American principles to compel the boys in the universities and high schools and junior colleges to take military training in order to entitle them to degrees. It is un-American, in my opinion, and I hope the time will come when it will be forbidden, when military training in colleges, if we have any, will be voluntary, instead of compulsory, as it is now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MINTON in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. That completes the committee amendments.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I am so much opposed to the enormous appropriations we are making that I think it is time that we should try to bring about a little economy. I therefore move to recommit the pending bill, with instruc-tions to the committee to reduce the appropriations to the extent of 10 percent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Utah that the bill be recommitted.

The motion was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the engrossment of the amendments and the third reading of the

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments, ask for a conference with the House thereon, and that the Presiding Officer appoint the conferees.

The motion was agreed to; and the Chair appointed Mr. Thomas of Oklahoma, Mr. Hayden, Mr. Overton, Mr. RUSSELL, Mr. SHEPPARD, Mr. TOWNSEND, and Mr. BRIDGES conferees on the part of the Senate.

SALE OF COTTON ABROAD BELOW COST

Mr. McKELLAR obtained the floor.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me a moment?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I am reminded to make the observation which I am about to make because this morning I listened to a very informative argument which grew out of certain interesting statements made by the senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. George] in reference to the resolution which he is sponsoring, which relates to the sale of cotton to parties abroad, embodying the subject of subsidies.

I might state to the Senator from Tennessee that I shall occupy the floor but a moment. Of course, the subject of cotton is of interest to all Senators from the South, because we are today experiencing greater difficulty in selling our products than ever before in the history of cotton production in the South. It occurred to me that if we would endeavor to create friendly markets over the face of the earth instead of apparently endeavoring to drive the markets away from us, particularly the people of the South would not be up against the situation they are facing today in attempting to get rid of more than 11,500,000 bales of cotton.

I have in mind a subject upon which I spoke at length some time ago, at which time the junior Senator from Indiana, who now presides, was on the floor of the Senate. It was at that time that I recommended, as a Member of this body, that our Government recognize Nationalist Spain. I say again to the Members of the Senate that I hope our Government will without further delay recognize the Franco Government of Spain, in view of the fact that it is constantly stated in the columns of the press that all the nations of the earth interested in sundry products are selling now to the duly constituted Government of Spain, and in view of the fact that we of the South have millions of bales of cotton to sell, I hope we will soon bring about recognition of that Government by our Government, and particularly considering the fact that the United States of America and the Soviet Union are the only two of the important governments in the world today which have failed and refused to recognize the Nationalist Government of Spain.

I ask that an editorial of several days ago, from the columns of the Washington Evening Star, a very able editorial, be published as a part of my remarks, and that that be followed by a clipping I made from a magazine, the name of which I do not now have, which lists the number of countries which have recognized Spain. I ask that there be printed also a clipping from the New York Times carrying an article with a Baltimore, Md., date line of March 21.

There being no objection, the matters were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Washington Evening Star] COMMUNIST TREASON

The death throes of the Spanish Republic have been trans-

The death throes of the Spanish Republic have been transformed into a prolonged, violent convulsion by the Communist rebellion in Madrid, now reported suppressed in Madrid by Gen. Jose Miaja and his National Defense Council.

For more than a week final peace in Spain was thwarted by a fractious minority interested not in the welfare of the Spanish people, but only in leaving to Nationalist General Franco a Spain more broken, more bloody, more embittered than it has become in 32 months of civil war.

This Communist revolt against surrender in the face of overwhelming odds would be of little significance if it were not the last chapter of a story of intrigue, domination, and intimidation by terror which the disciples of Stalin have written throughout the later phases of the war. the later phases of the war.

The Popular Front originally united Republicans, Socialists, and Communists behind the one ideal of preserving for Spain a democratic form of government, but the exigencies of war put it at the mercy of Moscow. The price of the badly needed assistance was Communist primacy, and under Premier Juan Negrin the Communist grip upon the Republican government tightened in a virtual reign of terror which destroyed the semblance of a demo-

The true story of Communist machinations behind the retreating Republican front is now being told by Americans returning from Spain. It is a tale of plots, private prisons, dread Cheka police, unjustifiable executions, ruthless suppression of opposition and despotic domination of the army.

All this fostered internal dissension and so weakened the Republican forces that whatever unity and morale they might have possessed to resist General Franco and his foreign legions crumbled.

INTERNATIONAL EVENTS IN BRIEF—THE INTERNATIONAL IMPORTANCE OF THE QUESTION OF REPATRIATION OF THE RED SOLDIERS—RECOGNITION OF THE NATIONALIST GOVERNMENT

OF THE NATIONALIST GOVERNMENT

The majority of the militiamen who formed the ranks of the Red Army have been undeceived as regards Marxist propaganda. Refugees in a foreign country, the former Marxists combatants found themselves suddenly face to face with a somber perspective of hunger and misery. They ask themselves, "What will the attitude of the Spain of Franco be toward those who yesterday were enemies and today knock at her door asking protection and aid?" The answer may be found in what has transpired to date. The Nationalist Government has not given the lie to the promises of its leader. The frontier is open at Irun for all those who want to enter Nationalist Spain which bears no malice toward those who once were hostile to her. Spain has generously opened her arms to receive and pardon the men whom international Marxism exploited as mere instruments in its service.

The repatriation of 80,000 fugitives from Catalonia is of such transcendental importance that not even the enemies of Nationalist transcendental importance that not even the enemies of Nationalist Spain have failed to recognize it. The voluntary decision to return to Nationalist Spain unanimously adopted by thousands of men who had fled from the "red" zone is a manifestation of the real sentiments of the Spanish people. Thus this may be considered as a plebiscite. In effect, the "red" soldiers keep up their useless final resistance only because of the terror maintained by the Marxist leaders. These men have nothing in common with the cause of the committee presided over by Negrin, as they have had ample opportunity to view the failures of the social revolution preached by their leaders. In the territory still under the yoke of Marxism commerce and industry are at a standstill. The agricultural produce is insufficient to still the hunger of the civil population, although Valencia is one of the richest regions in Spain and yields two crops a year. In the "red" zone the fountains of Spanish economy have been cut off during the 30 months of civil strife. Not a single improvement has been legislated for of civil strife. Not a single improvement has been legislated for the Marxist worker by his "protectors." And besides this total collapse of the economic system in the Marxist zone, the "reds' daily sacrifice thousands of lives as the price of their stubborn and suicidal resistance. At this very moment it is only the oppoand suicidal resistance. At this very moment it is only the opposition of Communist troops which prevents peace.

In the face of these facts, it is absurd to think that Negrin ever had the backing of the people. The people lost, along with their liberty and free will, the most essential attributes of human beings. It is easy to enslave a people, but fraud and tyranny can never be interpreted as the legitimate functioning of government. In the case of the population, both civil and combatant, of the "red" zone, it is terror alone that holds them subject to Marxist tyrants who will kill anyone rather than yield their power. The men who yesterday faced the soldiers of Nationalist Spain in battle today express their desire and are now repatriated to Spain.

Recently the Minister of the Interior Serior Serrano Suñer de-their desire and are now repatriated to Spain.

Recently the Minister of the Interior, Señor Serrano Suñer, declared that the number of refugees entering Spain at Irun was very great and every day thousands more come. But solving the problem of their care is one of the greatest satisfactions of Nationalist Spain, because their repatriation is more than anything a symbol of the defeat of the "red" lie of "resistance to the bitter end" which the "red" committees attributed to the "people."

The following countries have accorded de jure recognition to the Nationalist Government: Argentina, Albania, Australia, Bolivia, Brazil, Bulgaria, Czechoslovakia, Denmark, Egypt, El Salvador, Estonia, Finland, France, Germany, Great Britain, Greece, Guatemala, Vatican City, Hungary, Ireland, Italy, Japan, Lithuania, Manchukuo, Netherlands, Nicaragua, Norway, Peru, Poland, Portugal, Rumania, Switzerland, Sweden, Turkey, Uruguay, Venezuela, and Yugoslavia.

The only two world powers that have failed to recognize the Nationalist Government are the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the United States of America.

CHALLENGES ROOSEVELT

Baltimore, Md., March 21.—Speaking today before the Maryland Chapter of the International Federation of Catholic Alumnae, Dr. Joseph F. Thorning, professor of sociology and social history at Mount St. Mary's College, Emmitsburg, Md., declared that "the time had come for every convinced believer in God to bring to the notice of the Honorable Franklin D. Roosevelt, President of the United States, and the Honorable Cordell Hull, United States Secretary of State, that patriotism, international law, and love of religious liberty all suggest early recognition of the defeat of the Soviet Union in Spain."

Dr. Thorning made public the text of a talegree by the contraction of the second states.

Dr. Thorning made public the text of a telegram he sent to President Roosevelt Sunday, in which he inquired "which faction in Leftist Spain Dr. Fernando de los Rios, accredited Spanish envoy in Washington, represents.

"Does he speak for the Negrin group, with which he was most closely allied politically, and which has now been revealed as dominated by Communist elements still engaged in active rebellion, or does he claim contact with military officers who suggested exile for both [former President Manuel] Azaña and [former Premier Juan] Negrin? Juan] Negrin?

Juan Negrin?

"I also address most respectful inquiry as to whether our Government, in delaying recognition of the only peaceful, orderly, liberty-loving government of Spain, is willing to condone the brutal suppression of all public worship in Leftist Spain," the telegram continued. Appended to the signature was also the name of Dr. Joseph B. Code, professor of history of the Catholic University of America.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I thank the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKellar] very much for his indulgence.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MINTON in the chair), as in executive session, laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting sundry nominations (and withdrawing a nomination), which were referred to the appropriate committees.

(For nominations this day received and nominations withdrawn, see the end of Senate proceedings.)

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

MONDAY, MARCH 27, 1939

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Heavenly Father, before Thine infinite throne we pause and pray in the name of the Prophet of human brotherhood; help us to hate the things that make Thee mourn. Forgive us and let us know that behind every judgment beats the heart of divine tenderness. We bless Him who for the joy that was set before Him endured the cross. Alone He dares, defies, and forsakes all, and takes His place in the final scene of earth's greatest tragedy. May we endure it with Him in every moral movement, in every appeal that comes from the bed of pain, and in every cry that bursts from a breaking heart. Dear Lord God, persuade us that when love becomes frozen in the cold embrace of selfishness we die as we have lived, alone. It is love that gilds life and gives it worth. We pray that His bright and morning star may shine in the firmament of our souls. This day may we work diligently, be altogether considerate in word and deed, and the seal of Thine approval shall be upon our lips. In the name of our Lord and Saviour. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. St. Claire, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had ordered that Mr.

Townsend and Mr. La Follette be appointed as additional members on the part of the Senate of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 4425) entitled "An act to provide for reorganizing agencies of the Government, and for other purposes."

COMMITTEE ON PATENTS

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Wednesday and Thursday of this week the subcommittee of the Committee on Patents conducting hearings on the trade-mark bill may sit during the sessions of the House.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

SPECIAL JOINT COMMITTEE ON FORESTRY

Mr. SABATH, from the Committee on Rules, reported the following privileged resolution (Report No. 317), which was read, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and ordered to be printed.

House Resolution 143

Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for consideration of House Concurrent Resolution 11, concurrent resolution continuing the Special Joint Committee on Forestry. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the concurrent resolution and shall continue not to exceed 1 hour, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Eules, the concurrent resolution shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the reading of the concurrent resolution for amendment the Committee shall rise and report the same to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the concurrent resolution and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit, with or without instructions.

COMMITTEE ON BANKING AND CURRENCY

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Speaker, on last Friday by direction of the Committee on Banking and Currency I requested that the committee have until midnight Saturday night to report on the bill (H. R. 3232) to amend the National Housing Act and for other purposes, and that the minority be given until midnight tonight to file minority views. I find that the committee has reported the bill (H. R. 5324) to amend the National Housing Act, and for other purposes, as a substitute for the bill H. R. 3232, and I ask unanimous consent that my request be granted as to H. R. 5324.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I presume the gentleman is taking care of the minority in his request?

Mr. SPENCE. That is the very purpose of the request. I am asking that the minority have until midnight tonight to file minority views.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute to make two announcements.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. Speaker, on Saturday I promised the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Gifford] that he would be given an opportunity to be heard on the migratory bird refuge program of the Biological Survey. The House Committee on Wildlife Conservation will commence hearings next Friday morning at 10 o'clock, at which time we will hear those who wish to be heard, and continue the hearings until all who have indicated a desire to be heard can be heard.

Mr. Speaker, in the Washington Post I have noted a reference to the fact that the Virginia trout season opens on April 20, and in the article several good trout streams are mentioned. They will be heavily fished streams. What we need most, Mr. Speaker, is an opportunity for solitude in our fishing, to get away from the stress and strain here. I know some good trout streams in Virginia where we can find quiet and an opportunity to commune with Nature and through Nature with Nature's God. I shall welcome the privilege of arranging fishing trips after April 20 for any Member of the House who wishes to go trout fishing. [Applause.]

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. KEAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey?

There was no objection.

Mr. KEAN. Mr. Speaker, on Monday, March 20, the House received a message from the President of the United States, in which he stated that he would not ask for the increase in the total authorized public debt of the United States from $45,000,000,000 to $50,000,000,000, which he had indicated that he would request. Certain business interests might, perhaps, take heart from this and consider that there was going to be some halt to the extravagances of the Government. However, the administration has shown no signs of ceasing its spending policies and there is nothing in the present law which will cause it the least inconvenience in continuing these policies.

The statement that the national debt today is only $39,-950,000,000 is entirely false. The gross national debt today is over $45,000,000,000. For besides the direct debt there is outstanding in the hands of the public $5,416,700,000 of obligations fully guaranteed by the United States Government, as follows:

Federal Farm Mortgage Corporation
Home Owners' Loan Corporation
Commodity Credit CorporationFederal Housing Administration (guaranteed de-	206, 000, 000
bentures)	1, 700, 000
Reconstruction Finance Corporation	819, 000, 000
U. S. Housing Administration	114, 000, 000
	The second second second

Total 5, 416, 700, 000

In addition to which there are authorized, but unissued, guaranteed obligations to the sum of an additional $9,485,-000,000. Thus, without any change in the present law, which authorizes an increase in the regular debt to $45,000,000,000, the gross debt might be increased to the fantastic sum of $60,000,000,000 by issuing the authorized guaranteed obligations.

The following list shows the securities guaranteed by the Government which have been authorized but so far are unissued:

Commodity Credit Corporation	$294,000,000
Home Owners' Loan Corporation	1, 862, 000, 000
Federal Farm Mortgage Corporation	612, 000, 000
Tennessee Valley Authority	100, 000, 000
Reconstruction Finance Corporation (approximate)	2, 931, 000, 000
U. S. Housing Authority	686, 000, 000

Also, but in a little different category, there is approximately a $3,000,000,000 contingent potential liability under the Federal Housing Administration. These bonds can only be issued if there is a default of F. H. A. mortgages, and, if issued, they would be secured by home mortgages which under present business conditions might not result in a very large loss to the Government.

With the thought in mind that if we are ever to pay our debts we must put a stop to this almost unlimited number of securities issued by or under the guaranty of the Treasury, I have introduced a bill to forbid the further issuance of Federal securities guaranteed by the United States in all cases except that of the Federal Housing Administration. The bill reads as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That after the date of enactment of this act no obligation shall be issued by any of the following agencies which contains a guaranty of payment of either the principal or interest on such obligation by the United States: The Commodity Credit Corporation, the Federal Farm Mortgage Corporation, the Home Owners' Loan Corporation, the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, the Tennessee Valley Authority, or the United States Housing Authority. The power of the Secretary of the Treasury to acquire obligations issued by any such agency shall be construed to include the power to acquire such obligations, notwithstanding the absence of any such guaranty by the United States.

How does the administration get the money at present? Well, for example, the Reconstruction Finance Corporation today owes the Treasury $381,582,000. The Treasury needs money. What will it do? It will sell, say, $382,000,000 Reconstruction Finance Corporation bonds to the public with the guaranty of the United States. It then repays the Treasury for the money which has been spent and which has already been received from the public by issuing previous Treasury bonds. Thus, presto, the Treasury has the money; the direct Government debt is not increased; the public is fooled; everyone is happy, except the taxpayer when he finds out what has been going on.

I have before me the daily statement of the United States Treasury. On page 2 there is a summary of the condition of the Treasury, in which it states: "Gross public debt this date"—and the figure given is $39.950.000.000.

There is no mention of the additional $5,416,700,000 of guaranteed securities. If an officer of any corporation in the United States were to put out a statement so misleading, under the Truth in Securities Act he would very shortly land in jail. What is the advantage of handling the matter this way? The only possible reason that I can see is to fool the public into thinking that the debt is much smaller than it is, for it achieves no other purpose.

The normal way to handle this financing would be for the fully owned agencies of the Government to borrow any money which they need from the Treasury and to have the Treasury issue its own securities to the public. Not only would this be the honest way to do it, but it would be financially advantageous to the Government, for the direct Treasury obligations sell at a slightly higher figure than do the guaranteed obligations.

People have long memories and have not forgotten the repudiation by the United States of its own word with reference to gold bonds. They therefore consider a guaranteed obligation not quite so sure of payment as a direct Government obligation. A rough estimate of the additional interest cost at which these guaranteed obligations have been sold, as compared with Treasury securities of like maturity, would seem to show that the additional cost to the Government has been somewhere in the neighborhood of one-fourth of 1 percent.

With $5,000,000,000 of these obligations now outstanding a rough figuring will show that the United States has had to pay additional interest charges on the guaranteed debt which the Government has issued so far of over $12,000,000 a year, merely in order to keep the taxpayers from realizing what the debt really is. But what is a little thing like $12,000,000 yearly to this administration?

There are two excuses that the new dealers give for this method of selling securities. The first is that many institutions may feel they already hold too many Government securities and that under another name, such as R. F. C. or Federal Farm Mortgage, they might be willing to add these bonds to their portfolio. This argument, of course, is pure unadulterated bunk, as no one buys these securities for any reason except that they are fully guaranteed-principal and interest-by the United States.

The second reason is that they say these securities of Government agencies have behind them the assets of such agencies and, therefore, the Government may not have to fulfill its guaranty. This is partially true. But the argument falls by its own weight; for if there are ample assets to secure these bonds, why is it necessary for the Government to guarantee them before investors will buy? If we are to start figuring what assets are behind bonds sold by the Government, the next thing we would do would be to undertake an entirely new concept of Government financing and mortgage the various Government assets behind each bond issue. I am sure that an issue secured by a first mortgage on the Capitol would sell like hotcakes.

The truth is that the one and only reason for this method of Government financing is to fool the people. Let us be honest with ourselves and put a stop to it. [Applause.]

This can be accomplished by the adoption of the bill which I have today introduced.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. KEAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD, and include therein a copy of the bill I have today introduced.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey?

There was no objection.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD by inserting therein a speech I delivered before the National Rivers and Harbors Congress last Thursday.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Speaker, before the Committee of the Whole rose on Saturday an amendment was offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. Johnson] affecting seriously the Soil Conservation Service. The Soil Conservation Service has furnished to the subcommittee in charge of the bill a statement of the facts relative to this proposed amendment. I ask unanimous consent that this statement may be incorporated in the RECORD at this point for the information of the House.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Speaker, the statement to which I refer is as follows:

1. Mr. Johnson stated that the proposed amendment "would cut $52,000 from the personal service item in the District of Columbia and would reduce the general expenses under the research item from $1,631,000 to $1,300,000." This is not correct.

(a) The proposed amendment would reduce the general administrative expenses in Washington from $552,050 to $500,000. The proposed reduction of $52,050 on administrative funds would seriously curtail necessary work in an important phase of our work which is already operating under limited funds. Examination of Budget figures during the past 3 fiscal years will show that there has been no increase in funds for this item. On the other hand, there has been a material increase in our administrative work. The present appropriation is barely sufficient to carry the minimum administrative load necessary to insure proper administration of personnel, property, accounting, and auditing functions. Any reduction in the item would have the effect of reducing controls reduction in the term would have the effect of reducing controls necessary for compliance with procedures and practices required by law and regulations. In a service as large as the Soil Conservation Service, over-all administrative control of personnel, property, and finances is essential. It can best be accomplished in Washington, but it must be accomplished some place. The proposed reduction will have the effect of decentralizing this work to the field and of lessening the amount of effective coordination.

to the field and of lessening the amount of effective coordination which can be done in Washingtoon, D. C.

(b) With reference to other changes it amounts to a reduction of personal service item from $1,734,636 to $1,300,000. This affects of the coordinate of the not only the research item, but also covers all personal services in Washington, including map reproduction, technical supervisory and inspection activities, cooperative relations and planning, and in fact, all responsibilities of the Service.

2. A large portion of the expenditures in Washington goes toward helping serve farmers in districts such as the services rendered in the cartographic unit where all mapping work is consummated. Much of this work is of direct service to districts and can be done much more effectively at one single point than it can in numerous field offices. Consequently, it is not true that every dollar that the Congressman proposes to save in "overhead" in Washington could be used in supplying additional direct funds for districts relating to assistance in technical and engineering

3. Any reduction in either the research or general administrative expense item could not be made available for cooperation with districts inasmuch as this cooperative work with districts is specifically provided for in the operations appropriation.

4. There is the implication that there is no direct service to districts from area offices and other field offices. This implication is erroneous in that much of the service rendered to districts can be carried on more effectively in Washington, the regional office, or in the area office, than it could be by rendering all types of services as a large number of local offices in each district. Such services as a large number of local offices in each district. Such services as surveys, drafting, preparing base maps for the development of farm plans, the supplying of planting stock, and many other similar services are types of services that can be more effectively rendered in the area, regional, or Washington offices than they can in a local office because of the variation in the needs of the districts, and because of the possibility of maintaining well trained people and satisfactory equipment which can be utilized more effectively in this manner.

5. Congressman Johnson refers to the policy of the Soil Con-servation Service relating to contacts with Members of Congress. The rule that Congressman Johnson refers to is not a rule relating servation Service relating to contacts with Members of Congress. The rule that Congressman Johnson refers to is not a rule relating to Washington but is a general statement of policy which was supplied to him some time ago, which is stated below:

"The policy which we have tried to maintain, and which is in effect today, may be stated as follows: Everyone throughout the Service is at liberty to maintain friendly and constructive contacts with Congressmen. We feel that because of the demands on the time of an official as high ranking as a Member of Congress and because of the multitude of problems with which they are called upon to deal, and to avoid misunderstanding, contacts with them should be made by officials who thoroughly understand the policies of the Department and of the Service and who are in a position to give a full and complete interpretation of these policies. While we have never prevented anyone from having friendly relations with Members of Congress, we do require that when official matters are discussed employees have full knowledge of the policies discussed and that the proper interpretations are given; further, that where the person making contacts does not have full knowledge, the matter be referred to the proper officials for interpretation. We believe that official contacts should be made with the knowledge of the administrative officer in charge and that at least an informal report be submitted subsequently so that we may have the full benefit of any constructive suggestions that were received. I do not see how we could otherwise carry on our work in an orderly way and of any constructive suggestions that were received. I do not see how we could otherwise carry on our work in an orderly way and also maintain here in Washington friendly and intelligent relation-ships with Congressmen. We have had the experience on several occasions where well-intentioned individuals have given to Congressmen information and erroneous interpretations as to certain actions were taken, mainly because they were not fully informed. As a consequence, such procedure has led to misunder-standings and differences of opinion which could have been avoided had the information been fully complete and accurate. We have taken steps from time to time to avoid repetition of such instances. We believe this to be sound."

It is not required, but indicated as desirable, that they contact the Chief of the Service or their immediate administrative officer before contacting Members of Congress. I believe that if this policy is read carefully you will find that it states very definitely that no one in the Service is required to refrain from contacting that no one in the Service is required to retrain from contacting Congressmen and maintaining friendly relations. Furthermore, this is a general policy of the Department, which the Service is trying to carry out, we believe for good reason, so that Members of Congress may be better served and will not be confused by receiving inadequate information and misinformation based upon somebody's interpretation who is not in a position to have the whole facts. Insofar as is known, the Service has always supplied the information which is requested whenever possible under the general regulations of the Department and of the Government, and will continue to do so. will continue to do so.

eral regulations of the Department and of the Government, and will continue to do so.

6. Congressman Johnson's statement implies that the figure of $21,483,444, which is the amount estimated will be spent in field operations this year includes at least 123 employees who are permanently stationed in Washington, but paid out of this particular fund. This item does not include the 123 employees who are permanently stationed in Washington, but consists only of actual field activities of the program for the year 1939, such as field research, operations, and all other phases of the field work. These 123 positions are included as a part of the item that has been allowed for personal services in Washington, namely, $1,734,636.

The Congressman further states that he has evidence that other letters have gone out of Washington calling on the boys in the field, on the pay roll, of course, to have their friends write Members of Congress, especially members of the Appropriations Committee, suggesting that this appropriation be increased $4,000,000. There has never to our knowledge been any instructions sent from Washington by letter or otherwise asking that field employees put pressure on Members of Congress, or suggesting that they ask other people to do so. If this has been done, it has been done without authorization or without suggestion. If there is such evidence we would be glad to have it, since it is against the avowed policy of the service. of the service.

If this limitation were imposed, it is our belief that it would be necessary to decentralize certain technical services that are now carried on in Washington to field offices, such as the cartographic work, and similar types of service. This would not only involve the expenditure of the same amount of funds but would entail larger expenses which undoubtedly would detract from rather than advance the objective of the Congressman in getting more direct funds into districts. We are sincerely interested in making all the services and funds available to districts that it is possible, but would like to point out again that some of these services can be supplied more readily and effectively by the Washington, regional, or area offices than they can by establishing complete services of all types in every district at a greater total cost.

SPECIAL JOINT COMMITTEE ON FORESTRY

Mr. FULMER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of House Concurrent Resolution 11. The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

House Concurrent Resolution 11

House Concurrent Resolution 11

Resolved, etc., That the special joint committee, which was authorized and directed to study and make investigation of the present and prospective situation with respect to the forest land of the United States, its condition, ownership, and management, as it affects a balanced timber budget, watershed protection, flood control, and the other commodities and social economic benefits which may be derived from such land, be authorized to continue the investigation begun under Senate Concurrent Resolution 31 of the Seventy-fifth Congress and for such purposes said committee shall have the same power and authority as were conferred upon it by Senate Concurrent Resolution 31 of the Seventy-fifth Congress, and shall report to the House as soon as practicable, and Congress, and shall report to the House as soon as practicable, and not later than April 1, 1940, the results of its investigation together with its recommendation for necessary legislation.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. WARREN. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, this joint investigation was authorized at the last session and $10,000 was provided, $5,000 from the contingent fund of the House and $5,000 from the contingent fund of the Senate. This authority heretofore given you expired on January 3. I understand you did not have much opportunity to carry on these investigations and you spent only $613.34 out of the $10,000.

Mr. FULMER. Six hundred and thirteen dollars and thirty-four cents from each House.

Mr. WARREN. A total of $1,226.68 out of the $10,000. I believe it is only fair to the House if we let this resolution go through by unanimous consent that the gentleman state to the House that the committee will not ask for over $10,-000 in all if the inquiry is continued, especially as you are going to end it next year.

Mr. FULMER. Will the gentlemen reserve his objection and let me make a short statement?

Mr. WARREN. Yes. Mr. FULMER. Mr. Speaker-

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FULMER. Yes.

Mr. MAPES. May I ask whether the gentleman has asked unanimous consent to bring up this concurrent resolution? Mr. FULMER. Yes; I have.

The SPEAKER. The matter now pending before the House is the request of the gentleman from South Carolina for the present consideration of a concurrent resolution by unanimous consent and the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. Warren] has reserved the right to object and has yielded to the gentleman from South Carolina for a brief statement and the gentleman from South Carolina now has the floor.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FULMER. I would like to make a brief statement.

Mr. RICH. If I may ask the gentleman a question, he can probably explain it in his statement.

Mr. FULMER. Yes.

Mr. RICH. I would like to ask the gentleman from South Carolina this question. If you are investigating the floodcontrol situation in this country, I may say we have made appropriations in the Army appropriation bill for that investigation. The Department of Agriculture has asked money for the same purpose, and we have also appropriated money in the Interior Department bill for the same purpose; and now you are coming in and asking for a continuation of the work of this special committee. In other words, we have four separate and distinct investigations going on of the same problem.

Mr. FULMER. Mr. Speaker, may I state to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that that is not the purpose of this joint committee at all. At the last session of Congress a joint committee was appointed to investigate the forestry problems of the country, of which we have many, and, as far as I am concerned, I believe that the building up and the preservation of our forestry resources is the most important thing pending before the Congress.

Last year was a campaign year and most of the Members had primary trouble and also the general elections, all of which prevented this from properly functioning. We held two meetings, one in the southeast at Jacksonville, Fla., and one in Sun Valley, Idaho, with two Members attending the Idaho meeting and at Jacksonville we had four Members. We secured wonderful information at both of these meetings. but what this committee now wants to do is to go into the various sections of this country, New England and other sections, to get at the real problems involved so we may be able to come back and make a report to the Congress upon which the Congress may pass constructive legislation taking care of these problems in every section, rather than have individual Members come in from time to time and introduce bills for their own section which do not get proper consideration because Members from other sections do not know what it is all about. From time to time appropriations are made, many of which are important, but in a great many instances they involve a wasting of money.

If this committee is permitted to function during the coming year when we can hold these hearings, I believe we will be able to come back to the Congress with information upon which we will be able to formulate and pass constructive legislation to do the thing that we ought to have done years ago, and in this way we will be able to increase the purchasing power of the people, give work to the unemployed, and supply revenue to truck lines and railroads in this country. The matter is more important at this time than ever before, because of fire protection, reforesting of millions of acres of commercially and farmer-owned lands.

We only spent at these two meetings around $1,200, but I want to say to you that when it comes to the matter of how much money we ought to have for this important work, each of you ought to understand that the work cannot be done carefully and correctly with $10,000. There are too many sections to cover where the problems are altogether different.

I may say that as far as I am concerned, as a Member of this Congress interested in doing constructive things, it is absolutely a shame for this Congress to appropriate from time to time thousands of dollars for various and sundry investigations that do not amount to a scrap of paper, and when it comes to an important piece of constructive work, whereby we may get information which will build up and preserve one of our most important resources, create purchasing power, and be helpful to the country, someone wants to say, "We cannot give you over $10,000."

What the Congress is going to do about the amount of money is another question. Just the other day we had up here an item involving a disease of certain trees and certain other matters. Certain gentlemen were vitally interested, and this may be a very important matter, but many of the Congressmen in other sections of the country do not know anything about it, just as many Congressmen in other sections do not know about the problems of the Southeast or New England or the far West or New York State. We ought to have complete information and come in here with a thorough understanding of the matter and pass the type of legislation that will be in the interest of the people as a whole and stop wasting the taxpayers' money. Just because some groups or some department want an appropriation.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FULMER. Yes.

Mr. RICH. This is for reforestation and flood control, is it not?

Mr. FULMER. We do propose to investigate flood control but if we have proper information and would spend money accordingly it would mean everything for flood control.

Mr. RICH. Then it is for reforestation, and the Interior Department has money appropriated to it for the purpose of investigating reforestation in this country, and the Department of Agriculture, I understand, has money for the same purpose. If this goes through, we will certainly have three departments, even if flood control is not involved, investigating the problems with respect to reforestation.

Mr. FULMER. I may say to the gentleman that I appreciate his stand for economy, but I hope you can gather from my remarks that we are continually and annually wasting money by appropriating for certain objects that many of the Members do not know anything whatsoever about, and because some department wants more money to waste on jobs and that as a rule is wasted. They are not going to make a direct investigation that will bring to you the actual facts involved in this matter from the lips of those who are interested in these sections.

Mr. RICH. Will you get information from the Department of Agriculture and from the Department of the Interior if this resolution is permitted to go through so we do not duplicate the work of those Departments?

Mr. FULMER. Oh, we go down to the various sections and have farmers and landowners, pulp people, hardwood people, and every other person interested in these problems, and who know what they want, to come in and give information before the committee.

Mr. RICH. I think the gentleman ought to call the Agricultural Department and the Interior Department before the committee starts to make this investigation.

Mr. FULMER. Oh, there are lots of folks right now lobbying around here for a tremendous increase in fire control, and I am for it, but who is getting the benefit of it today? Those fellows who own thousands of acres of land, going into immense wealth, while the farmers, the small landowners, are not getting that type of benefit. The farmers' lands in my country have been cut over and destroyed by the pulp and sawmill people, and nothing is being done to reforest that land or to inform that farmer as to what sort of timber should be cut or what sort should be left on the land, or anything to help him get the proper price for it. In other words, he is being robbed while we up here are appropriating money in the name of the farmer, and the farmer is left out of the picture and does not know what it is all about.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Speaker, I have no objection to the continuance of the investigation, and I do not think that I am going to object to the consideration of the resolution, but the reason I asked the gentleman to give assurance to the House is this: There is not one copper cent in the contingent fund of the House. The House has exhausted every single dollar of the contingent fund on one investigation—the Dies committee—and speaking only for myself, if this goes through, I shall be unwilling to report out a resolution calling for funds exceeding the total of $10,000.

Mr. FULMER. Mr. Speaker, last year Mr. Snell, the leader on the Republican side, stated that if I would ask for $100,000, or something that would actually do the work, he would be for the bill, and we had the same statement by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WARREN] last year that the funds were all gone; but the gentleman can bring in an investigating resolution in respect to Communists for a committee of the House to run around the country stirring up communism, all of us knowing at this time what kind of legislation we ought to pass, and nothing will be done about it. Another resolution to investigate the W. P. A. is brought in in the meanwhile, and we all know what W. P. A. is doing, and it will be just like putting that much money in a rat hole; and yet, when we come here today to do something to get real facts that would enable us to do something to help bring back recovery, we find that we have not got the money. What amount we shall be able to secure is up to the Congress, and what we want now is to extend the services of this committee and do the work that ought to be done and that should have been done years ago.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FULMER. Yes.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Does the committee intend to include the Pacific coast in its itinerary?

Mr. FULMER. Yes; and your people want this committee to come to your great section, and we want to go with the hope of being helpful. [Applause.]

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Speaker, I suppose if I were a wise attorney, now that the waves have subsided and the legislative waters seem more or less calm, I should not take the floor. I do so merely to say that I am deeply interested in this subject, and I think it is deplorable, in a way, that so many times we Members fail to understand the economic situation in various parts of the country. Many of the conflicts on this floor are because we do not happen to raise cotton in our section and you fail to raise grapes and apples in your section, and consequently we are not acquainted with each other's problems. I think this committee should be continued for this purpose. It is composed of Members of Congress, from the Senate and the House of Representatives. and from both sides of the aisle; therefore, the investigation that is to be made will be more or less independent of the investigations made by so-called bureaucrats. This is a congressional investigation of a most important subject in which your own colleagues, acting as your agents, will bring to you information in regard to forestry, especially as it relates to the farmers throughout the country. The farmers of this country are becoming forest-minded. Their whole attitude has changed. I know it has in my State, and it has in many other States. I am satisfied that this committee, going out to the country, can in a very inexpensive way bring to the House information of a most constructive character; and in the time at my disposal I shall go into detail in regard to the part that the small forest plays in the income of the average farmer through all of the eastern and middle western and northwestern sections of the country.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks, and I hope that this resolution will pass.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Speaker, I am deeply interested in the future of forestry in the United States, and I firmly believe that the committee, if permitted to continue its work, will be able to lay before Congress some highly valuable and constructive suggestions. A wise legislative policy can be formulated only when and if Congress is in possession of the facts with reference to this important subject. The purpose of this legislation is to make it possible for a committee such as the Joint Committee on Forestry to obtain the facts.

I believe that we are all fully aware that forests and agriculture are closely related subjects. I have obtained official figures which show that several million farmers work part time each year in cutting and marketing wood, gathering maple sap and making sugar, cutting and marketing Christmas trees and basket wood. Farm woodlands in the United States now comprise approximately 127,000 acres, or more than one-fourth of the total commercial forests of the entire country. I find that in 1929 forest products to the value of $240,000,000 were cut on areas associated with farms. This brings me to the next step, in which we should all be vitally interested, and that is since 1910 it is estimated that at least 30,000,000 acres of land have gone out of agricultural production, and it is estimated that by 1950 at least 75,000,000 acres will no longer be used for agricultural purposes. This, it seems to me, raises the important question of what will be done with this land.

I believe that under a wise legislative policy it is safe to assume that much of this land can be utilized and will have to be utilized only for reforestation.

I believe that we are all aware that the farmers' attitude is changing from one of indifference to one of keen interest in the preservation of his wood lot. This being so, I venture the opinion that it is to the national interest that the farmers be encouraged in the wise utilization and conservation of his woodland.

I believe that this committee, if authorized to continue its work, can bring before Congress accurate and pertinent facts relating to this phase of conservation.

I now turn to forests and lumber. When we approach this subject we find that of our 20 leading industries, not including agriculture or railroads, the lumber industry in 1930 ranked second in number of persons employed, third in the extent of investments, eighth in the value of its products. Not only this, the records show that normally more than 1,000,000 persons are employed directly in the lumber industry, but when we consider other forest industries it raises the number of employed in this field to 5,000,000 people.

I want to stress the value of forests:

First. They produce large quantities of forest products, such as lumber, poles, posts, cross ties, mine timbers, pulpwood, and fuel wood.

Second. They produce secondary forest products, such as bark, nuts, fruits, and decorative materials.

Third. They produce derived forest products, such as dyes, proteins, oils, resins, tannins, and cellulose.

Fourth. They regulate stream flow and control floods.

Fifth. They protect watersheds and help supply wholesome water.

Sixth. They conserve and enrich the soil.

Seventh. They serve as windbreaks and shelterbelts and help provide safeguards against drought.

Eighth. They provide healthful outdoor recreational oppor-

Ninth. They provide food, shelter, and habitats for wildlife and game animals.

Tenth. They provide forage for cattle, sheep, and other domestic animals.

Eleventh. They act as a sanitary agent by helping purify the atmosphere.

Twelfth. They enhance the beauty of the landscape.

This is not a new legislative field, as the following list of laws enacted indicate: Weeks law, March 1, 1911; Clarke-McNary law, June 7, 1924; McSweeney-McNary law, 1928; Fulmer law, August 29, 1935; Fletcher bill-not passed-

I call the attention of the House to the fact that as forestry involves this vast investment and the extraordinary possibility, actual as well as potential, of employment, the National Government has an interest in protecting our forests from loss and damage from whatever source. I shall mention only the importance of protection against forest fires, which is still a serious problem in this country. To emphasize this I call attention to the fact that 41,000,000 acres of forests are burned over annually in the United States-that 37,000,000 acres of this area was in Southern States.

I firmly believe that this Nation can ill afford the devastating results of 150,000 forest fires annually.

I therefore, in view of these facts, urge favorable action on the part of the Congress with reference to this resolution,

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that the gentleman from South Carolina desires to offer an amendment. Mr. FULMER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to strike out the word "House," the last word on line 13 of the resolution, and insert in lieu thereof the word "Congress", so that the resolution will read:

And shall report to the Congress.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Carolina?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the resolution.

The resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

House Resolution 143 was laid on the table.

QUESTION OF PERSONAL PRIVILEGE

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of personal privilege.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HOFFMAN. A magazine circulating in Washington, in its issue of the 28th of February 1939, contained these statements:

This was followed by the following language:

——— (I omit the name) is the least useful Member of the House of Representatives, Washington correspondents voted.

But he barely nosed out ———— of —————————, and

C. E. Hoffman (Republican), of Michigan, who shared a three-way tie for runner-up

This language raises a question of personal privilege for the reason that, if the statement that the Representative from Michigan named is the least useful man in the House is true, the statement is false for the reason that no such poll was conducted among the Washington correspondents who know the Congressmen best and that no secret vote was taken among capital newsmen, and as so made it calls in question the ability, the industry, the influence, the capacity, as a Representative of the Member from Michigan.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan rises to a question of personal privilege, which question is based upon the language he has just read from a paper he held in his hand. It seems that the gravamen of the matter relates to a newspaper poll that was purported to have been made with reference to the usefulness, standing, and so forth, of Members of the House of Representatives.

Of course, there are sometimes border-line cases in which it is rather difficult for the Chair to reach, for himself, a definite conclusion on the question of personal privilege, but the Chair thinks the rule should again be stated because this question is frequently stated.

Rule IX provides:

QUESTIONS OF PRIVILEGE

Questions of privilege shall be, first, those affecting the rights of the House collectively, its safety, dignity, and the integrity of its proceedings; second, the rights, reputation, and conduct of Members, individually, in their representative capacity only; and shall have precedence of all other questions except motions to adjourn.

The gentleman from Michigan takes the position that this newspaper criticism, if the Chair may call it that, states a question of personal privilege. While the Chair is inclined to give the greatest elasticity and liberality to questions of personal privilege when raised, the Chair is of the opinion that in this particular instance the mere statement of opinion by a group of newspaper correspondents with reference to a Member's record or position in the House of Representatives does not present in fact, or under the rules of the House, a matter of personal privilege.

Therefore, the Chair is constrained to rule that the gentleman has not presented a question of personal privilege.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of personal privilege.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HOFFMAN. The March 23, 1939, issue of the New York Times, referring to John L. Lewis, chairman of the Congress of Industrial Organizations, among others, carried this statement:

Maintaining that the C. I. O. was an American institution, Mr. Lewis denied that it was controlled by Communists, saying that anyone who charged such communistic control was a knave, a liar, and a poltroon.

Labor's Non-Partisan League, during the campaign of 1938, circulated throughout the press of the country a statement to the effect that I was on its blacklist and should be defeated for the reason that it considered me unfair to its legislative policy.

On June 1, 1937, in the House a speech was made by me in which it was charged, among other things, that the methods used by the C. I. O. in the sit-down strikes were communistic and that some of those who directed the activities of the C. I. O. in those strikes were Communists.

Inasmuch as more than 100,000 copies of that talk were distributed and that the Labor Board held that its circulation among employees was an unfair labor practice, and in view of the fact that I have, on several occasions, charged on the floor of the House and elsewhere that the methods used by some of the C. I. O. organizers were those of the Communists and that some of their officials were Communists, under the precedents heretofore established, even though the statement by Lewis does not refer to me by name, it raises a question of personal privilege, growing out of the fact that he charges that the statements that were made by me on the floor were untrue.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is ready to rule on this question of personal privilege presented by the gentleman from Michigan.

The question now raised is the following language that was purported to have been quoted in the March 23, 1939, issue of the New York Times as coming from John L. Lewis, chairman of the Congress of Industrial Organizations:

Maintaining that the C. I. O. was an American institution, Mr. Lewis denied that it was controlled by Communists, saying that anyone who charged such communistic control was a knave, a liar, and a poltroon.

The gentleman from Michigan takes the position that because of something that he may have said heretofore on the floor of the House, brings him within the purview of the definition given by Mr. Lewis. But in the language quoted there is certainly no reference to any particular individual. The gentleman is not named, and for aught appearing in the statement that has been made, the gentleman who is quoted may have been referring entirely to some other individual or some other group of individuals rather than the gentleman from Michigan.

The Chair is clearly of the opinion that it would be stretching the rule too far to construe the general statement here made as giving the gentleman from Michigan a question of privilege.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of personal privilege.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan will state his question of personal privilege.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I call the Chair's attention to the Congressional Record of January 17, 1939, page 417, and to the following statement made on the floor of the Senate.

The SPEAKER. Whose language is the gentleman quoting?

Mr. HOFFMAN. That of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK].

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it proper for the purpose of the record that the gentleman state his question of personal privilege.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, in the Senate on the day referred to, January 17, 1939, as reported at page 417 of the Congressional Record, Mr. Clark from Missouri said——

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman from Michigan indicate to the Chair where on that page the matter he is about to read is to be found?

Mr. HOFFMAN. Page 417, the third from bottom paragraph in the right-hand column. I read:

Mr. Clark of Missouri. Mr. President, Representative Hoffman has the undoubted right to be heard in the House of Representatives, the body of which he is a Member. He was heard in that body at very great length the other day, and his observations were published in full in the Congressional Record, to the extent of several pages. It does not seem to me to be proper again to inflict upon the Congressional Record the remarks of Representative HOFFMAN made in the House of Representatives.

The second statement I read is the third paragraph in the left-hand column of page 418. I read:

Mr. Clark of Missouri. Mr. President, certainly I have no disposition to insist on any course which would seem in any degree to preclude the printing of the whole record in this case. My motion was based upon the fact that the House of Representatives is the sole judge of its own Record and the Senate of the United States is the sole judge of its own Record. But an intemperate, vituperative, libelous attack having been printed once in the Record of the proceedings of the House of Representatives seems to me to be no justification for repeating that same sort of an intemperate, libelous attack in the Record of the Senate.

The question of privilege is raised by the foregoing statement of the Senator from Missouri for the following reasons:

His statement—"It does not seem to me to be proper again to inflict upon the Congressional Record the remarks of Representative Hoffman, made in the House of Representatives"—carries the implication that the remarks were improper and should not have been made, and it questions the ability and the capacity as a Representative of the Member from the Fourth District of Michigan.

By inference it charges that the remarks made on the floor and printed in the Record were an imposition upon the House; that they in some way were not proper; that their utterance constituted a breach of the privileges of the House.

The statement of the Senator from Missouri, referring to these remarks in the following language: "But an intemperate, vituperative, libelous attacks having been printed once in the record of the proceedings of the House of Representatives seems to me to be no justification for repeating that same sort of an intemperate, libelous attack in the Record of the Senate" raises a question of personal privilege for the reason that it charges that the language used was improper in the sense that it was not justified by the facts stated.

"Vituperative" means that the language used was defamatory, abusive, and that the Member using it was railing at the person of whom it was spoken—all of which reflected upon his capacity as a Representative.

The use of the word "libelous" by the Senator from Missouri is a charge that the remarks of the Representative from the Fourth Michigan District were false, for the truth is always a justification to the charge that a statement is libelous.

One cannot make a libelous attack without making an attack which is false, as a matter of fact; hence, the substance of the statement of the Senator from Missouri is that the Representative from the Fourth Michigan District made a false charge against an appointee of the President.

To charge that one has made a false statement in debate raises a question of personal privilege, as does any statement which reflects upon the capacity of a Member as a Representative.

The correctness of these claims is borne out by the precedents cited under section 2 of page 273 of Cannon's Precedents.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan now raises a question of personal privilege which, in the opinion of the Chair, is in somewhat of a different category from the other two propositions of privilege that were raised by him heretofore.

It appears that the gentleman from Michigan complains that on January 17 last, as reported on page 418 of the Congressional Record, the Senator from Missouri [Mr. Clark] made certain direct and specific observations with reference to the remarks of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Hoffman], who is now raising this question of personal privilege.

In the course of those remarks language was used which has been cited by the gentleman from Michigan in which the following description was used by the Senator:

But an intemperate, vituperative, libelous attack having been printed once in the RECORD of the proceedings of the House of Representatives seems to me to be no justification for repeating that same sort of an intemperate and libelous attack in the RECORD of the Senate.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.
The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, this question was raised a number of years ago when Speaker Longworth was presiding.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman suspend for just a minute? The Chair was undertaking to state his ruling upon this matter. Inasmuch, however, as the gentleman from Mississippi desires to submit some observations that may be helpful to the Chair, the Chair will recognize the gentleman.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I will make a point of order in order that I may be heard by the Chair at this time.

I make the point of order that each House is the judge of its own proceedings. There is a rule of comity which prohibits Members of one House from criticizing Members of the other in open session.

This question was raised when Speaker Longworth was in the chair, and the older Members will remember it created considerable furor on the floor. Speaker Longworth, if I remember correctly, held that a Member had no right on the floor of the House to discuss matters that took place on the floor of the Senate; in other words, had no right to discuss on this floor what a Senator said on the other floor, on the theory that if this rule were broken down it would create controversies between the two Houses that would simply be interminable.

My recollection is that Speaker Longworth held that a Member had no right on the floor of this House to attack a Senator for something the Senator was supposed to have said about him in the other body. I make this point of order in order to refresh the Chair's mind, because the present distinguished Speaker was a very prominent Member of the House at that time and I am sure will recall the occasion, and I believe the Parliamentarian if he will look back over the records of those days will find that the gist of the ruling by Speaker Longworth was about as I have stated.

I have no interest in the quarrel between these two distinguished statesmen, but if we break down the rule and permit Members of one body to begin criticizing and attacking Members of the other, in this body or in the other body, it will result in that confusion which Speaker Longworth pointed out at that time.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. RANKIN. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. The gentleman would not contend that if a Member of the Senate made a statement against a Member of the House, the House Member would have an opportunity to refute that charge?

Mr. RANKIN. I do not think he would have a right to discuss it on the floor of the House.

May I call the gentleman's attention to another instance—and I may say to the gentleman from Massachusetts that I am speaking from memory now. On one occasion when Mr.

Gillett was Speaker of the House he went to New Haven, Conn., I believe, and made a speech about certain Senators. It got back to the floor of the Senate and the question was raised there. My recollection is it was held they had no right to discuss on the floor of the Senate the statement made by Mr. Gillett in New Haven, Conn., on the ground he was a Member of the House. There was a question raised here. I was a new Member at that time, and I questioned Speaker Gillett about it. He called me into the library here and explained to me the distinction. He said then, if I remember correctly, that if you permit Members of one body the liberty of attacking or criticizing the Members of the other body on the floor, it would simply result in interminable controversy and confusion.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. This is a different matter, as I see it. The gentleman thinks the Senate has erred in permitting an attack to be made on the gentleman from Michigan in the Senate? The attack having been made, what right has the Member of the House?

Mr. RANKIN. That is a matter for the Senate to dispose of.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. The gentleman cannot go into the Senate and answer it.

Mr. RANKIN. On one occasion I remember the distinguished Senator from Missouri, Mr. Reed, attacked Mr. Volstead, whose name is more or less familiar in these halls. There was a resolution introduced or a motion made here of protest; but my recollection is there was no debate or at least there was no attack made on Senator Reed. What I am trying to do, I may say to the gentleman from Massachusetts, is to clarify the situation. Remember, I know nothing about this controversy.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. This is a parliamentary point, of course.

Mr. RANKIN. I am interested in the same thing the gentleman from Massachusetts is, which is the orderly procedure of the two Houses. For the sake of argument, let us say that the gentleman from Michigan proceeded to say what he thinks about the Senator from another State.

Mr. HOFFMAN. May I interrupt to say I do not propose to say anything about the Senator.

Mr. RANKIN. I am using this simply for the sake of argument. Assume further a reply comes from the other body. It would be the beginning of that confusion to which Speaker Longworth referred when passing upon this proposition. So, in order to maintain orderly procedure of the two Houses, I think we should strictly adhere to the ruling of former Speaker Longworth.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. In order to maintain the integrity of the House, in justification of what the gentleman from Mississippi just stated, I presume he would be in favor of a resolution passing this House requesting the Senate to expunge the remarks made by the Senator about the gentleman from Michigan. That would be protecting thoroughly the integrity of the House.

Mr. RANKIN. I have not read what has been said.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I have not either. I have no advantage over the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. RANKIN. I may say to the gentleman from Massachusetts that in my opinion that would be the orderly procedure, if any notice at all is taken of the matter in the House. I do not think it is subject to a question of personal privilege for a Member to take the floor and discuss what happened in the Senate or what was said in the Senate.

Mr. GIFFORD. I recall plainly the ruling of Speaker Longworth. Shall words of praise of a Senator be precluded? It might be regarded by others as criticism. Shall you be given the opportunity to praise some great Senator?

Mr. RANKIN. I may say to the gentleman from Massachusetts that is exactly what Speaker Gillett said, and I consider him a splendid parliamentarian.

Mr. GIFFORD. I care nothing about that, but I have a little common sense left.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Hoffman] and the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN] permit the Chair to make a suggestion, which is in the utmost

The gentleman from Michigan has raised in this question of personal privilege a matter of supreme importance, in the opinion of the Chair, affecting the question of policy between the two Houses of Congress. The Chair has endeavored, with the assistance of the Parliamentarian, very hurriedly, not anticipating this question of personal privilege, to arrive at a correct decision.

The Chair does not desire to render an improvident decision on first impression after hearing these brief statements. Will the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Hoffman] very kindly agree to withdraw his question of personal privilege for the moment and give the Chair and the Parliamentarian an opportunity to look a little more carefully into the question because it is one of supreme importance?

Mr. HOFFMAN. I will do that and I will renew it again on Wednesday. May I call the Speaker's attention to a decision in the last session on this very question raised by me in connection with certain remarks of Senator Barkley inserted in the Record?

The precedent which I cite will be found in volume 83 part 5, of the Seventy-fifth Congress, third session, at page 5235, under date of April 11, 1938. On that occasion the Speaker held that a question of personal privilege was involved because the language printed in the Congressional Record "might bring into question the rights, reputation, and conduct of a Member of the House."

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman withdraw his question of personal privilege temporarily?

Mr. HOFFMAN. I withdraw it for the time being.
Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, will the Chair indulge me for a moment on the point of order raised by the centleman for a moment on the point of order raised by the gentleman from Mississippi?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will be very glad to hear the gentleman.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me we should draw a distinction in this matter between whether this constitutes a question of personal privilege and the anticipation of the remarks of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Hoff-MAN]. I believe the rule is well settled that a Member of the House of Representatives cannot, neither should he, attack a Member of the other body. If a Member of the other body has misspoken himself or violated any of the rules of the Senate, of course, that is not a justification for any Member of the House to do likewise. It seems to me that when a Member of the House has been attacked by a Member of the other body that in itself constitutes a question of personal privilege or privilege of the House, as the case may be, but if the gentleman raising the question of personal privilege or privilege of the House confines himself to the facts involved without making a personal attack on the Member of the other body allegedly making the attack, then he is clearly within the rules of the House. I merely offer this as a suggestion to the Chair.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will be very glad to consider the statement made by the gentleman from Michigan when the question is again presented to the Chair.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Speaker, as most of you know, I happen to be a member of the Committee on Ways and Means. I want to say to you that the chairman of that committee, Mr. ROBERT L. DOUGHTON, of North Carolina, is a most able and distinguished gentleman, and we hold him in the highest esteem and affection.

I was amazed, therefore, to see in the press of March 26, 1939, a statement purporting to be made by Chairman Doughton, of the Ways and Means Committee, in which he charged the Republicans with playing "political football" with administration proposals for revision of the social-security program.

Now that the public has discovered that this administration has collected over a billion dollars from the pay rolls of those who labor, not for old-age security, but to spend, the administration legislators are peeved.

Chairman Doughton's memory must be failing, otherwise he would recall that I introduced in the Seventy-fifth Congress, first session, House Concurrent Resolution 3, to amend the Social Security Act to accomplish just what Secretary Morgenthau now recommends.

Chairman Doughton seems to have forgotten that the Republican platform of 1936 contained this plank:

We propose a system of old-age security based upon the following principles:

We approve a pay-as-you-go policy which requires of each generation the support of the aged and the determination of what is just and adequate.

And, further, the platform made this prophecy:

The so-called reserve fund, estimated at $47,000,000,000, for oldage insurance is no reserve at all, because the fund will contain nothing but the Government's promise to pay, while the taxes collected in the guise of premiums will be wasted by the Government in reckless and extravagant political schemes.

The fact is that over $1,000,000,000, taken from the pay envelopes of the laboring men and women, have been wasted by this administration "in reckless and extravagant political schemes."

The Republicans have sought by resolution, by speeches, and by public statements, and by every means within their power to stop this unjust waste and diversion of funds collected by legislative coercion from the low-income group of this Nation.

On page 663 of the Congressional Record, January 29, 1937, appears a "Joint statement made by Senators Vandenberg and Townsend and Representatives Reed of New York and Jenkins of Ohio," in which we pointed out the very remedy now so belatedly suggested by the administration. In this statement we revealed in plain language the cruel effects of collecting pay-roll taxes from the working men and women and then using the funds so collected for New Deal political rackets and boondoggling.

The $1,000,000,000 already collected and spent will again be repaid by the taxpayers, including, of course, those who already have paid their portion of it once before.

The time has passed when the departmental press releases, the radio propaganda can any longer smother this legalized fraud upon those who "pay taxes in the sweat of their brow."

Now that the administration has had to admit the squandering of $1,000,000,000 in pay-roll taxes, the public should be insistent that the act be amended, as the Republican Party has insisted from the first should be done and as Secretary Morgenthau now recommends.

This whole unsavory mess, this spending of trust funds for boondoggling and election expenditures, would never have occurred had the original recommendation of the President's Economic Council been followed. Instead of adopting a wise, honest, straightforward policy, a "rubber stamp" group listened to the persuasive appeal of the President to set up a fake reserve. The possibility of obtaining $1,000,000,000 to spend as political whim or caprice might suggest was as irresistible to the new dealers as cheese is to a lot of ravenous rats, [Applause.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. SHAFER of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the Record and include therein a letter from General Hines of the Veterans' Administration.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. Reed of New York, asked and was given permission to revise and extend his own remarks in the Record.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

The SPEAKER. This is District of Columbia day. The Chair recognizes the chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, I am certain that once again the Committee on the District of Columbia has demonstrated to the Members of this body that we always attempt to be generous. Although this is our day we have allowed these other matters to come before the House. By the same token, we trust that during the remainder of this session. not especially today, when controversial matters will not be before us, but later in the session, the Members of the House will find it possible to be present when District of Columbia business is being considered and give valuable assistance in the consideration of measures that not only affect the wellbeing of the residents of the District of Columbia but have a radiating effect on the country at large.

DAVID R. THOMPSON AND RALPH S. WARNER

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (S. 316) to authorize and direct the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to reappoint David R. The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the amendment, as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:
"That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia be, and they are hereby, authorized and directed to set aside the trial-board conviction of Policemen David R. Thompson and Ralph S. Warner and their resultant dismissal, and to reinstate David R. Thompson and Ralph S. Warner to their former positions as members of the Metropolitan Police Department of the District of

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on the District of Columbia, I call up the bill (H. R. 5066) to amend the act entitled "An act to regulate proceedings in adoption in the District of Columbia," approved August 25, 1937.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 4940) to authorize the furnishing of steam from the central heating plant to the District of Columbia, and ask unanimous consent that the bill may be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from West Virginia?

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

RESEARCH ASSISTANTS IN THE PUBLIC SCHOOLS OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on the District of Columbia, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (S. 1125) to provide for the appointment of research assistants in the public schools of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, and ask for its immediate consideration.

I may say the Committee on the District of Columbia has reported out an identical House bill, H. R. 3597.

The Clerk read the title of the Senate bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from West Virginia?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the Senate bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Board of Education is hereby authorized to appoint research assistants who shall qualify for said positions by meeting such eligibility requirements as the said Board may prescribe and who shall on appointment be assigned to salary class 2 of article I of the Teachers' Salary Act, approved June 4, 1924, in accordance with the professional qualifications which they possess at the time of appointment.

SEC. 5. Appointments, assignments, and transfers authorized in this act shall be made in accordance with the act approved June 20, 1906, as amended (Public, No. 254).

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

A similar House bill (H. R. 3597) was laid on the table.

RETIREMENT OF PUBLIC-SCHOOL TEACHERS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (S. 1130) to amend Public Law No. 111, Sixty-sixth Congress, entitled "An act for the retirement of public-school teachers in the District of Columbia," and ask its immediate consideration. An identical House bill (H. R. 3667) is now on the calendar.

The Clerk read the title of the Senate bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from West Virginia?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the Senate bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 10 of the act entitled "An act for the retirement of public-school teachers in the District of Columbia," approved January 15, 1920, as amended, is further amended to read as follows:

"Sec. 2. In the event of death of any such teacher the order of precedence of payments shall be as follows: First, to the beneficiary, or beneficiaries, designated in writing by the teacher and recorded on his or her individual account; second, if there be no such beneficiary or beneficiaries designated, then to the duly appointed executor, or administrator, of the estate; third, if there be no such beneficiary, or if an executor or administrator be not appointed within 6 months after the death of such teacher, payment shall be made into the registry of the District Court of the United States for the District of Columbia."

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

A similar House bill (H. R. 3667) was laid on the table. SALARIES OF TEACHERS, SCHOOL OFFICERS, ETC., OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (S. 1295) to amend section 9, article V, of an act known as "An act to amend the act entitled 'An act to fix and regulate the salaries of teachers, school officers, and other employees of the Board of Education of the District of Columbia,' approved June 20, 1906, as amended, and for other purposes," and immediately consider the same, a similar House bill being on the calendar.

The Clerk read the Senate bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 9, article V, of an act known as "An act to amend the act entitled 'An act to fix and regulate the salaries of teachers, school officers, and other employees of the Board of Education of the District of Columbia,' approved June 20, 1906, as amended, and for other purposes," approved June 4,

1924, be amended to read as follows:

20, 1906, as amended, and for other purposes, approved Jule 4, 1924, be amended to read as follows:

"Sec. 9. That every teacher in the service on July 1, 1924, except as herein otherwise provided, and every teacher thereafter appointed, shall be assigned to group A of the class to which eligible or to group C of class 2 and shall be promoted to group D of class 2 or group B of any class on the basis of such evidence of superior teaching and of increased professional attainments as the Board of Education may prescribe: Provided, That teachers receiving salaries in group B of class 6 on June 30, 1924, and teachers receiving salaries in group A of class 6 who on June 30, 1924, are on the eligible list for promotion to group B of class 6, shall be assigned to group B of class 3 on July 1, 1924, without further examination or additional qualifications: Provided further, That no person who has not received for at least 1 year the maximum salary of group A in any class or group C of class 2 shall be eligible for promotion to group B of any class or group D of class 2: And provided further, That the number of group B and group D salaries shall be divided proportionately between the teachers in the white schools and the teachers in the colored schools on the basis of the enrollment of pupils in the respective white and colored schools."

Mr. COLE of New York. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, obviously no Member of the House is familiar with these bills except the members of the Committee on the District of Columbia. It occurs to me it might be well for the chairman to give a brief statement about these bills before we pass upon them.

Mr. RANDOLPH. I think the statement of the gentleman from New York is very timely. I was going to discuss this bill. I have felt that was not necessary in the case of the others, but as to the bills remaining on the calendar I shall be pleased to comply with the gentleman's request.

I may say that this bill amends the Teachers' Salary Act and repeals the phrase which requires the Board of Education to maintain a proportionate number of salaries for white and colored teachers in each salary class. The frequency with which changes are made due to death and resignation, and so forth, makes it impossible to carry out such a schedule. This has been found by the Board of Education and this bill will require a division of salaries between teachers in white and colored schools, regardless of the manner in which they are distributed in the various salaried classes. I may say to the gentleman from New York and the other gentlemen present that this bill has the support of the Board of Education and of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANDOLPH. I yield. Mr. MITCHELL. Does that bill mean that now you are going to give different salaries to teachers doing the same work in different schools; that is to say, white teachers doing work in a white school will be paid a different salary from the salary of teachers doing the same work in a colored school?

Mr. RANDOLPH. I may say to the gentleman that such is not the case and, really, we are protecting the colored teachers by the passage of this bill. There is no change in the present salary status.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from West Virginia?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

A similar House bill was laid on the table.

GAS AND ELECTRIC METERS

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (S. 1123) to amend paragraph 57 of section 8 of the act entitled "An act making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914, and for other purposes," approved March 4, 1913, and consider the same, a similar House bill being on the

The Clerk read the Senate bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That subparagraph fifth, paragraph 57, of section 8 of the act entitled "An act making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914, and for other purposes", approved March 4, 1913, (37 Stat. 974), be amended by deleting the words "4 percent, if an electric meter, or more than" and deleting ", if a gas meter," so that the said subparagraph when so amended the literature of the said subparagraph when so amended the literature of the said subparagraph when so amended shall read as follows:

shall read as follows:

"If any consumer to whom a meter has been furnished shall request the Commission in writing to inspect such meter, the Commission shall have the same inspected and tested; if the same, on being so tested, shall be found to be more than 2 percent defective or incorrect to the prejudice of the consumer, the inspector shall order the gas or electrical corporation forthwith to remove the same and to place instead a correct meter, and the expense of such inspection and test shall be borne by the corporation; if the same, on being so tested, shall be found to be correct, the expense of such inspection and test shall be borne by the consumer." consumer."

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, in line with the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. Cole] I want to make a brief statement about this measure.

The purpose of the bill is to reduce the margin of error allowed on electric meters from 4 percent to 2 percent. The margin of error now is 2 percent for gas, but 4 percent for electricity. We simply bring them in the same error class

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from West Virginia?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

A similar House bill was laid on the table.

PASSENGER VEHICLES FOR HIRE IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (S. 1129) to amend paragraphs 31 and 33 of an act entitled "An act to amend section 7 of an act entitled 'An act making appropriations to provide for the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1903, and for other purposes', approved July 1, 1902, and for other purposes," approved July 1, 1932, and consider the same, a similar House bill being on the calendar.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That subparagraphs (c) and (d) of paragraph 31 and paragraph 33 of an act entitled "An act to amend section 7 of an act entitled 'An act making appropriations to provide for the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1903, and for other purposes, approved July 1, 1902, and for other purposes," approved July 1, 1932, are amended to read as follows:

"(c) Owners of passenger vehicles for hire having a seating capacity of eight passengers or more, in addition to the driver or operator, other than those licensed in the preceding subparagraph, shall pay a license tax of $100 per annum for each vehicle used. No such vehicle shall be operated unless there shall be conspicuously displayed therein a license issued under the terms of this subparagraph. Licenses issued under this subparagraph shall date from March 1 of each year, but may be issued on or after February 15 of such year: Provided, however, That all licenses issued for a period prior to March 1, 1940, shall expire on February 29, 1940, and the license fee therefor shall be prorated accordingly.

"(d) Owners of passenger vehicles for hire, whether operated those licensed in the two preceding subparagraphs, shall pay a license tax of $25 per annum for each such vehicle used in the conduct of their business. Stands for such vehicles upon public space, adjacent to hotels or otherwise, may be established in the manner provided in section 6 (e) of the act entitled 'An act to amend the acts approved March 3, 1925, and July 3, 1926, known as the District of Columbia Traffic Acts, and so forth.' The Public as the District of Columbia Traffic Acts, and so forth.' The Public Utilities Commission is hereby authorized to make and enforce all such reasonable and usual police regulations as it may deem necessary for the proper conduct, control, and regulation of all vehicles described in this and the preceding subparagraphs and paragraph 33 hereof. Licenses issued under this subparagraph shall date from March 1 of each year, but may be issued on or after February 15 of such year: Provided, however, That all licenses issued for a period prior to March 1, 1940, shall expire on February 29, 1940, and the license fee therefor shall be prorated accordingly.

ary 29, 1940, and the license fee therefor shall be prorated accordingly.

"PAR. 33. Owners of vehicles for hire, used in hauling goods, wares, or merchandise, and operating from public space, shall pay a license tax of $25 per annum for each vehicle. Stands for such vehicles upon public space may be established in the manner provided in section 6 (e) of the act entitled 'An act to amend the acts approved March 3, 1925, and July 3, 1926, known as the District of Columbia Traffic Acts, and so forth.' Licenses issued under this subparagraph shall date from March 1 of each year, but may be issued on or after February 15 of such year: Provided, however, That all licenses issued for a period prior to March 1, 1940, shall expire on February 29, 1940, and the license fee therefor shall be prorated accordingly."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANDOLPH. If this measure is enacted into law it would simply require the drivers of vehicles for hire in the District of Columbia to secure their licenses and their tags at the same date. At the present time the licenses are issued as of July 1 and the tags as of March 1. We believe it is often difficult to trace down these drivers who operate between the July 1 date and the March 1 date. It is made merely for the purpose of uniform application of the law.

Mr. SCHULTE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANDOLPH. Yes.

Mr. SCHULTE. This does not give any more power to the Public Utilities Commission in the District of Columbia, which every one wants to abolish, does it?

Mr. RANDOLPH. I might say that no additional power is given by the passage of this legislation. I know the gentleman's feeling about the Commission.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The Senate bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

A similar House bill was laid on the table.

ENFORCEMENT OF ORDERS, PUBLIC UTILITIES COMMISSION

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill S. 1126, to provide alternative methods of enforcement of orders, rules, and regulations of the Joint Board and of the Public Utilities Commission of the District of Columbia and consider the same, a similar House bill (H. R. 3668) being on the calendar.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from West Virginia?

Mr. SACKS. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object, to inquire the purpose of this legislation.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, I might say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Sacks], a former member of the House Committee on the District of Columbia-and we are sorry to have lost his services—this bill provides a method of enforcement whereby the Public Utilities Commission may effectually carry out its orders and regulations. Up to the present time we have found there is no method of enforcement provided in law, and it has been practically impossible to enforce the orders of that Commission in the District of Columbia.

Mr. SACKS. Will this give any added power to the Public Utilities Commission so far as changing rates and regulations are concerned?

Mr. RANDOLPH. No; just the enforcement of the present regulations and orders.

Mr. SCHULTE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANDOLPH. Yes.

Mr. SCHULTE. I was about to ask the same question. In view of the antagonism that has arisen in the District of Columbia toward the Commission, because of its antagonistic attitude toward Members of Congress, and everyone else here, I am not going to sit idle here and see that Commission granted any more power than it has at the present time.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Any orders of the Commission now carried out will not be enhanced, but this will simply provide for some uniformity of enforcement.

Mr. SCHULTE. Mr. Speaker, the Public Utilities Commission of the District of Columbia cares no more about a Member of Congress than it does about anything that flies along on the street. They hold in contempt anything that we may do simply because of the fact that it is Congress that does it. I do not want to give them any more power than they have at the present time; in fact, I would like to curtail their power and get them to do something that would be of benefit to the people of the District of Columbia, and not to their detriment. At the present time they seek to legislate, whether they have the power to do so or not. For that reason I want to cut them.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, all of us are aware of the gentleman's frankness on these questions, and I am sure that he has contributed much to the consideration of measures before the District of Columbia Committee.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from West Virginia?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the Senate bill. The Clerk read the Senate bill, as follows:

The Clerk read the Senate bill, as follows:

Any person, corporation, or public utility violating any such rule, order, or regulation shall, upon conviction, be fined not more than $200: Provided, That the provisions of this act shall not be construed to apply to rules, orders, or regulations adopted or promulgated by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia which are not specifically required to be referred to the Joint Board or subject to the approval of such board: Provided further, That with respect to orders, rules, or regulations made or adopted by the Public Utilities Commission under authority of section 8 of the said act approved March 4, 1913, this section shall be construed to apply only to such orders, rules, or regulations as are subject to the penalties specifically provided in paragraph 85 of that act.

SEC. 2. The provisions of section 1 of this act and of paragraph 85 of section 8 of the said act approved March 4, 1913, so far as they relate to the orders, rules, and regulations of the Public Utilities Commission, shall be construed as prescribing alternative methods of enforcement of the orders, rules, or regulations of the Commission, and any order, rule, or regulation adopted by the Public Utilities Commission which is required to be referred to or is subject to the approval of the Joint Board may be enforced either as provided by paragraph 85 of section 8 of the act approved March 4, 1913, or as provided in section 1 of this act.

BANKING, BANKS, ETC., IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill S. 794, relating to banking, banks, and trust companies in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, a similar House bill (H. R. 2561) being on the calendar. I ask unanimous consent to take the Senate bill from the Speaker's table.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the Senate bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That where a check or other instrument payable on demand at any bank or trust company doing business in the District of Columbia is presented for payment more than 1 year the District of Columbia is presented for payment more than 1 year from its date, such bank or trust company may, unless expressly instructed by the drawer or maker to pay the same, refuse payment thereof, and no liability shall thereby be incurred to the drawer or maker for dishonoring the instrument by nonpayment.

SEC. 2. The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The Senate bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

A similar House bill (H. R. 2561) was laid on the table.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, this concludes the 10 items of legislation brought in by the District of Columbia Committee today.

INVESTIGATION OF WORKS PROGESS ADMINISTRATION

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I call up House Resolution 130. which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia calls up a privileged report. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 130

Resolved, That for the purpose of obtaining information necessary as a basis for legislation the Committee on Appropriations, as a whole or by subcommittee, is authorized and directed to conduct a thorough investigation and study of the Works Progress Administration and the administration of laws, regulations, and orders administration by its conduct of the conduc ministered by it.

The committee shall report to the House as soon as practicable during the present Congress the results of its investigations, together with such recommendations for legislation as it deems desirable.

For the purposes of this resolution the committee, or any subcommittee thereof, is authorized to sit and act during the present Congress at such times and places within the United States, whether or not the House is sitting, has recessed, or has adjourned, to hold such hearings, to require the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such books, papers, and documents, and to take such testimony, as it deems necessary. Subpenas may be issued under the signature of the chairman of the committee or any member designated by him, and may be served by any person designated by such chairman or member. The chairman of the committee or any member thereof may administer oaths to witnesses. Every person who, having been summoned as a witness by authority of said committee or any subcommittee thereof, willfully makes default, or who, having appeared, refuses to answer any questions pertinent to the matter herein authorized, shall be held to the penalties provided by section 102 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, as amended (U. S. C., 1934 ed., title 2, sec. 192).

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I yield 30 minutes to the gen-

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Mapes], to be in turn yielded by him as he sees fit.

Mr. Speaker, this resolution, as the reading has just disclosed, provides for an investigation of the Works Progress Administration. I have no purpose, certainly at this time, of indulging in any criticism of this agency of the Government. Because of the widespread charges of maladministration that have been made, I came to the conclusion that if there is anything wrong with the W. P. A. it ought to be discovered and ought to be made known. Therefore the resolution is now before the House.

The resolution does not provide for the setting up of a special committee. Such provision might be taken as an expression of hostility to the agency. There is nothing in the resolution that is hostile to the W. P. A. or to the administration of that agency. The resolution provides that the investigation shall be conducted by the Appropriations Committee of the House. That is the committee of the Congress that has handled appropriations for this activity during the past several years. It is the committee that is best qualified, in my opinion, to carry on a thorough and impartial investigation, having considerable background on the subject and is well equipped to examine into the matter. It enjoys the confidence of the House and of the country and we can well afford to rest upon the assurance that that committee will conduct a dignified examination and will handle the whole subject in a temperate and dignified manner.

I now yield to my colleague from Michigan [Mr. MAPES]. Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts, the minority leader [Mr.

MARTIN].

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to join with the able and distinguished gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Cox] and the Rules Committee in support of this resolution. I rejoice that the Committee on Rules has reported it favorably, and I trust it will have, as it deserves, the unanimous support of this body.

I believe I have a mandate, using the words of one high in Government official circles, to support a resolution of this character, because certainly in the last campaign it was an outstanding issue in my own congressional district. The people of my district were deeply concerned and disturbed with the politics, the graft, the corruption, and the mismanagement that was in evidence in the W. P. A. The distrust of the administration of the W. P. A. in my district was not confined to those who pay the bills. It was universal among the general public, and particularly many on the W. P. A., who have suffered through maladministration. Groups have passed resolutions requesting there be a fair and impartial examination and inquiry into W. P. A. Many individuals have voiced similar sentiments. The public wants this great humane agency to be conducted fairly and squarely and in the interest of all who need relief. If that is done, you will not find any complaints on the part of the American people, because no one in America wants a deserving person to go hungry or without shelter, but the American people are demanding this agency be conducted in a fair and impartial manner.

It is stated there is no politics in W. P. A. Well, I do not have to go farther than the Fourteenth Massachusetts District to be able to tell you that there has been considerable politics in the W. P. A. In the last campaign the high command here in Washington, according to information that was brought into Massachusetts, picked the man who was to oppose me for election. He was the State employment administrator, and he frankly admitted he was a candidate because he had been requested to be one. The W. P. A. workers in my district were obliged to sign pledge cards of support. They were obliged to buy lottery tickets in order to contribute to the campaign fund. One woman came into my office with the front of her shoes broken and said, "My husband last week was obliged to buy a lottery ticket for $1, and the result is I am unable to buy a pair of shoes this week."

Think of that being permitted in relief administration.

The workers were forced to buy clambake tickets. They were obliged to put their automobiles and their trucks in a monster parade that was held on the Saturday before election day for a great parade and demonstration. Men who were on W. P. A. were required to distribute signs and to make house-to-house solicitations for votes. They were marshalled to the polls on election day. Promotions were made for their political effort. Men from the regional office visited town officials and requested they submit additional names to be placed on the rolls. The whole W. P. A. regional office seethed with political activity, and it was obvious to all.

I realize that is "water gone over the dam." I know "Harry the Spender" is no longer head of the Department, and there is a new Administrator, who I hope will bring about better conditions.

Mr. WOOD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I yield.

Mr. WOOD. Is the gentleman for this resolution because of the supposed political activity that he mentions, or is it to ascertain probable amounts necessary to carry on W. P. A.? In view of the fact that we amended the law in the last resolution, practically depriving W. P. A. workers of their franchise, is it the gentleman's intention to further investigate that we will further deprive them of their franchise? About all they can do now is vote. No supervisory employee can do anything but vote now.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I want every W. P. A.

man to be a free American.

Mr. WOOD. The gentleman mentioned this particular activity. Is that why he wants this resolution passed?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. This is my time, I am going to answer the gentleman. I want the W. P. A. worker to be a free man. I do not want him forced to sign pledge cards.

Mr. WOOD. Does not the gentleman think-

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Wait a minute. The gentleman should restrain himself.

Mr. WOOD. I think the gentleman from Massachusetts should restrain himself, too.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I do not want the workers to be branded as they brand cattle on the western ranches,

Mr. WOOD. They have already been branded in the matter of franchise. What further does the gentleman want?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I agree with the gentleman that legislation has been passed which I hope will correct the evil practices of 1938. I agree with the gentleman from Missouri that there is a new head of the Bureau and a hope for better things. In reciting these happenings of 1938 I am doing so with the hope there will be a genuine change in the methods of administration of the W. P. A.

Mr. WOOD. The gentleman refers, I assume, to the reason—

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I decline to yield.

Mr. Speaker, I want this committee to make a thorough investigation with the object, first, of ascertaining how much money is legitimately needed for the relief of the people of this country; and I want them, secondly, to see that the laws passed by this Congress are observed. I have confidence the committee will do these things.

Relief is bound to cost the American people an enormous sum, and legitimately so, but Congress should take hold of the purse strings of the Nation; we should make certain the amounts requested are needed. That is an obligation on the part of Congressmen. This is why I favor an investigation on the part of the subcommittee of the Appropriations Committee of the House. This committee can do a splendid constructive service to the country, and they can do a tremendous service to the poor men on relief who want protection and fair treatment.

Mr. SACKS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I yield.

Mr. SACKS. I agree with the gentleman from Massachusetts that there ought to be a house cleaning if it is necessary; but I call the gentleman's attention to a situation in my city, where the Republican city council said, "We will sponsor projects if we get half the jobs."

So the blame does not rest entirely on the Democrats. The Republicans would like to get their hands on it, too.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. You apparently are more liberal up in Pennsylvania than they are in the Fourteenth District of Massachusetts.

Mr. DUNN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I yield.

Mr. DUNN. I agree with the gentleman from Massachusetts that no person should be forced to vote, that he should be allowed to vote the way his conscience dictates; and in this connection I would ask the gentleman whether there is anything in the resolution now pending before the House providing for the investigation of such organizations as the chain stores and big manufacturing companies which call upon their employees to vote for certain candidates, which tell their employees how to vote.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. As I listened to the reading of the resolution I did not hear anything like that. If the gentleman can persuade the distinguished Representative of the Rules Committee to include it, I shall have no objection.

Mr. DUNN. I may say to the gentleman that I know as a positive fact that chain stores have put literature in the baskets of their customers in my district and in other congressional districts. Manufacturers have done likewise.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I know nothing about that.

I am for this resolution, Mr. Speaker, because it is the belief of the minority it will put a great humane experiment on a fair and equitable basis.

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I yield.

Mr. BREWSTER. Would it be within the scope of this investigation for the committee to inquire why it is that representatives of the Federal Government in the State of Maine who on their own confession have stolen thousands of dollars of Federal funds are not prosecuted by Federal authority as yet? I should think gentlemen on the other side would certainly be interested in seeing that the money we have appropriated is properly and prudently expended.

Mr. WOOD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I yield.

Mr. WOOD. I may say that I have no objection. I heartily concur with the gentleman that those engaged in corruption or fraud in the handling of this money should be brought to justice.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. For 3 long years we have sought to get these men prosecuted, but without success.

Mr. WOOD. That is partisan politics. The gentleman from Massachusetts in setting forth the reasons why he supports this resolution talks nothing but partisan politics and says nothing about the real or supposed purpose of this resolution.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. The gentleman from Massachusetts is stating why he is on the floor today asking an investigation. I am demanding it because the people of his district have given me a mandate to do everything possible to purify and clean up a situation that has disgusted the fair-minded people. All of us, I hope, can agree upon two things. We can agree, if there is corruption—whether it be in Massachusetts or Pennsylvania, whether it be on the part of a Republican or Democrat, Socialist or Independent—this corruption should cease, and we should exert every effort and influence to prosecute those who are guilty. I believe we can also all agree the man or woman on W. P. A. must be allowed to be a free American, a free man to vote as he pleases. I do not think any Republican or Democrat can find fault with this demand; it is decidedly American.

Mr. MOSER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I yield.

Mr. MOSER. If the gentleman will permit, I may state that as recently as yesterday there came through the mail a complete check-up of one group of W. P. A. workers under the domination and threat of the Workers' Alliance which showed that only 28 percent of that group of dodgers sent to me were registered voters. The rest of them were either duplications or they were not registered to vote with any party in any election.

I would like to further state that the Workers Alliance as such has been threatening W. P. A. workers and requesting them to join the union and sign up. Following each such instance that they have come in and joined the union and signed up, my mail has brought me great quantities of dodgers which have been signed by people who under this form of duress have been forced to sign. It has disclosed that such registrations are prevalent. I believe it is important that Members of the House should know that that condition exists at the present time. They have had them sign up in the districts represented by our colleagues [Mr. Kinzer and Mr. Ditter], whose districts adjoin mine.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I repeat I am in favor of the pending resolution. I concede a great deal of what I have been finding fault with is reported to be eliminated. I sincerely hope the conditions have been remedied, although I am a little bit doubtful as yet, because when I look back in my district I find the men who had charge of all the political manipulations still hold supervisory positions and a great many of them have lately been promoted to higher positions at higher salaries.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman 5 additional minutes.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I still hope we can look forward to a more wholesome situation under the new Administrator from the Army.

I always have faith in an Army officer, because I believe as a rule they have no politics. An Army officer generally wants to clean up a bad situation, and I hope this will be true of Colonel Harrington.

The American people want to give all that is necessary for relief, but the American people are demanding the money be honestly and prudently expended. The American people do not want the money to be dissipated in large overhead expenses; they do not want it dissipated improperly. Realizing the heavy relief drain they insist this money shall go to the people who are in actual need. Today under present conditions there are millions of deserving people who cannot get on the relief rolls while many privileged persons who are getting relief do not merit a place. That is unfair, and the American people will not stand for it.

Mr. SACKS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. SACKS. May I call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that the question of getting on relief is a State matter, not a Federal matter.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman just explain himself? How is it a State matter?

Mr. SACKS. Any man who gets on relief obtains that relief as a result of an investigation made by State investigators, and it is purely a State matter.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. That may be true in Pennsylvania, but it is not so in Massachusetts.

Mr. SACKS. It is Republican in Pennsylvania.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. It is not done that way in Massachusetts. I do not know anything about Pennsylvania. I know as far as Massachusetts is concerned that last year at election time you could get on the W. P. A. rolls whether you were on the relief rolls or not. I do not say that condition is true today.

Mr. HOOK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. HOOK. Inasmuch as the gentleman has expressed himself with regard to the needs of the people, does he not think they are in need of the $150,000,000 that has been requested for W. P. A.?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I will meet that situation when the subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations reports the bill and gives us the facts. It may be old fashicned but I believe we should secure all the evidence before we make up our minds.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I yield to the gentleman from Colorado.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. The gentleman from Massachusetts has affirmed his confidence in Army officers, and I join with him in that view; but apparently his side of the House does not have much confidence in the repeated statements of Colonel Harrington that we need an additional $150,000,000 for the remainder of this fiscal year.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I may say to the gentleman from Colorado when you are making a request for an appropriation, no committee or anyone else should take a man's unsupported word. When one appears before the Committee on Appropriations or when one comes before the Congress he should have the facts and figures to prove the money is needed and they ought to be presented. You should not have to take any one man's word. [Applause.]

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. One further question. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts infer that Colonel Harrington has repeatedly come before the Appropriations Committee without proof to back up his claims?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I have not received a report from the committee. I have not had an opportunity to read the hearings of the subcommittee. I do not know whether he has or not. However, I do make the statement we should not take a man's unsupported claim. Whether Colonel Harrington has brought the evidence or proof in or not, we will find out later.

Mr. SCHAEFER of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, will the gentle-

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. SCHAEFER of Illinois. Did the gentleman make the statement they could get on W. P. A. last year without being on relief?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. In my district they could.
Mr. SCHAEFER of Illinois. They cannot in the State of

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I congratulate the gentleman from Illinois on his State. [Applause.]

be defeated.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Sabath].

Mr. SABATH. Even though I realize that this resolution will pass, I would vote against it if in doing so I stood alone. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Martin] is no more sincerely interested in economy and in divorcing politics from relief than I am. As a matter of fact, when the Governor of Illinois turned relief work over to a State board—composed predominantly of Republicans, as I afterward learned—I vigorously condemned and criticized that board when I learned that its administrative costs ran to 27½ percent. Since that time I have maintained an interest in the administration and cost of welfare work generally, and I can say unequivocally that the Works Progress Administration has handled a difficult job with the minimum of waste and with an efficiency that can only reflect to the great credit of Mr.

Harry Hopkins, and at a cost of only 2 percent. It is true that there was some waste, and it would be foolish to deny the existence of some irregularities. The important thing is that 3,000,000 individuals were put to work, all in the space of a very short time, with no real waste to speak of; with no widespread inefficiency, as has sometimes been charged; and, I say to you emphatically, with very little of politics. In any organization as large as W. P. A. there are bound to be imperfections. But to criticize and investigate an organization for occasional mistakes does not appear to me to be with the purpose of economy in mind. Neither can I believe that it is in the interest of efficiency, nor to clear politics from relief. Now, it may be a coincidence that this resolution comes to us just before another resolution for a deficiency appropriation for W. P. A. is considered. And the Members may look upon it as a coincidence. But I do not. To my mind it is nothing but a political move, pure and simple, designed to discredit the W. P. A. and to reflect against it to such an extent that the deficiency appropriation might

There is nothing that can come of this investigation that is not already in the hands of this House. Senator Sheppard's committee went thoroughly into phases of this; the Senate Judiciary Committee certainly considered everything that had been said about Administrator Hopkins before he was unanimously confirmed by the Senate, and the Appropriations Committee of this House has just concluded 6 full days of inquiry into W. P. A. activities. Then, too, the Dies committee has had ample time to bring before the House anything they may have discovered.

The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARTIN], minority leader, for whom I have great personal admiration, must admit of very little on which to base his support of the proposed investigation when the most glaring example of inefficiency to which he can point is the case of a young man, age 20 years, who was found to be holding a relief job at $23 a week. I can only say to the gentleman that if that is the extent of his complaint I can really astonish him with examples of politics played by Republicans who have had charge of relief bodies. If there are to be any complaints, incidentally, about not being able to place people in the administrative offices of the W. P. A., it certainly cannot be denied that the Democrats have more reason to complain than the Republicans. I know that I have never been given the consideration I felt I deserved, but that does not mean that I am going to condemn the W. P. A., investigate it, malign its officials, and refuse it money to help the poor and unemployed. If I did that I would be a poor American.

Mr. Speaker, in my many years of service this is the first instance where I have seen a resolution introduced on such flimsy evidence, or rather I should say lack of evidence, to investigate any Government agency. When the author of this resolution made a brief statement in the Rules Committee, of which he is a distinguished member, justifying the need for an investigation, I was astonished at the meager evidence he gave.

I repeatedly urged that Colonel Harrington, who enjoys the respect of every Member of this House, be given a chance to appear before the Rules Committee and explain anything on which there might be doubt. That privilege was denied Colonel Harrington, and the other members of the committee chose to overrule me and report the resolution. When I also asked that the chairman of the Appropriations Committee, which had been conducting hearings on the question of a deficiency appropriation, be called before the committee, the suggestion was waved aside. I can only believe that the purpose of considering this bill today is to attempt the defeat of the deficiency appropriation when it comes before the House. How can any Member even consider such a resolution as this, and postpone action on an authorization of money so urgently needed? Cannot they realize that thousands of the poor and needy will be thrown out of employment unless this money is made available to the W. P. A.? Or is it that they place politics above relief?

The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Cox], echoed by his colleague [Mr. Dies], has made serious charges against the Federal theater projects. I have learned that these projects for 8 months ending February 28, 1939, have cost the Government only $7,636,623, which has taken care of thousands of unemployed.

It has been charged that the theater groups are Communist dominated. Let me call your attention to an article in yesterday's New York Times, which reports that the Vassar College public discussion group, with all the evidence of the Dies committee before it, and with a brief of the Federal theater project, in class discussion concluded that the Dies committee is turning attention from the real issue of how to wipe out human misery, which breeds discontent and revolt, and that the Federal theater project is creating an American theater, relieving need and enriching culture. I am also informed that in the city of Chicago alone the company of W. P. A. players which has performed for 8 months the old Gilbert and Sullivan production, the Mikado, has shown a profit of $150,000, which was turned in to the United States Treasury. Incidentally they anticipate an equal profit from the production in New York City.

Now, there are some, influenced by the desires of private enterprise, who charge that such activities interfere with business. But in this case, even though there has been the same charge, it has proven that the contrary is true. A second company, owned privately, is now successfully presenting the same production, simultaneously with the W. P. A. production, giving employment to upward of 200 persons, and

The point-by-point refutation of the many charges against the theater projects, which were submitted in great detail to the Dies committee, were never the subject of newspaper reports, although everything that was ever said in criticism of those projects made the front pages. I know that a great ado was made regarding the evidence of Mrs. Lazelle, on the charge that some of the writers' guides contained subversive material. That was thoroughly investigated and the charge found to be groundless. Unfortunately, the press is not so impartial as to print findings which absolve an administration agency from blame.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SABATH. I yield to the gentleman from Massachu-

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. My good friend from Illinois, who is always extravagant in his language and generally does not mean what he says, as far as this question is concerned-

Mr. SABATH. That is not a question; it seems to be a charge or accusation.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I would not make any charges against my lovely friend from Illinois, with whom I served for 10 years on the Committee on Rules, because I appreciate his sterling worth; but I will say to the gentleman from Illinois that if there is an investigation that is open to the public, I will bring before the committee persons who will prove any statement I make. [Applause.]

Mr. SABATH. I may say to the gentleman from Massachusetts that in the last campaign I received hundreds of letters and complaints which I caused to be investigated; and what did I ascertain? That in nearly every instance the complaint came from the man because he was not promoted or because he was discharged for inefficiency. I found nearly all the complaints that came to me unjustifiable and unwarranted. The complaints were made more for the purpose of trying to besmirch the organization and those honest men who got rid of a man or group of men who failed to do their duty.

Mr. BRADLEY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SABATH. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsyl-

Mr. BRADLEY of Pennsylvania. Apropos of the claims that there is very great need for investigating the W. P. A., I should like to read a statement appearing in this morning's press which I think is very interesting in the present circumstances. The item is very short.

Mr. SABATH. I will permit the gentleman to read the statement. I know what it is. It is from a Senator, if I am not mistaken.

Mr. BRADLEY of Pennsylvania (reading):

As chief investigator of the Senate Campaign Fund Committee, As chief investigator of the Senate Campaign Fund Committee, H. Ralph Burton wrote most of the reports blasting the W. P. A. for meddling in politics in Kentucky, Pennsylvania, and other States. The other day Burton visited W. P. A. headquarters in search of a job. This time he said: "I've looked over Government agencies, and there isn't one I'd rather work for than W. P. A. You have the most efficient and square-shooting organization in Washington."

This is from the chief investigator who blasted the W. P. A. Mr. SABATH. All the investigators came to the same conclusion, I may say.

Mr. Speaker, as I have been informed by the chairman of that committee [Mr. TAYLOR], than whom there is no more honorable man to be found anywhere, during the entire 6 or 7 days devoted to an examination of the officers of the W. P. A., there was nothing whatever brought out to show that the W. P. A. officials had not performed their duty honestly, faithfully, and well.

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield just for a question?

Mr. SABATH. I cannot yield now.

For this reason, Mr. Speaker, I thought there was no justification for the reporting of this resolution, but in view of the fact that a majority of the Members felt that there should be an investigation, notwithstanding there was not a single word of evidence produced before the Rules Committee and not a single witness appeared, the resolution was reported without giving Colonel Harrington an opportunity to be heard or to assure the Members that the investigation is called for.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I came to the conclusion that this resolution is more or less for the purpose of creating unfair publicity, as well as for the purpose of defeating the needed $150,000,000 for the W. P. A., as recommended by the President.

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? Mr. SABATH. I cannot yield now.

I am satisfied, notwithstanding the fact that this resolution has been reported, a majority of the Members on this side, and I know there are a great many on my left, will recognize the need of this appropriation and will vote for it.

I do not object to investigations, Mr. Speaker, but to investigate an organization of this kind without any justification is unfair and unwarranted. Naturally, the Republicans for political reasons alone will vote for any kind of resolution to investigate any department or bureau under President Roosevelt. This is natural. They are trying to make political capital out of it. Are we to play into their hands and aid them in their attempts to discredit honorable, honest, and faithful officials of this administration? I think such a course is ridiculous, especially when, through a resolution of this kind, some Democrats will attack their administration out of nothing but revenge.

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SABATH. I yield, but only for a question.

Mr. KEEFE. I would like to ask the gentleman, having listened to him for about 12 minutes-

Mr. SABATH. I will not yield further, Mr. Speaker. I vielded for a question.

Mr. KEEFE. I am going to ask a question. Is the gentleman for this bill or against it? That is my question.

Mr. SABATH. Sit down and I will answer you. You know your action here will not bring you anything, I may say to my young friend from Wisconsin.

We are not given to being scared even if the gentleman takes such a threatening attitude.

Yes; I am against this resolution and it should not pass. but I am for the $150,000,000 that has been asked for by the President; and I wonder if the gentleman, when the time comes, will vote for the relief of the people of his district, many thousands of whom will be thrown off of the relief rolls without that appropriation.

Mr. HOOK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? Mr. SABATH. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. HOOK. I was very much interested in the statement of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Martin] when he said there should be a complete investigation before there should be any appropriation made. I am interested now in the statement of the gentleman from Illinois that there was no one who appeared before the Rules Committee when this resolution was brought out. I am wondering whether a resolution should be passed by the Rules Committee without any testimony any more than an appropriation bill should be passed without any testimony.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, will my friend yield? Mr. SABATH. I will answer the gentleman by saying that the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Cox], a member of the Rules Committee, made a statement requesting or demanding this investigation, and in view of the fact that a majority of the members of the Rules Committee felt that the Appropriations Committee having already investigated the matter this resolution would not make much difference, and it was reported out on that basis.

Mr. HOOK. In other words, a resolution was passed and reported out by the Rules Committee just because some member of the Rules Committee asked for it.

Mr. COX. Now, will the gentleman yield? Mr. SABATH. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. COX. I wonder if the gentleman cannot find it pleasing to himself to give answer to the gentleman from Michigan to the effect that the members of the Rules Committee meet, and will continue to meet, their own responsibility without suggestion from the gentleman from Michigan. [Applause.]

Mr. HOOK. On my oath as a Member of this House I feel I am just as responsible, as a Member of Congress from the liberal group of this House, as the conservative Member from Georgia, who has sought to block every piece of liberal legislation in this House; and I will stand on my record as a Member of this House in face of his record here.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, as member and chairman of the Rules Committee, I can assure the House that fair treatment and consideration will be given to all Members on all pending resolutions; and as long as I am chairman of that committee I am going to continue to give each and every Member an opportunity to be heard, even though I may personally oppose their resolutions. [Applause.]

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. Nichols].

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Speaker, insofar as my knowledge of W. P. A. is concerned, I am frank to say it has been limited to the State of Oklahoma and I know of nothing that has happened that would justify the charge of graft, corruption, and political activity. Be that as it may, however, I, of course, shall support this resolution, but I think the record should be kept straight. The Republicans, of course, will attempt to take unto themselves the credit for this investigation. This resolution comes from the Committee on Rules, a majority of which, of course, are Democrats. If the resolution pass this body, and I am confident that it will, it will pass by reason of the fact that this body is constituted of a majority of Democrats. If there is corruption and graft in W. P. A., the Republicans are no more anxious to discover that corruption and graft than are the Democrats.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NICHOLS. Not at the moment. I am willing that the gentlemen on the Republican side of the aisle shall have their proportionate share of the credit, if credit there be, for bringing about this investigation. I simply want to keep the record in shape so that they cannot claim, if it become a credit, that all of credit for this investigation belongs to them. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I assure the gentleman that I am not trying to take credit to the Republicans for bringing about this resolution, because I know as well as the gentleman knows that it could not be done unless conscientious Democrats who believe as we do in having a wholesome presentation of relief had joined us, and I want to give them every credit for doing so.

Mr. HOOK rose.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Oklahoma yield to the gentleman from Michigan?

Mr. NICHOLS. Not now. I thank the gentleman from Massachusetts. I am convinced that will be the attitude of many of my Democratic brethren who support this resolution. In supporting it I do not agree, nor do I subscribe, to the proposition that the many, many charges which have been made against the W. P. A. and its administration and its administrators are true; but I for one, as I am sure every other Democrat does, feel if there is trouble in our house that we are not afraid to clean house. That is the purpose of this resolution. I for one have no fear of the resolution nor of the investigation that follows because I am convinced that no bunch of men could have done the herculean job that has been done under the Administration of the W. P. A. any better than have those men and women who have had in charge the administration of that department of government.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NICHOLS. Yes.

Mr. SABATH. To state to the gentleman that I have no fear as to the result, but I think it is unnecessary. There is no justification for it; no evidence warranting it.

Mr. NICHOLS. And we are not afraid of it.

Mr. HOOK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NICHOLS. Yes.

Mr. HOOK. We all know that there is nothing perfect under the sun. Therefore I wonder if when this investigating committee gets through it will commend the Works Progress Administration for the good things it has done as well as condemn it for the poor things.

Mr. NICHOLS. I doubt that they will. Investigating committees seldom commend anyone for good work.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Oklahoma has expired.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN].

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I have heard a great deal about W. P. A. and its administration. I am not personally acquainted with the administration of that law in any other State than the one in which I live, and if it has been conducted in other States as it has in mine, it is a credit to this administration and to the American people. [Applause.] The Committee on Appropriations in considering the 1940 appropriation can, and in my opinion will, make rather a thorough investigation of the whole W. P. A. set-up. I am pleased that the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Cox] insisted in the resolution that the Committee on Appropriations make this investigation, and when they do, I think it will reflect credit upon the administration of the Works Progress Administration throughout the length and breadth of the land. Therefore, as far as I am concerned, I am very much pleased to allow the investigation to go on and I shall vote for the resolution.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH].

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, the question has been raised why the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Cox] should introduce this resolution. He introduced it as a member of the Committee on Rules because he believed in safeguarding our free institutions, our representative form of government, our republican form of government, all of which are more under attack today than at any time heretofore, not only from within but from without. Charges have been made that the American electorate has been corrupted by the use, the partisan use, of these relief funds, and that our American system has been undermined. We still have a government of free people under free institutions and are not like some of the Old World dictatorships, which have replaced a free ballot by a government with bullets, compulsion, and armed force. Charges have deliberately been made, which this committee must investigate, that 500,000 relief workers were placed upon the W. P. A. rolls within 2 months prior to election. Charges have been made right in the State of Illinois—the State of the distinguished gentleman who presides over the Rules Committee—that forms were sent out asking those workers on W. P. A. what their party affiliations were and how they proposed to vote.

The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Cox], holding the interest of his country above that of his party, understanding that this issue transcends all party lines, desires to have an impartial and thorough investigation. My only complaint about this investigation is that it should have been introduced by the gentleman over a year ago, and possibly 2 years ago. It should have the united support of every Member on both sides.

Mr. WOOD and Mr. SABATH rose.

Mr. FISH. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Sabath].

Mr. SABATH. I wish to say that the charges that have been made during the campaign in Illinois were found to be incorrect. There was no substance to them. Furthermore, the heads of the administration in Illinois are all Republicans.

Mr. FISH. We Members of Congress who propose to vote for this resolution think that an impartial committee, headed by a Democrat, should investigate all these charges. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Moser] asks that this committee investigate charges against the Workers Alliance for influencing elections and coercing voters. I join with the request of that Democratic Member from Pennsylvania.

Mr. WOOD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I cannot yield now.

There is no question but that in the Sixteenth District of the city of New York in the last primary campaign and in the last election campaign, the Workers' Alliance, headed by Communists, organized the W. P. A. voters and brought out sufficient voters to help defeat the former distinguished chairman of the Rules Committee. John O'Connor was defeated by the Workers' Alliance because he refused to be a rubber-stamp Member of Congress. This particular investigation aims, and I think it is the purpose of the gentleman from Georgia, to prevent further purges of members of his own party in primaries by the use of W. P. A. funds and to safeguard our free institutions and our representative form of government in general elections.

The gentleman from Illinois has asked why should we not appropriate $150,000,000 additional for the W. P. A. I say to you that $150,000,000 was spent in taking care of these 500,000 voters put upon the pay rolls 6 weeks before election, and now the Democratic Party or the New Deal administration that put them there have a bear by the tail and is afraid to let them go. They were put there obviously for political purposes. It is the duty of this committee to ascertain those facts and prevent such abuse in the future, and to punish those who are responsible for the partisan manipulation of the W. P. A.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman 2 additional minutes.

Mr. HEALEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. No; I cannot yield. The Administrator at the time was Mr. Harry Hopkins. He was the responsible authority for these so-called political manipulations and purges within his own party, and the use of those funds to coerce voters on election day. Instead of being repudiated and rebuked by the President, he is given an accolade and a kiss on both cheeks and promoted to the high office of Secretary of Commerce.

Mr. Aubrey Williams, his assistant, who addressed the Workers' Alliance and told them "We must stick together and elect our friends," has likewise been promoted in office, but never a rebuke from the White House for turning the W. P. A. into a huge political machine.

The time has come for the House of Representatives, acting in its own representative capacity in order to protect our free institutions, regardless of partisanship, to investigate the serious charges of corruption, pay-roll padding, and coercion of the electorate. We are not the sponsors of this resolution. We do not claim authorship. It emanates from a Democrat, but we on this side have been advocating and have been urging an investigation of the corrupt practices under W. P. A. for the last 2 years. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. CASE].

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I may say that I think this investigation may turn out to be of political advantage to the administration in power. My observation has been that to date the political activity of the W. P. A. has been a liability rather than an asset. An investigation may clear up W. P. A.'s faults. But I am not interested in whether one party or the other gains political advantage out of this investigation; what concerns me is the chance it may afford to make relief a real thing to those who need it.

The present distinguished occupant of the chair [Mr. McCormack], in the consideration of the last relief appropriation bill, offered an amendment to provide that no rule of eligibility would be effective which denied certification of needy women with dependent children, even though they might be eligible for some other form of social-security program. To date that amendment, although nominally in effect, is actually not being observed in my State.

The women who were taken from the rolls 2 months ago, under the rule which the gentleman from Massachusetts sought to correct, have not as yet been restored to the rolls. They may be eligible for a social-security program—aid to dependent children—but that program is not operating in South Dakota. Local funds are exhausted. These women are in need. Their children are in need. The W. P. A. is refusing to accept them for recertification.

I trust that the committee, in investigating this matter, will discover why and how the W. P. A. finds it possible by some administrative act to evade the plain intent of the acts of this Congress.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Dirksen].

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. McCormack). The gentleman from Illinois is recognized for 2 minutes.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, it occurs to me that every Member of the House can support the pending resolution. This is the first time within my experience that you are making available to the Appropriations Committee an instrument whereby it can secure the necessary data upon which to legislate intelligently.

The situation is about like this: Here in one of the anterooms adjoining this Chamber sits the deficiency subcommittee dealing with this matter. Ranged on one side of the table are the members of the committee. Ranged on the opposite side are the accountants, the auditors, the administrators, the directors, and such other people as W. P. A. chooses to send. The only information the committee can get is by means of cross-examination, and it does not make any difference how skillfully the cross-examination is carried on you cannot always get it. There is a great body of data, statistics, and facts that are so necessary and so essential properly to legislate on this subject that never come before the subcommittee. It has been my experience to sit across the table from department heads through the last three or four sessions and to make an earnest endeavor to find out what the factual basis is for an appropriation, and ofttimes you fail, no matter how diligently you address yourself to the subject.

So I believe every Member of Congress can support this resolution, because it will make available to the Appropriations Committee information which they should have had 3 or 4 years ago. I sincerely hope the resolution will be adopted without a dissenting vote.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Faddis].

Mr. FADDIS. Mr. Speaker, in this investigation of the W. P. A. and the conduct of its activities I feel that the Congress is at last receiving a service to which it has been entitled ever since the W. P. A. was instituted, for, strange as it may seem, in this day and at this time I still feel that the Members of the House of Representatives are the representatives of the taxpayers of the United States as well as of any other class of citizens.

I believe that we are entitled to know the facts which surround the W. P. A. I do not believe any corruption will be found, but I do believe a great deal of mismanagement and inefficiency, waste, and extravagance will be disclosed. I believe the expenses connected with the running of the W. P. A. could be drastically curtailed and no deserving person would suffer. [Applause.]

And I do hope that in conducting this investigation this committee will give special attention to how much of the money expended by the W. P. A. has been expended where it is going to support organizations which are active in circulating throughout the United States subversive literature and in propagating subversive doctrines. Also, in investigating the activities of this organization I hope they will go into its kindred organization, the Workers' Alliance, and find out just how much the W. P. A. in connection with the Workers' Alliance, an organization admittedly dominated by communistic-minded individuals, find out how much that organization is working to bring pressure on Members of the House of Representatives in order to frighten them, or compel them, to appropriate larger and larger sums of money each year for its activities.

Halleck

I also want to say to my Republican friends that as far as being a political asset is concerned, the W. P. A. has never been such to me. Last election I was bitterly opposed by the members of the Workers' Alliance in my district and was elected in spite of their opposition. I believe that the Republicans have received more than their share of the W. P. A. in Pennsylvania, and, so far as Pennsylvania politics is concerned, I may say that I and nearly everyone else in Pennsylvania who has carefully analyzed the situation at the time of the last election in Pennsylvania are thoroughly satisfied that the Republicans received at least 75 percent of the W. P. A. votes in that State last fall. The reason they did so is that they went throughout the State of Pennsylvania and outbid the Democrats in their promises of what they would give them. The Democratic candidates were bound by what the W. P. A. was actually getting. Bound by what we were giving them through the agencies connected with the W. P. A.; but there was no limitation on the promises the Republican candidates could make to these credulous people. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, this investigation to be conducted by the Appropriations Committee, in the event this resolu-tion is adopted, will not be a political investigation. There will be no endeavor to whitewash anybody or anything. The committee will discharge the responsibility put upon it by the House in the resolution and will, as I am sure every Member of this House knows it will, do a good job.

Mr. HEALEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COX. I yield.

Mr. HEALEY. Will this resolution of investigation authorize the committee to ascertain the true relief picture?

Mr. COX. Oh, yes.

Mr. HEALEY. That is, go to various cities and either through investigating officials or by their own investigation determine just what the real relief picture is?

Mr. COX. Under the resolution such action would be within the jurisdiction of the committee.

Mr. Speaker, in offering the resolution I had in contemplation, of course, that the committee would make use of the subcommittee of the committee which has had most to do with the consideration of questions of appropriations for this organization; that is, the Subcommittee on Deficiency Appropriations, but whatever the committee does I shall have confidence in their method of handling the whole question.

Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolu-

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 2 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON]?

There was no objection.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I have voted for the resolution just agreed to not because there is anything to investigate but because there is nothing to conceal.

Following the close of the World War the critics of the administration, hoping to turn the situation to political advantage, passed a resolution to investigate the conduct of the war. It was just such a resolution as this resolution passed here this morning, and under that authorization they spent $157,109.91 probing and exploring every possible lead in the hope of uncovering some sort of corruption or skulduggery on the part of the war administration, and all they were ever able to find after spending this vast sum of money and running all over the United States and Europe at Government expense was that somebody connected with the Army had bought more saddles and bridles than were needed. They were never to show the diversion of a single dollar, and so fruitless was their search that they did not even recommend criminal or impeachment charges against anyone from the President down. Every penny of the $157,000 they spent was utterly wasted. And the resolution just adopted here will be just as fruitless. The Committee on Appropriationsprecisely the same committee selected for this investigationhas just completed an exhaustive investigation of W. P. A. in which we grilled everyone who might know anything about it, and if you will read the hearings you can see for yourself that nothing was developed. We finally concluded the examination and adjourned because we ran out of witnesses and ran out of questions. If there had been anything to investigate, we would have been investigating yet, as we did not sit days on which we could have sat and on occasion adjourned before the close of the day. And yet here is a resolution for the same committee to investigate the same W. P. A. Every dollar that is appropriated for such an investigation will be wasted as prodigiously as we wasted $157,-109.91. But any representative government ought to live in a bird cage, and as long as anybody wants to investigate, I am willing to help them investigate. So I am voting for the resolution, as I have said, not because there is anything to investigate but because there is nothing to conceal. [Ap-

Mr. ANDERSON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Anderson]?

There was no objection.

Mr. ANDERSON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, already the papers and commentators are are beginning to speculate on the adjournment date of this Congress. Even congressional leaders are predicting an early adjournment. But are we to go home and leave one of the major issues of the day untouched and unnoticed? What are we going to do about the National Labor Relations Act? Are we going to permit this flery dragon to continue to suck the blood of American business and destroy American institutions and ideals? Are we going to ignore the overwhelming sentiment of the American people who have demanded that the National Labor Relations Act be amended? Are we going to sit here idle while the National Labor Relations Board continues to flaunt every principle and rule of justice; to destroy-if it candemocracy and respect for law; and to interfere seriously with our national defense?

On several occasions you will recall that I pointed out how the National Labor Relations Board, being motivated by some sinister purpose or being guilty of unforgivable ignorance, has set out to impair the vital defenses of this Nation? I pointed out how the National Labor Relations Board ordered a major aircraft company to rehire aliens and convicted felons in its plant which was engaged in making planes for the United States Army, in spite of the fact that the National Defense Act forbids the employment of aliens in such plants.

It is to the eternal credit of this House that the most brazen attempt ever made to undermine our defenses was repelled by our conferees on the warplane bill. They put their country before politics and ousted the insidious Barkley amendment that would have given the National Labor Relations Board and its communistic cohorts of the C. I. O. the power of life and death over the aircraft industry, which is now the backbone of the defense of our shores and homes.

The action of our conferees should give us renewed hope and renewed faith in our democratic processes of government. But we must go on. We cannot stop here.

I have observed reports that hearings on proposals to amend the National Labor Relations Act would be postponed pending the outcome of the peace conference between the American Federation of Labor and the C. I. O. Mr. Speaker, I submit, how can these great labor groups get together when one of the things that keeps them farthest apart is the National Labor Relations Act as it is now being administered by the Labor Board to the continued favoritism of one group and the utter disdain of the other? Common sense impells us to remove this great obstacle that stands in the way of peace between the two labor groups.

We often hear it said here over the radio and in the papers that our biggest problem is to get people off relief rolls and back into private jobs. All this is just so much hollow talk while we stand by and do nothing to remove the barrier that prevents a revival of business and prosperity. The National Labor Relations Act, as it is now construed and administered, stands squarely in the path of recovery. The biggest and most effective thing this Government can do to bring back prosperity is to remove this monster that impedes recovery at every turn.

Have you ever put yourself in the place of the businessman and employer today? What can he do? Is he not called upon at every turn to go to great expense to defend himself and try to save his business, which the National Labor Relations Board in league with agitators is seeking to destroy? Business the country over has witnessed countless instances of Labor Board persecution and inquisition. Under the present set-up the employer has no defense. He is beaten before the case begins, and Labor Board officials have said so.

The whole fiber and structure of business is quaking with fear for which this Government is responsible. The National Labor Relations Board in its complete and utter disregard for established principles of law and justice is destroying the confidence which is the foundation of all business success. It is destroying and preventing the expansion of legitimate business enterprise and thereby is destroying America.

Let us ask this question: Has the Labor Board helped the Certainly, it has done nothing to get working classes? men back into private jobs and after all its wild crusading there are just as many people on relief today as when it be-About all we have to show for the National Labor Relations Board's great crusade is a glaring record of persecution and injustice and needless expense.

We cannot expect any real improvement in business conditions: we cannot expect to reduce relief rolls, until we remove the crushing burden of the present National Labor Relations Act from the shoulders of American business which are already bent under the weight of ever-increasing taxes

The preamble of the National Labor Relations Act reads, "An act to diminish the causes of labor disputes." but the day has long since arrived when the National Labor Relations Board has set out to defeat every intention of that preamble. Not only has the Board failed miserably in diminishing the causes of labor disputes but it has actually fomented and instigated labor strife. This ridiculous conduct of the Labor Board has come to my attention on a number of occasions. There are instances of where the employer and the union representatives have struck an agreement satisfactory in every respect to both sides and yet they were prevented from settling their controversy and reopening their plants and getting men back to work by the Labor Board which blocked settlement unless the employer would sign a stipulation admitting that he had been guilty of unfair labor practices. Does that sound like diminishing the causes of labor disputes? The untenable and unjustifiable conduct by the Labor Board is typical of its entire existence and conduct. The Board is neither interested in settling nor in diminishing the causes of labor strife. All the Board is interested in is seeing how many employers it can persecute and harass and it cares not whether men get back to work, whether plants remain idle, or labor relations strained to a point where the employer and labor can never get together. Are we going to permit this usurping Labor Board to continue its wild crusade while business and labor are drawn farther and farther apart? Now is the time to act. At the beginning of this Congress I offered a bill that removes the rank injustices of the present Labor Relations Act and I am now asking this House to sign a discharge petition I have placed on the Speaker's desk to bring that bill out here on the floor for consideration.

EXTENSION OF TIME FOR RETIREMENT OF COTTON POOL PARTICIPA-TION OF TRUST CERTIFICATES

Mr. FULMER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's desk the bill (H. R. 3801) to extend the time for retirement of cotton pool participation trust certificates, with Senate amendments thereto, and to agree to the Senate amendments.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendments, as follows:

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. FULMER]?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I understand this is simply setting the date back 3 months and that it is agreeable to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. Hope], the ranking minority member of the Committee on Agriculture?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendments were concurred in. A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

MILITARY SECRETARY TO THE GENERAL OF THE ARMIES

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (S. 1301) to create the office of Military Secretary to the General of the Armies of the United States of America, with the rank of colonel, and for other purposes, and its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. Andrews] for the immediate consideration of the bill?

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, does this set up another department in the Army?

Mr. ANDREWS. No. It has to do with the military secretary who has served General Pershing for the last 23 years.

Mr. RICH. Has this the approval of the Budget? Mr. ANDREWS. It has the approval of the Budget.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. Andrews]?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the office of Military Secretary to the General of the Armies of the United States of America, with the rank of colonel, is hereby created, and the President is hereby authorized, in his discretion, and by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to promote to the grade of colonel an officer of the Army who has served as military secretary to the General of the Armies continuously since that office was revived by act of Congress approved September 3, 1919: Provided, That not more than one appointment to office shall be made under the terms of this act.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. BELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

Mr. BELL. Mr. Speaker, I wish to call attention of Congress to the proposed shifting of present duties of the recorder of deeds office to other offices of the District of Columbia government, which, it is my contention, would result in increased administrative costs and decreased efficiency in the keeping of valuable records for residents of the District of Columbia.

I wish to quote an article that appeared in the Washington Afro-American, a weekly newspaper, on March 25, 1939, which article deplores the assault on this office. The article reads as follows:

Sees New Move As Assault on Record Office—Bill Introduced to Transfer Auto Liens Elsewhere

Thousands of Washington residents are automobile purchasers and many of them have liens on their cars, yet few of them are giving much attention to the four proposed measures now pending before Congress designed to require registration of all liens in either the traffic bureau or the recorder of deeds office.

On the other hand, the bills are causing grave concern among politicians and new dealers have been warned that many votes will be lest accorded exclusively the warner bull to execute the content of the warner bull to be a content of the warner bull to execute the content of the warner bull to be a content of the warner bull to be a be lost among colored constituents if the wrong bill is enacted.

Under the present District regulations, registration of auto liens is optional and under supervision of the recorder of deeds office, one of the few remaining positions given colored political leaders under the so-called spoils system.

BILLS IN BOTH HOUSES

Two of the bills—H. R. 3950 and S. 1296, the former by Congressman JENNINGS RANDOLPH and the latter by Senator WILLIAM J. KING—have been introduced in the House and Senate, respectively, proposing registration of all liens on autos at the traffic bureau. The Senate District Committee reported favorably on King's meas-

The senate District Committee reported tavorably on King's measure, but Randolph's bill has not come up for a hearing.

Both measures reportedly have the backing of District government heads and Traffic Director Van Duzer.

In view of the fact that District Commissioners have for years been trying unsuccessfully to gain control of the recorder of deeds office, this new move to relieve the office of one of its primary duties appears to be a change of tactics calculated to lower the importance of the bureau.

OPPOSITION SEEN

OPPOSITION SEEN

Opposition to the removal of registration from the recorder's office is certain to crop up when the bills come up for a hearing.

First, because it would be an added expense to the Government

Under the measure proposed by Mr. King, it will require an appropriation of approximately $15,000 to establish such a bureau at the traffic department with additional funds to maintain an adequate staff.

If the department is established at the recorder's office, the only requirements from an economic angle would amount to approximately $5,000. This would take care of additional personnel only, inasmuch as equipment and materials needed to carry on the business is already on hand and used daily with registration of the current liens on an optional basis.

In addition to this, I wish to call attention to the fact that in subsequent years it would be found to best advantage to have all records of property holdings and obligations in one office, because many times records must be made of both real and chattel properties, such as in the case of probate cases. civil court actions, and in making credit reports. The proposed changes would scatter those records, leaving only a part of the chattel property records in the office of the recorder of deeds, adding greatly to the confusion in checking by abstractors, attorneys, and the general public,

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on tomorrow, following the legislative program of the day and any special orders heretofore entered, I may be permitted to address the House for 25 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. Under a special order heretofore entered, the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Peterson] is recognized for 20 minutes.

Mr. PETERSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, there is now pending before this House a billion-dollar agricultural appropriation bill. I do not believe there is any doubt but that this bill will be passed by an overwhelming majority vote of this House. Neither do I believe there are many, if any, Members of Congress who seriously believe the farmers of America after this $1,000,000,000 has been spent will be materially, if at all, permanently benefited through these expenditures. We are continuing on an emergency program as far as our legislation dealing with agriculture is concerned.

I propose at this time to discuss one particular phase of this program, and that is the provision of the bill which covers an appropriation of $25,000,000 for use in purchasing farms for farmers who are now classified as tenants.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? Mr. PETERSON of Georgia. Not just at this time.

I am sure a large number of those who have so earnestly promoted this particular feature of the measure believe it will offer a degree of permanent remedy to the farm problem. However, in view of the fact that I have initiated since entering Congress a program of legislation which deals with this identical question, I believe it is entirely timely and proper that I discuss this matter at this time. I recognize, Mr. Speaker, that my proposed legislation is not germane to this appropriation bill and therefore it would be useless for me to attempt to offer it as a substitute for the tenant purchase provision of this measure: however, I would like to contrast and compare this tenant purchase program with the program I sincerely trust will be brought before this body for your deliberate consideration before this Congress adjourns.

Under this so-called purchase provision of this measure it is provided that $25,000,000 be used. Under the program as it is now progressing, the Government, through the Department of Agriculture, is purchasing farm units at a cost of approximately $5,000. I have here a report from the Department of Agriculture showing that the average loan to finance farm purchases during the last year was $4,890.

I am pleased to observe in the hearings before the Committee on Appropriations on this bill that my distinguished colleague, the gentleman from Washington [Mr. LEAVY], in interrogating Department of Agriculture officials, brought out the fact that there are between 55,000 and 60,000 owneroperated farms changed annually to tenant-operated farms. I also have here from the Department of Agriculture figures showing that the average mortgage on the average owneroperated farm in America is $3,024. Now we have the picture. An owner-operator is foreclosed by virtue of the fact that he cannot pay a $3,000 farm mortgage and is forced to become a tenant farmer. After he has become a tenant farmer, and not until he has become a tenant farmer, he becomes eligible for a loan under the provisions of this bill we are now considering, whereby a farm will be pur-chased for him. He is decided by the Department of Agriculture to be eligible. The Department of Agriculture then proceeds to buy for him a farm and places him back in ownership. Instead of the mortgage being now $3,000, it has risen to $5,000, and we say to that man, "Well, old man farmer, you could not pay your $3,000 mortgage and we had to let you drift into tenancy, and now we are picking you up and saying that you can pay a $5,000 mortgage."

Mr. Speaker, that situation is absolutely ridiculous, in my opinion. Why would it not be far more sensible and far more reasonable for us as legislators to deal with that man first as an owner-operator and help him work out of his hopeless plight, rather than leave him helpless until he is driven to tenancy and then come back with an impossible situation wherein the man has obligations which every reasonable man knows he cannot meet when he enters into them. You may say there has been legislation proposed heretofore which will assist the owner-operator farmer. Yes, there has been such legislation proposed.

Mr. WOOD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? Mr. PETERSON of Georgia. Not at this time. I shall be pleased to yield as soon as I have developed my line of thought.

It is my understanding that the Federal land bank was created for the primary purpose of assisting the owneroperator-farmer whose mortgage had grown so large that it was unbearable and beyond his efforts to pay off and thus regain a position of economic security. What do we find from the Federal land bank? I have here a report from the Federal land bank which shows that under normal conditions, considering the average mortgagor to whom the Federal land bank has made a loan, more of the loans are foreclosed every year than are liquidated through payment by the mortgagor. In addition, we find that thousands and hundreds of thousands of those who have borrowed money from the Federal land bank are delinquent in their payments.

It is true that in the last few years this condition has probably somewhat reversed itself, but why? Because Congress has appropriated sufficient funds in the form of bounties to these mortgagors so they could take these moneys and turn them right back to the Government again in order to pay off their mortgages.

Then, too, I might say we have additional legislation in the form of moratoriums on the payment of the principal of these farm debts. Now, I think probably these moratoriums have done more good temporarily for the operator-farmer than any other piece of legislation, but we all know that that is not a practical approach to this proposition. We all know that it is not practical for Congress arbitrarily to cancel all the debts, just as they are on these farms. So we have compromised the matter by canceling the debts until after the next election is over or for the next 2 or 3 or 5 years, but left that farmer to know that he still has that same burden and that same obligation upon him.

Now, Mr. Speaker, in contrast to this ludicrous, this absurd, this ridiculous program of standing by and letting the owner of a farm be driven to tenantry on account of a $3,000 mortgage, and then step down and pick him up and say, "We are going to place you in security with a $5,000 mortgage," I have been pleading with you to help me approach that proposition from the viewpoint of first helping him to liquidate that $3,000 mortgage and prevent him from ever becoming a tenant farmer.

I have introduced very simple legislation. I am inclined to think sometimes that the reason some are prone not to listen to the legislation I have offered is because of its simplicity. I have proposed-and to save my life I cannot understand why anyone fails to see the logic of it-instead of going into the open market and purchasing land with the credit of the Federal Government behind that purchase, which we know will drive the price of land up and up, that we go, into the open market and purchase farm mortgages which, instead of driving the price up, will drive the mortgages into the competitive field and drive the price down and down. I am absolutely confident that in a majority of the instances we could purchase those farm mortgages for from 10 percent to 25 percent of their face value.

Now, we all know that these farmers are never going to pay these debts. The facts show that the carrying charges on the present farm mortgage indebtedness of this country, runs from $400,000,000 to $800,000,000 under normal conditions. This means approximately 10 percent of the gross cash income of all the farm products of this Nation must go not to buy the processed goods, not to buy the finished products, but must go to pay interest and sinking funds, and its value is entirely lost, not only to the farmer but to the manufacturer as well, insofar as furnishing a market for the manufactured articles of this country.

We have begun here a program at $5,000 per farm of taking the 3,000,000 tenant farm families of this country and making them owner-operators. Did you ever stop to thinkand I presume all of you feel that every tenant farmer not only in your district but in America, should have the same consideration—that $5,000 per farm for 3,000,000—and here are your figures as to the number of tenant farmers in America-means a total cash outlay on the part of this Government of $15,000,000,000. There is already outstanding a total farm mortgage indeptedness in round figures of $7,000,000,000. By carrying this ridiculous program to its final conclusion, you will have increased the farm-mortgage debt from $7,000,000,000 to $22,000,000,000 and will have absolutely destroyed the purchasing power of all of the agriculture of this Nation.

Now, what is it I have proposed to you? I propose that we first take the 1,600,000 owner-operators whose farms are mortgaged at the rate of approximately $3,000 per farm, who are faced with a hopeless situation, who you know and I know will never pay their obligations, who are being driven into tenantry at the rate of 55,000 to 60,000 families annually, and that we go into the market through the General Land Office—not through a bureaucratic Department of Agriculture—and that we purchase those mortgages. We know before we begin that we will not have to pay over $3,000, and the chances are we can get them at approximately $2,000 to $2,500. Suppose we pay the $3,000, 1,600,000 farm families at $3,000 per unit means an outlay of $4,800,-000,000. I ask you to compare this with a total expenditure of $15,000,000,000, under the present program.

This sounds like a heap of money, does it not; but this is not all. We must remember that $3,000,000,000 of this sum is already obligated by the Federal Government. The Federal land bank today owns over $3,000,000,000 of the total sum of the outstanding farm mortgages. Subtract this sum from your $4,800,000,000, and you have an outlay of only $1,800,000,000. Take a 10-year period, and for $180,000,000 annually we can absolutely solve the tenant problem of this country and regain purchasing power for over 60 percent of the farm population of this Nation.

After you have spent the $15,000,000,000 under this proposed program, the President of the United States says that there is still an annual increase of 40,000 tenant-farm families annually and at $5,000 per unit you have a total outlay of $200,000,000 annually to take care, Mr. Speaker, of the increase in tenant families alone.

In other words after providing farms for the tenant population under the present program the farm mortgage indebtedness will have increased from $7,000,000,000 to $22,-000,000,000

Under my program, after having helped the 1,600,000 owner-operators take care of their farm mortgages, we will have reduced the farm mortgage indebtedness from $7,000,-000,000 to less than $3,000,000,000. And in doing this we will have spent only a small percentage of the annual sum we are now spending under our present temporary and very unsatisfactory program.

I here have shown you that by a common-sense program we can take $20,000,000 less than that, considering the farmmortgage debts at 100 cents on the dollar, we can take $180,000,000 or $20,000,000 less than that and absolutely stop tomorrow, the day the act is passed, the increase among the tenant population of this country.

I have shown that under the present program after expending $15,000,000,000 we will have increased farm mortgages to a total sum of $22,000,000,000. While under my program after expending less than $5,000,000,000 we will have reduced the farm mortgage debt to less than $3,000,000,000.

Mr. PATMAN. Has the gentleman examined the Jones-

Lee bill regarding farm tenancy?

Mr. PETERSON of Georgia. No; I have not examined it, but I understand the essence of the bill is to increase the amount of loan annually from $25,000,000 to $1,000,000,000.

Mr. PATMAN. That is not the way that I understand it. Mr. PETERSON of Georgia. Has the gentleman examined the measure that I am advocating?

Mr. PATMAN. No; I have not.

Mr. PETERSON of Georgia. I am glad the gentleman brought that up. Insofar as I have been able to learn, every bill that has been brought before this Congress for consideration, that has received any favorable action, had to have the stamp of approval of Secretary of Agriculture Wallace and his lieutenants, and so far I have not seen a single bill to which they gave their O. K. or approval that did not give them a stranglehold on every activity of the farm families that come under their supervision.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PETERSON of Georgia. Not at present. I am very glad the gentleman mentioned it, because I have discussed this matter at length with the officials in the Department of Agriculture, and they have made it evident that they will be glad to go along with me if I would just put in a provision wherein the activities of the farmer and his family for the remainder of their lives are to be under the bureaucratic control of Mr. Wallace and his Department of Agriculture.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Georgia has expired.

ELECTRIC POWER-NIAGARA RIVER AUTHORITY

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. Faddis). Under special order the Chair recognizes the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN] for 30 minutes,

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, during the time that has been allotted to me I desire to discuss the overcharges for electric lights and power now paid by the unprotected consumers of electricity throughout the State of New York and to call attention to a bill which I have introduced providing for a Niagara River Authority.

Later I want to take up the proposition of relief for the power consumers in the coal-producing States, as well as in other States, that depend upon coal and oil for the production of their electric energy. At that time I propose to show that electricity can be produced with either coal or oil and distributed to the ultimate consumers at the T. V. A. yard-stick rates or at the Ontario rates without loss.

In other words, I want to see this program spread to cover the whole United States, until every single consumer of electric energy, everyone who turns an electric switch, will be getting electricity at these rates. That will not only relieve the man who pays the electric bill, but it will furnish an additional market for coal. That will increase employment in the coal fields, whereas today thousands of coal miners are out of work.

As I have said before, this power program is one of the greatest movements of this generation.

When the future historian comes to survey the record of this administration he will find its outstanding accomplishment to be that of the creation and development of the Tennessee Valley Authority, together with its kindred legislation.

The progress that has been made for saving to the American people our water-power resources, the application of the yardstick for the measurement of electric rates to the ultimate consumers, and the construction of rural power lines to take this energy to the farmers of the Nation, together with the aid in placing in the homes those electric appliances that make home life more pleasant and more attractive—in other words, the establishment of a permanent power policy for the American people that will guarantee justice to the ultimate consumers of electricity in every nook and corner of this Nation—will go down in history as the greatest single accomplishment of this generation.

It is one of the outstanding achievements of modern times. It has already reduced light and power rates to the ultimate consumers $556,000,000 a year. It has increased the use of all electrical appliances, from the electric iron to the washing machine, from the radio to the refrigerator, from the water pump to the electric range. It has electrified millions of farm homes that never had seen an electric light and probably would not have seen one for at least another generation had it not been for this program.

We have just started; we are just in the beginning of this great national movement to place electricity in every home, including every farm home, and in every business establishment at the yardstick rates, or at rates based upon the cost of generation, transmission, and distribution—which would further reduce the light and power bills of the ultimate consumers of this Nation, even on the present load, by about $1.300.000,000 a year.

Strange as it may seem, the greatest penalty paid by the people of any State in this Union in overcharges for electric lights and power is paid by the people of the State of New York, where rates ought to be the lowest. The residential consumers alone in the State of New York are overcharged $62,472,500 a year, the commercial consumers are overcharged $67,498,500, and the industrial consumers are overcharged $42,862,700 a year, making a total of $172,833,700 the people of the State of New York pay in overcharges for electric lights and power in 1 year, as compared with rates in Ontario, Canada, just across the line.

For the information of the House I am inserting a table showing the number of kilowatt-hours of electricity used by the various classes of consumers in the State of New York during the year 1937, together with the amount paid by each class, and showing the amounts they would have paid, and the savings they would have realized, if this power had been delivered to them at the Tennessee Valley Authority rates, or the rates charged at Tacoma, Wash.; Winnipeg, Canada, or throughout the Province of Ontario.

This affects every person in New York State who turns an electric switch. He is simply required to pay an extra tax to the Power Trust which is acting as a supergovernment in New York as well as in many other States, and he must pay that tax in overcharges every month that rolls around. That tax or overcharge amounts to 100 percent, as a rule, of the value of the electricity used, as will appear from the following table to which I have just referred:

Estimated number of electric customers, kilowatt-hour sales, and revenues for 1937 in New York State, and estimated revenues and consumer savings if rates in the Tennessee Valley Authority area, Tacoma, Wash., Winnipeg, Canada, and the Province of Ontario, Canada, had been in effect in New York State during 1937

How can the people of the State of New York stagger under such a burden?

These overcharges reach into every city, every town, every hamlet, every home, and every business establishment in the State that uses electric energy.

If every individual who turns an electric switch in that proud Commonwealth realized fully the extent to which he is robbed and plundered in overcharges for lights and power, it would create a revolt from one end of the State to the other.

If anyone doubts the accuracy of these statements, let him write to the Federal Power Commission here in Washington and get the annual report on the monthly light and power bills for the State of New York, and then get the one for the State of Mississippi and the one for the State of Washington and compare the rates paid in New York with the rates paid in Tacoma, Wash., or the rates paid in that section of Mississippi that is served with T. V. A. power. He will find that these overcharges are not exaggerated. If he will compare them with his receipted bill, he will find that the overcharges are invariably far greater than these tables would indicate.

Let me suggest that everyone else who reads this Record should send to the Federal Power Commission and get these reports for his own State and for the States above indicated, so he can make his own comparison. If the people only knew what this means to them and what we are trying to do to protect the ultimate consumers of electricity in every state in this Union, they would rise en masse in support of this program to give them relief from these exorbitant overcharges.

These rate reports for the various States may be obtained from the Federal Power Commission for 10 cents each. Everyone who pays an electric bill should have them.

From the above table you will see that the monthly consumption of electricity by domestic consumers throughout the State of New York averaged a little less than 55 kilowatthours a month.

In Tupelo, Miss., where we enjoy the T. V. A. yardstick rates, the residential consumers used on an average of 215 kilowatt-hours last month, and in Corinth, Miss., where they also have T. V. A. rates, they used 258 kilowatt-hours.

High rates not only penalize the consumers but they cut down the consumption of electricity and prevent the use of those electrical appliances necessary for the comforts and conveniences of the home, as well as for the successful operation of a business establishment.

For instance, throughout the State of New York only 48 percent of the residential consumers have electric refrigerators in their homes, while in Tupelo and in Corinth, Miss., 90 percent of the domestic consumers have electric refrigerators in their homes.

Cheap rates for electric energy means increased consumption. Increased consumption also increases the use of electrical appliances, which adds to the comforts and conveniences of the home and lifts the burdens of drudgery from the shoulders of the housewife. It also aids greatly in the successful operation of any business enterprise.

If the people of New York are to get relief from this intolerable condition, that relief is going to have to come through acts of Congress.

For that reason I am introducing a bill providing for a Niagara River Authority. There is a distinct need for such an authority from the standpoint of national defense, navigation, and the protection of the electric consumers in the State of New York.

The average flow of the Niagara River over a period of 70 years has been about 225,000 cubic feet per second, with only a minor daily or seasonal fluctuation, resulting from the enormous reservoir effects of the Great Lakes. This reservoir holds about half of the world's supply of fresh water.

About 1906 public opinion was aroused on the question of the preservation of the beauty of Niagara Falls. This resulted in the Boundary Waters Treaty between the United States and Great Britain, which was consummated in 1909. Under this treaty, which created an International Joint Commission, 56,000 cubic feet of water per second was permitted to be diverted at Niagara Falls for the purpose of producing electric power. Of this total amount 20,000 cubic feet was allocated to the American side and 36,000 to the Canadian side. Although not specifically stated in the negotiations leading up to this treaty, the authorized excess amount on the Canadian side was supposed to compensate for the proposed diversion of 10,000 cubic feet at Chicago.

About 10 years ago the right to this proposed Chicago diversion was declared illegal by the United States Supreme Court, and under the Chicago decree, the use was cut from 10,000 to around 1,500 cubic feet. This cut went into effect on January 1 of this year, still leaving the Canadians with 80 percent more water at Niagara than was allocated to the American side, in spite of the fact, that due to the influence of Lake Michigan, which is entirely within the United States, the American side contributes more run-off water than does the Canadian side.

HOW HYDROPOWER IS MADE

Power is made by water falling through a vertical distance. The amount of water power manufactured varies directly with the amount of water available and the distance of fall—for which engineers use the term "head." If the usable quantity of water is doubled, the power will be doubled, and the same applies to the use of head.

There exists a 326-foot fall between Lakes Erie and Ontario with about 160 feet or 49 percent concentrated at Niagara Falls. The early power development on the American side took place in two stations, known, respectively, as Adams No. 1 and Adams No. 2, both located above the Falls and discharging the used water under a fall of 160 feet into a tunnel which empties into the lower river just below the fallen bridge.

On the Canadian side the two original stations are known as the Toronto and the Ontario stations. Both are located below Horseshoe Falls with a head of about 180 feet. All four of these stations adjacent to the Falls are woefully inefficient, both from the standpoint of head and machine condition.

During the World War a critical power shortage occurred on both sides of the Niagara. It was so acute that the Canadian—the publicly owned Ontario Hydro—and the American interests decided to increase the efficiency.

The Ontario Hydro, as a result of this wartime shortage, built the Queenstown plant about 13 miles below the Falls, utilizing through a canal about 300 feet head. The Queenstown development was made with modern highly efficient machines.

The American interests met this need by installing six new machines in the Schoellkopf station, located in the gorge under a head of about 160 feet, or 54 percent, of the utilized head at Queenstown.

With less water the American interests are only utilizing about half the power that can be developed with their allotted supply. There has been no development below the Falls, where the full flow of the river would be available instead of the 10 percent of the flow now used on the American side. The Niagara River is Nature's superb damless power site backed up by a vast inexhaustible reservoir system. Why is this inefficient condition allowed to continue? The answer is that the present users of this great natural resource on the American side are more interested in the preservation of a monopoly than they are in seeking benefits to be passed on to the people of the State of New York. To show the effect of such illogical development the Queenstown plant obtains 30 horsepower from every cubic foot of water, compared with the 17 feet per housepower possible at the Falls. The Canadians use most of their allotted water in the modern Queenstown plant with the other two Falls stations carrying only a relatively small load.

It is possible to develop power below the gorge under a head of 30 to 40 feet utilizing the full flow of the river. It will also be possible to build a relatively inexpensive weir in the upper river, which could be the instrumentality of saving millions of dollars annually in dredging operations in the harbors of the Great Lakes. I will refer later, and at length, to the rate situation in New York State, where the consumers pay two to five times as much as they do on the opposite side of the river in the Province of Ontario.

NEW YORK STATE POWER POLICY

The policy of beneficial use of water power has been in the making for 30 years in New York State. In 1907 Governor Hughes, now Chief Justice of the United States Supreme Court, urged the preservation of the power resources for the benefit of the people of that State. The Hughes policy found its way to enactment in 1907, when the legislature directed the State water supply commission to "devise plans for the progressive development of the water powers of the State under State ownership." During the succeeding 25 years the application of this policy was under continued inquiry by legislative committees and commissions. The recommendations of all these State bodies were in the direction of conserving the interests of the people.

In 1912 a joint legislative committee recommended that the State constitution be amended to provide—

That the development of the water power of the State is a governmental function and that private property may be taken therefor with just compensation.

At the same time this committee recommended-

That no further grants of power privileges, water rights, the ownership of which is clearly in the State, should be granted except for limited periods and then only upon adequate compensation being made to the State.

In 1924 Governor Smith advocated a State power authority, which should be a private corporation deriving its power from the State and having the duty imposed upon it to develop the water-power resources.

In 1930 the New York Legislature created the authority for the St. Lawrence power development. This was the first policy legislation maintaining that the water-power resources are the inalienable possession of the people.

In 1931 the New York Legislature created the New York Power Authority, which was set up to develop that part of the St. Lawrence River within the boundaries of the State of New York, with the requirement that the bed and waters of this river, as well as the power and power sites, shall always remain the property of the people. The power authority was directed, in cooperation with Canadian and United States authorities, to proceed with the development of the international section of the St. Lawrence for navigation and power. This New York Power Authority was also authorized to develop, operate, and manage that part of the St. Lawrence project owned by the people of New York.

In June 1938 an attempt was again made to place in the proposed Constitution of New York a provision vesting in the people of the State, for all time, title to water power and water-power sites. Unfortunately, this provision was rejected because of the lobbying activities of the Power Trust.

MONOPOLY

The inefficient private development at Niagara is being continued to foster the aluminum monopoly. The Niagara Power Co.—a subsidiary and ally of the Aluminum Co.—maintains the position that it has an absolute title to all power which may be created at Niagara. The State of New York has vigorously contested this position of the aluminum interests since the Long Sault case, during Governor Hughes' administration. I hope all the Members of Congress from the copper States will follow this story.

The aluminum monopoly was built on Niagara power. These interests early tried to secure control of the American side of the International Rapids of the St. Lawrence, and when they were blocked they either bought into or joined hands with the Power Trust. The contracts of the Niagara Power Co. contain stipulations preventing other purchasers of power from using this energy to manufacture aluminum.

According to Berle—and this is confirmed by the reports of the New York Power Authority—the Aluminum Co. originally invested $3,100,000 at Niagara, and since this original investment it has placed no new money into this enterprise. Out of earnings these interests have built up assets of $167,500,000 and have paid in dividends $81,000,000, or a $245,400,000 gain on an investment of $3,100,000. Out of these stupendous revenues the State of New York has received practically no benefits either in license fees or in low electric rates for homes, farms, or business establishments.

HOLDING COMPANY

The Niagara Hudson Power Corporation is the top holding company which controls the sale of electric power and gas through subsidiary companies in a large part of New York State. It owns and controls the Buffalo, Niagara & Eastern Power Corporation, another holding company, which, in turn, controlled the following companies and their subsidiaries as of 1937:

- (1) The Niagara Falls Power Co. and its subsidiary companies, as follows: Canadian Niagara Power Co., Ltd.; Niagara Junction Railway Co. & Gorge View Park, Inc.
 - (2) The Tonawanda Power Co.
 - (3) The Lockport & Newfane Power & Water Supply Co.
- (4) The Buffalo General Electric Co. and its subsidiary, Niagara Electric Service Corporation.
- (5) The Niagara, Lockport & Ontario Power Co. and its subsidiary companies, as follows: Bradford Electric Co., of Bradford, Pa.; Hydraulic Race Co.; and Lower Niagara River Power & Water Supply Co.

These companies all operate in western New York State,

Canada, and part of Pennsylvania.

In 1937 the Buffalo General Electric Co. and its subsidiary, Niagara Electric Service Corporation, and the Tonawanda Power Co. were merged into the Buffalo Niagara Electric Corporation. During the same year the Bradford Electric Co. was sold to the Keystone Electric Co., a holding company of the ill-famed Associated Gas & Electric System.

The Niagara Falls Power Co. owns the following hydrogenerating plants located at Niagara Falls, N. Y.: Adams station No. 1, where there are 10 machines of 3,000 kilowatts each. Of these, 5 are usable and 5 are not, due to the fact that of the 10 machines only 5 have been rewound for 12,000 volts.

In Adams station No. 2 there are 11 machines of 3,000 kilowatts each, all in usable condition. Both Adams station No. 1 and No. 2 are located above the hydraulic canal supplying the Schoellkopf station, which is located below the Falls. This plant is old, obsolete, and very inefficient.

The Schoellkopf station is located below the American Falls, down in the gorge. The water is diverted from the Niagara River above the Falls and carried through the hydraulic canal and penstocks to this station. At this point there is a head of about 160 feet. In the Schoellkopf station there are 19 machines, the capacities of which are as follows: Eight, 7,500 kilowatt-hours each, totaling 60,000 kilowatts; three, 30,000 kilowatt-hours each, totaling 90,000 kilowatts; three, 65,000 kilowatt-hours each, totaling 195,000 kilowatts; an hourly total of 345,000 kilowatt-hours. Five direct-current machines owned by the Aluminum Co. of America.

ALUMINUM CO.

In the 1936 figures in the annual report of the Niagara Hudson Power Corporation, after stating its yearly hydroproduction, appears, in small print footnote: "Not including equivalent kilowatt-hours in the following amounts developed by use of mechanical energy 231,007,385 kilowatt-hours in This "mechanical energy" is a subterfuge term for hydroelectric power sold to the Aluminum Co. of America and produced by these five direct-current machines of the latter company. In other words, the Niagara Falls Power Co., a subsidiary of the Niagara Hudson Power Corporation, is selling to the Aluminum Co. of America, under special exclusive contract, direct current at a saving to the Aluminum Co. of America of more than $5,000,000 during the last 10 years. This special contract expires in 1967, and will permit, unless prevented, special benefits to the Aluminum Co. of America of more millions of dollars in the remaining 29 years. This contract is unjust, unreasonable, and discrim-

The Aluminum Co. of America, being a preferential customer, is buying power at millions of dollars less than any other user, yet it takes just as much water to run a direct-current hydrogenerator as an alternating-current hydrogenerator. As a matter of fact, E. I. du Pont de Nemours & Co., Inc., and most of the chemical companies located in Niagara Falls, are compelled to purchase alternating current from the Niagara Falls Power Co. and have been compelled to install rotary converters to convert their required alternating current into direct current.

As recently as 1937, and undoubtedly at the present time, about one-half of the common stock of the Niagara Hudson Power Corporation was held by four companies: Niagara Share, which owned 1,007,847 shares as of December 31, 1937; United Corporation, which held 2,351,000 shares as of December 31, 1937; United Gas Improvement, which held 643,411 shares at the end of 1936, and the Aluminum Co. of America, which, according to latest figures, on April 1, 1938, held 873,000 shares.

Here we have the monopolistic Aluminum Co. of America owning a large block of the common stock of the Niagara Hudson Power Corporation, contracting with a subsidiary company of this corporation, namely, the Niagara Falls Power Co., and purchasing power at a rate 50 percent lower than other users.

The Niagara Falls Power Co. has challenged the jurisdiction of the Public Service Commission of the State of New York in the contracts upon the ground that the State of New York has no proprietary interest in the Niagara River waters at the point at Niagara Falls whence the power is derived.

The Aluminum Co. of America is one of the largest of the 24 private wholesale industrial customers of the Niagara Falls Power Co. It takes more than 10 percent of the daily hydraulic power available to the power company under the Boundary Waters Treaty, providing for 20,000 cubic feet of water per second on the American side. The Aluminum Co. of America takes 12½ percent of the firm power furnished to the private industrial customers, 49,000 firm horsepower, amounting to about 36,573 kilowatts of guaranteed power daily of the 211,120 kilowatts sold to private industrial customers.

Under the two licenses granted to the Niagara Falls Power Co. by the Federal Power Commission, under the Federal Water Power Act of June 10, 1920, it would seem that the Federal Government could stop this discrimination in rates that is costing the consumers of this holding company millions of dollars every year.

STEAM PLANT

The Buffalo Niagara Electric Co., a subsidiary of the Buffalo Niagara & Eastern Power Corporation, which controls the Niagara Falls Power Co., owns the Huntley Steam Plant, located on River Road between Niagara Falls and Buffalo, N. Y. This steam plant has a steam generating capacity of 560,000 kilowatts of firm power, with an overload capacity of 10 percent. The Huntley Steam Plant was built about 1929 to back up the Niagara Falls Hydro, with a capacity in excess of the hydro plant of over 125,000 kilowatts.

The company offered testimony in the Utica Rate case in 1929 that electric energy could be produced at the Huntley Steam Plant, with all overheads, for 5 mills per kilowatt-hour.

I call the attention of Members from coal-producing States to this statement to show that electricity can be generated with coal and supplied to your people at the T. V. A. or the Ontario rates.

WHOLESALING COMPANY

The Niagara Falls Power Co. is a wholesale company not serving directly any domestic or commercial user of power. It sells only to the large manufacturing companies and the subsidiary operating companies of the holding company, Buffalo Niagara & Eastern Power Corporation and subsidiary companies of the Niagara Hudson Power Corporation, which sell other unrelated electric companies, such as Associated Gas & Electric Co., Keystone Electric Co., and several municipal plants. In this manner, power is transmitted into Pennsylvania

On page 16 of the 1936 report of the Niagara Hudson Power Corporation to its stockholders there are set forth the electric sales in kilowatt-hours, less the 231,007,285 kilowatt-hours developed as direct current and sold as "mechanical energy" to the Aluminum Co. of America. It shows the sale to companies not connected with its system of 1,342,971,451 killowatt-hours. I further shows the total sales, including the system's use of 6,451,278,423 kilowatt-hours. Therefore, about 20 percent of its sales were made to outside sources.

The Niagara Falls Power Co. was set up as a wholesale company to avoid the jurisdiction of the Public Service Commission of the State of New York, since consumers cannot bring a complaint against a company not directly serving them.

LAND MONOPOLY

The Niagara Falls Power Co. owns land bounded by Buffalo Avenue and the Niagara River in the city of Niagara Falls and across the back of Niagara Falls parallel to Hyde Park Boulevard and from Niagara Reservation along the Niagara River to Lewiston. This gives a complete monopoly of all industrial sites available in the city of Niagara Falls, N. Y.

No industry can locate therein unless agreeable to this monopoly. A portion of this land is leased to certain industries but is not sold to them. This land was originally acquired to keep fair-priced Canadian power out of Niagara Falls, N. Y. Any company from Canada or from the United States would have to acquire rights-of-way for transmission lines, which is prevented by the ownership of this land by this corporation. Since the purchase of this land, the Niagara Falls Power Co. has filled in the Niagara River, above the Falls, on the American side, and has thus made for itself many hundreds of acres of new land. Most of this land above the American Falls, toward La Salle, and across the back end of the city of Niagara Falls has been leased for 99 years to various large industries, such as Niagara Alkali, Du Ponts, and Carborundum Co. The value of this land should be stricken from the rate base of the Niagara Falls Power Co.

The Niagara Falls Power Co. retains the ownership of the streets that provide ingress and egress to these manufacturing properties. The following reading matter appears on the signs erected by the Niagara Falls Power Co. at the entrance to these streets on Buffalo Avenue, Niagara Falls, N. Y.:

Private street. The use of this street is permitted under revocable license of the Niagara Falls Power Co.

A large part of the land owned by the Niagara Falls Power Co., from below the Falls down to Lewiston, N. Y., was acquired from its subsidiary, the Niagara Gorge Railroad Co., which has since gone out of existence. No part of the value of this land has any place in the rate base.

Gorge View Park, Inc., another subsidiary of the Niagara Falls Power Co., owns a residential development overlooking the Niagara Gorge below the Falls and is part of the land acquired to prevent the extension of power lines from Canada. The value of this land has no place in a rate base.

A RAILROAD ALLY

The Niagara Junction Railway Co., another subsidiary of the Niagara Falls Power Co., has a complete monopoly on all freight passing in and out of the industries located on the lands leased to them by the Niagara Falls Power Co., and the latter company does not allow the railroads to lay sidings to these industries. This railway company charges $4 for every car of freight carried over these leased lands.

The Niagara, Lockport & Ontario Power Co., a subsidiary of the Buffalo Niagara & Eastern Power Corporation, holds a contract with the Ontario Hydro Commission of Canada for the purchase of a large block of power produced on the Canadian side in the Ontario Hydro plants. It is not known what the Niagara Lockport & Ontario Power Co. pays for this block of power.

The electric energy produced in the hydro plants of the Niagara Falls Power Co. is firm power. Every second of the year the Niagara Falls Power Co. diverts 20,000 cubic feet of water. There is always this steady flow.

The Niagara Falls Power Co. never had to build dams or storage reservoirs to insure a steady flow of 20,000 cubic feet of water per second. Nature has provided all of this.

Electric energy is produced by the Niagara Falls Power Co. for less than 1 mill per kilowatt-hour. It is the cheapest source of electric energy in the State of New York, if not in the world.

TRYING TO AVOID FEDERAL REGULATION

During 1937 the Niagara Hudson Power Corporation announced the sale of Bradford Electric Co., located in Pennsylvania, to the Keystone Electric Co., a holding company of the Associated Gas & Electric Co. system, so that all direct sales of the Niagara Hudson system would be made within New York State.

It is not known whether the Niagara Hudson Power Corporation, or one of its subsidiary companies, holds the securities of the Keystone Electric Co.—operating the Bradford properties in Pennsylvania—in payment for the Bradford Electric Co.

The Niagara Hudson Power Corporation or its subsidiaries transmit power into Pennsylvania through sales to the Keystone Electric Co.

REFUNDING OPERATIONS

In 1936 the Niagara Falls Power Co. refunded all of its bonds at a lower interest rate, thereby saving interest in the yearly sum of $567.560.

In 1938 the Buffalo Niagara Electric Corporation refunded its bonds at a lower rate of interest, thereby saving interest in the yearly sum of $498,560.

In 1937 the Niagara, Lockport & Ontario Power Co. refunded its bonds at a reduced interest rate, thereby saving an annual interest payment of $393,172.50.

The combined total of these savings in yearly interest charges on funded debt amounts to $1,459,292.50. Yet no substantial or commensurate rate reduction has been allowed to the consumers of electricity served by these interlocked operating companies.

MILLIONS EXPENDED TO DEFEAT REGULATION

On January 18, 1938, the Buffalo Evening News said: "Utilities expended millions to foil State and public-service

Money was used for suits to block rate cuts. This report states that Buffalo lawyers received $452,447. "Total payments made by the Niagara Hudson group and affiliated companies for legal services during the 6-year period amounted to $1,372,951," the report said. The report also said that some of the companies frankly admitted that they spent money to oppose legislation affecting public utilities. I wonder how much of that money trickled into Washington during the time we were passing the utility-holding bill?

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. Yes.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. The gentleman wondered how much money was spent in Washington while trying to pass the utility holding-company bill. I suggest that when the Congress was trying to find Mr. Hopson, the big shot utility magnate whom they claimed they were fighting, they found the President's Secretary, Mr. McIntyre, with Mr. Chip Roberts, enjoying the hospitality of Mr. Hopson's Washington office. Perhaps Mr. Chip Robert and the President's Secretary might be able to give the gentleman some information as to how the utility funds were spent in Washington.

Mr. RANKIN. How did the gentleman from Wisconsin vote on the holding-company bill?

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Oh, the gentleman from Wisconsin was not a Member of Congress when that bill came up for consideration. I followed the record of Mr. Hopson when he was running away from Congress and Congress was looking for him, and when the representative of the Congress went into the Washington quarters of Mr. Hopson and found Mr. Chip Robert, a New Deal Government official, and Mr. McIntyre there. Perhaps they can give the gentleman information as to how much money the power companies spent in Washington.

Mr. RANKIN. Is the gentleman going to vote with us in our effort to secure reasonably low light and power rates throughout the United States?

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Yes. However, I am not in favor of the Government going into the electric power business. If we are going into that business in order to furnish cheap electricity, we might as well go into the cotton-producing business and take over the plantations in the gentleman's State so that we could have cheap cotton clothing to wash in the washing machines that are run by Governmentgenerated electricity down in the gentleman's district.

Mr. RANKIN. Oh, cotton and milk and other farm products are too cheap now. But I shall be glad to put into the RECORD a statement showing the overcharges the gentleman's people have to pay for electric light and power, and I will make it complete, show how much overcharge is paid in every locality, in order that the people of his district may understand what the gentleman and I are trying to do.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. The gentleman spoke about the use of cheap Government power in the T. V. A. district to run electric refrigerators. The electric bill is only a very small portion of the amount spent by an average family. It is much less than that spent for farm products which are kept cool in the refrigerator. If we are going to furnish cheap Government electricity, why not take over the gentleman's farms down South and have Government-subsidized operation of the farms, so as to have cheap food to put in the refrigerators?

Mr. RANKIN. The gentleman said he was not here when the holding-company bill was voted on. If he does not stop that kind of argument, he will not be here very much longer, because the people in Wisconsin are tired of being robbed by the Power Trust.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. RANKIN. I cannot yield further-

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. We will ask for some more time for you. I want to give the gentleman some information. The La Follettes made the Power Trust issue the biggest issue in the election in Wisconsin. The Republicans in Wisconsin came out against subsidized Government competition with private business, including the electric business. We gave the La Follette forces the biggest walloping they ever had in the history of our State, and we will do it again.

Mr. RANKIN. Oh, the gentleman from Wisconsin knows that the only reason they elected any Republicans up there was because of the sit-down strike and the low price of farm commodities; not because those people did not want cheap electricity. Now, listen to this. I have been hearing it passed around here that the Republican Party is on its way back. Yes; it is. It is on its way back, out, if it follows that kind of leadership. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. HAWKS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. I yield briefly.

Mr. HAWKS. I would like to ask the gentleman a ques-The gentleman said that farm products were cheap enough now. The present administration has been more successful in making cheap farm prices than cheap electric

Mr. RANKIN. Now, the gentleman has been here for 3 months. I wonder what his program is for remedying the situation? [Laughter and applause.] That is the trouble. You come here elected against the sit-down strike, which the Supreme Court has held invalid, and which ought to have been outlawed a long time ago, but now your issue is gone on which you were elected. [Laughter.]

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. We did not have a sit-down strike issue in our State at all. The Government in the electric business was the biggest issue. The record shows it. If you will come to my office I will show you La Follette's campaign literature on that subject.

Mr. RANKIN. I will not know where to find the gentleman's office after the next election if he does not change his position on this question. [Laughter.]

The money lost by investors in this utility system has been enormous.

Let me say to the gentleman from Wisconsin and you gentlemen from Michigan, also, you live right across the line from Ontario. I will put in the RECORD at this point the overcharges for your States. The people of Michigan are overcharged $46,590,901 a year, according to the Ontario rates, and the people of Wisconsin are overcharged $25,-323,124 a year.

If the people of your States will stand for those overcharges and stand for your coming down here and opposing the only program that has ever been offered to relieve them of these overcharges, then they need not kick about other minor inconveniences to which they may be subjected.

INVESTORS' LOSSES

But, as I started to say, the money lost by investors in this utility system has been enormous. The report recently submitted to Congress by the S. E. C. shows only a portion of this loss. A typical instance is the case of the Niagara Hudson Power Co. The public were sold common stock of this company at $25 a share. This was later called in and one share issued for four held. On February 2, 1929, these shares were listed upon the New York Curb at $8.75. Through investments in this worthless stock many have lost their life's savings and are now upon relief.

This utility system, which carries extensive advertising in newspapers, has been quite immune from exposure of its methods and practices. It has apparently great influence in the various phases of official life.

FEDERAL CONTROL

What has been said is probably mild, compared with what a congressional investigation would disclose. It is not a matter for State regulation.

It is not a matter of State regulation. The State of Michigan is just as helpless as a new-born babe, even if its present administration were opposed to the present practices of the power interests in that State. The State of Wisconsin is helpless, just as we found the States of Mississippi and Tennessee helpless.

No consumer or body of consumers is financially able even if the Public Service Commission of New York State had jurisdiction to carry on a proceeding against such a powerful monopoly. In fact, it has grown too large for the State of New York to bring it to task. The waters of the Niagara River, the Great Lakes, and the St. Lawrence River are Federal waters and are under the jurisdiction of the United States. The water, which this utility system is using under license of the Federal Power Commission, is controlled by the Boundary Waters Treaty between the United States and the Dominion of Canada. The Federal Power Commission is apparently the only body with control over this utility system, and this Commission is obviously not equipped to fully regulate this system. Sufficient has been shown to demonstrate the necessity of Federal action to cancel the license to this utility, to take over this system and distribute electricity in the interest of the public welfare.

CONSUMER PIRACY

A comparison of retail electric rates in effect in the territory of New York State served by the Niagara-Hudson system and similar communities in the Province of Ontario show outstanding differences. The most satisfactory method of presenting rate comparisons is by means of typical net monthly bills. The Federal Power Commission has calculated and published such information. I have studied this voluminous billing data and have set up a comparison between the Ontario Hydro, the communities served by the Niagara-Hudson, and the private utilities of the United States. I have been able to summarize this information into tabulations which will give an accurate picture of the difference in rates between the composite average of Ontario. Niagara-Hudson, and National United States private power rates. I present this illuminating summarized composite information in tables I and II. I trust all of my colleagues will study these tables in order to see how the electric consumers in the Niagara-Hudson territory and throughout the State of New York are overcharged. These tables cover residential, store-light, and store-power billings. The Ontario Hydro pays no taxes, although the Hydro renders certain municipal services. Therefore, in table II, I have reduced the comparison to a tax-equivalent base—a method which places the comparison on a fair and equitable foundation. From the presentation it can be fairly stated that the residential consumer in the Niagara-Hudson territory and throughout the State of New York is overcharged, on the average, around 100 percent, and the average of the United States around 115 percent to 120 percent-more than double. The numerous small-store owner in New York is similarly overcharged, 90 percent to 100 percent, and in the United States as a whole 105 percent to 115 percent for light and 110 percent to 125 percent for power.

I would like to have the Power Trust attempt to answer this presentation. This huge combination is openly plundering the American people through exorbitant overcharges.

INDUSTRIAL RATES

The Niagara-Hudson has put out information from time to time on an over-all unit basis, attempting to show lower average unit rates than the Ontario Hydro. Such misinformation has been quoted on this floor and placed in the Congressional Record. To completely demonstrate the fallacy of such a presentation, it is advisable to summarize wholesale industrial billings. By a process similar to tables I and II, I present the overcharges in billings for industrial power, compared to the Ontario Hydro.

TABLE III .- Percent overcharge in industrial power monthly bills

	150 kilo-	300 kilo-	1,000 kilowatt-hours	watt-hours	watt-hours

Average Niagara-Hudson	Percent 42.6 80.5	Percent 32.6 61.4	Percent 19.5 40.5

Here again the allegations of the Power Trust is exploded. There are some 20 to 25 monopolistic bulk consumers at the Falls—like the Aluminum Co.—which purchase large quantities of current under exclusive contracts, at average discriminatory rates, ranging from 1½ to about 2½ mills per kilowatt-hour, while the same system sells bulk power to other large industries at prices ranging from about 6 to 10 mills per kilowatt-hour. This discriminatory power has been used to shade downward the presentations of the Niagara-Hudson combination. The public cannot and should not accept these presentations at face value.

THE TWO NIAGARAS

The effective electric rates in the communities of Niagara Falls, N. Y., and Ontario furnish a vivid comparison. With generating conditions ideally the same, the American consumer pays practically double the bill of his Canadian neighbor for a given quantity of electricity. I present in table IV the overcharges in billings on the American side compared with the Canadian side of the Niagara River for the different classes of service under the standard typical bill arrangement.

TABLE IV.—Percent overcharge on bill comparisons, Niagara Falls, Ontario, and Niagara Falls, N. Y.

[Note.—New York bills higher than Canadian bills by following percents.]

THE ANSWER

A question naturally is presented. Will such conditions be allowed to continue under Federal sanction? Will the people of New York be robbed perpetually through the private use of a resource that belongs to them?

I present a solution of this problem through the introduction of a bill creating the Niagara River Authority. This bill is remedial, and is based on the constitutional provision that the control of navigable waters rests with Congress [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. Faddis). Under previous special order of the House the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Patrick] has been allotted 20 minutes. Is that satisfactory to the gentleman from Alabama?

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I will ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under previous special order of the House, the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Patrick] is recognized for 20 minutes.

POLITICAL PARTIES IN AMERICA

Mr. PATRICK. Mr. Speaker, ladies, and gentlemen, the purpose of my getting up here this afternoon is just a little different from any other for which I have recently arisen. Do you know, there is sort of a build-up running around here? It is interesting. It springs from the fact that our good friends on the left, the Republicans, at the mid-term election, somehow breathed a little better air than they thought they would, and the draft was so surprisingly sweet that they have been kicking their heels up a little too high. [Laughter.]

It makes me think of an apple tree that blossoms out in the late fall—sometimes that happens. That apple tree thinks it is going to have a bunch of apples, but the blooms came too late. And so it is to that little feature of political life in America that I want to address myself here for a minute. I talked on this subject a few days ago a little while, but I did not get all I had to say out of my system. I enjoyed getting off what I did, though.

Now, you know, we have been running 150 years under the Constitution here. That is a pretty good while, as nations go. When we compare it with the turn-over of nations we find that, with the exception of Japan, we are probably the oldest Nation in the world today—that is, of the major nations. The changes in government form have been so absolute.

Why is that? Because we decided that folks could be folks, that here there was to be no lord, or duke, or earl; that people were people and that the gospel Robert Burns announced, that "a man's a man for a' that," is sky high, world-wide, sea-deep, lifelong, and fundamental enough to establish the business of peoples upon; and so we have one hundred and thirty millions getting along pretty well under that logic today. We have held out. A few little amendments have come along, but fundamentally, integrally-I suppose integrally is a good word; integral is-we have held out pretty faithfully on that same old original idea: No prince, no duke-we have a few overlords, we have to fight them constantly, consistently, and religiously because we never know-you know the big ones are always trying to eat up the little ones. And we had one thing that is a pretty hard proposition to get at, especially as long as Delaware and a few other States issue a corporate power that is greater than the power of States that issue them, and can say to a corporation: "Now, I breathe into your nostrils the breath of life and you become an individual that will never die, you have rights that nobody else has. You are a fictitious character, but one that will never die." That is an abuse I talked about a while ago and is something we have got to fight out.

Mr. HOFFMAN. May I ask a question?

Mr. PATRICK. Yes; but do not bust in right here; wait a little bit.

Mr. HOFFMAN. The gentleman was speaking about the corporations of Delaware.

Mr. PATRICK. I have not yielded. I hope the gentleman will wait a little while. Do not be restless. The gentleman is as nervous as an old maid when the right man finally comes along.

The point is that we established here a two-party system. The Democrats started out as one of those two. They have had to have a lot of fights. We have had the Federalists, the Whigs, the Constitutional Unionists, the Anti-Masons, the Republicans, the Populists, the Progressives, the Farmer-Laborites; but the Democrats have had to fight them all. It has been the Democrats on one side and all or some of the others on the other side; the Democratic Party founded by Thomas Jefferson is just as strong and powerful and faithful to its ideals today as it was when he founded it, but the Republicans just jumped up about the time this Nation decided to get rid of slavery.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATRICK. Not just now, if the gentleman please. I would like to yield to the gentleman who has thrown less light on more subjects than any man in Congress since I have been here. I would like to yield to the gentleman, because I know he has a brilliant brain child that he wants to turn loose here in our midst. He has been trying to give birth to it ever since he got here.

Now, the point is that the Democratic Party has had to fight all of them through all these years, first one set and then the other. You know wolves hunt in packs, but the lion hunts alone. So it has been with the Democratic Party all these years. The word "republic" and the word "democracy" are very similar. The purposes and ideals of the Republicans are wholesome, just as good, perhaps, as are the ideals of the Democrats; but the greatest difference is in the way they work the thing out. The average Republican on this floor does not want to give any special interests a throat hold on the Nation. They did not intend to build up monopolies, but their lazy idea—laissez faire—the do-nothing method—the looking-for-prosperity-around-corners practice, saying that a chicken is going to hatch out in every pot, and a car is going to blossom forth in every garage if you just be good and keep the Republicans in office as each 4 years roll around. Well, things do not work out like that. That is the reason the good Mr. Coolidge—he just did not choose to run, he was so disgusted. We can look back now and see what the silent Mr. Coolidge saw; that he had a lot to be silent about. He had more to be silent about perhaps than any man that has ever been in the White House. The Democrats have to deliver what the Republican Party promises.

Mr. RUTHERFORD. I hope not.

Mr. PATRICK. The Republicans hope not because they want to let these promises be. The Republicans have had 13 Presidents in the White House and they have had only 2 men who were willing to go in there and slug it out—Abraham Lincoln and Theodore Roosevelt, the only real Executives they have had.

They are always going around "going to do something." The Republican program, as far as practice is concerned, is like the old man Huckaby Goss who had never been down to Jasper, Ala. He asked an old fellow standing around there, "Can you tell me the way to the post office?" The old fellow said, "You go this way two blocks, turn right and go two blocks; when you get there turn to the right and go two more blocks, then right two more blocks, and when you get there turn two more blocks to the right."

He said, "Well, that would bring me right back to where I am now." He said, "Yes. This is the post office right here." That is exactly the way the Republican program goes.

It is a bag of oats on the end of a wagon tongue, but the mule never gets to it. The plan is to promise everything, deliver nothing, and keep them guessing, but do it with a straight face.

Let us talk about leadership. Here is one of the strange things we have right here. This is not original with the Republicans, either. There are two things that the Republicans seem to be always anxious to do; that is, build up a gospel of hatred against the Executive who is in power. You will remember that theory started with the Whigs. There was hatred built up against Thomas Jefferson, then against Andrew Jackson, and under Republican rule against Woodrow Wilson, also Grover Cleveland, and now against Franklin Delano Roosevelt. They are building up a doctrine of hatred, but these were men who could take it. Those men represent good, representative types of Democratic leadership. Can the Republicans boast of such leadership?

The Republican Party has had 13 Presidents. Ohio State has presented Republican Presidents Hayes, McKinley, Taft, Harding, and Garfield—not an executive in the bunch. Good men; clean, wholesome men. But they were often found in the hands of selfish practitioners who would parcel out Government properties like ham sandwiches at a southern barbecue. All you have to do is think back and review what has gone on before.

Let us look at the things that have happened—the Teapot Dome, the veterans' scandal, the Elk Hills proposition, and all that sort of thing, coming under one administration. Now, President Harding did not want that to happen, but he was just rocking along. Do you think that Ohio, as fine a State as it is, wanted to produce that kind of leadership? No. Neither did General Grant want the things that produced scandals of his administration.

Both the Democratic and Republican Parties should get away from this old habit of nominating a point in geography instead of a man as party standard bearer. That is as true of one party as another. We want a man who can deliver the goods, a man who is an executive from his heart, who has a program, and a definite thing to do. He should be the man to be the standard bearer, whether he comes from Arkansas, Alabama, Oregon, Ohio, New York, or anywhere else. People do not go out to elect a State but to elect an official.

The States of special choice are today left in the same old state of uncertainty. Look at the replacements that have come in here. Those represent the very places of uncertainty now. Here is what the Republicans are puffed up over by the changes in Congress.

They have 64 replacements, as far as Democrats and Republicans are concerned, 12 from Ohio, 12 from Pennsylvania, 6 from Indiana, 4 each from Illinois, Connecticut, California, and New Jersey; 3 each from Iowa, Michigan, and Wisconsin; 2 each from Rhode Island and New York—only 2 changes in New York—1 each from Idaho, South Dakota, West Virginia, Wyoming, and Montana. Those are 17 States and 30 changes come from only 3 States—Ohio, Pennsylvania, and Indiana. There is where the changes have come from. The others are slight. In the Senate we only have 4 changes—Connecticut, Kansas, New Hampshire, and Ohio—with the exception of Oregon and South Dakota that had 2 Senators elected to succeed appointments.

How does this do-nothingness work out on the floor, that unwillingness to get in and fight it out when something has to be done, something that means blazing a new trail? Enacting a new law. Something that has not been done before. And there is where courage shows. There is where men like Woodrow Wilson stand out. I wish I could give you a complete list of the things that he led or helped fight through, that were sabotaged by the succeeding President of the United States administration.

There was the case of President Grant and the disgraces that came in his day, and which still blacken the pages of history—the whisky ring, the United States safe-burglary case, the Sanborn and Jayne contract scandal, bribery of the Secretary of State, Secretary's resignation, and Indian post trade-off. Grant was an honest man himself. Even Members of Congress were found to have bought stock in the Pacific Railroad Co. which depended for its life on enactments by the Congress. Other scandals were revealed at that time.

The Democratic program is to get in and when something needs to be done, do something about it if it does hurt and scar. You have to take it.

Edmund Vance Cooke said:

Did you tackle that trouble that came your way
With a resolute heart and cheerful?
Or hide your face from the light of day
With a craven soul and fearful?
Oh, a trouble's a ton, or a trouble's an ounce,
Or a trouble is what you make it.
And it isn't the fact that you're hurt that counts,
But only how did you take it?

Now, can you take it? That is what we have to do. When we have to do something, have to blaze a trail, it takes courage—someone who can go in there and know he is going to get something done or die trying.

Mr. Sayit met Mr. Doit
Coming down the avenue.
Said Mr. Sayit to Mr. Doit,
"Most everything is wrong with you."
Said Mr. Doit to Mr. Sayit,
"I've made mistakes. That can't be hid.
I was tryin' to do the things
You said you'd do, but never did."

There is where we got our scars. There are the things we have tried so hard to correct—evils that have been building up through the years when they said, "There will be a rose garden on every hillside"; and we were held up at the cross-roads, poor and naked and out of work, right when nature was most propitious, right when success seemed crowning every effort, right when prosperity seemed riding the waves. They promised good days, but we hove up at the crossroads, with banks breaking and hearts breaking and business gone to pot. Then because we had the courage of the Democratic Party to step into the breach, to step in and break the jam in the river, risking our political life, they come up and say, "Everything you do is wrong."

Of course, mistakes are always made when blazing new trails. This inactivity, this kind of leadership that puts mediocre men at the helm—the Republicans have not been inclined to put their own true leaders in. They thought they had Roosevelt tabled.

They got him in as Vice President, but it unfortunately happened that that fine man, McKinley, got shot, and Roosevelt was stepped in. Seward was the man labeled even when Abraham Lincoln was elected, but he got stymied, deadlocked, and the unheard-of happened, and that poor, lanky thing that did not have a Chinaman's chance walked into the White House and delivered the goods. With those two Chief Executives, they have something to brag about. But they could not stand it. They made it so miserable for Theodore Roosevelt that he got out of the party. That is the way the Democrats got a crack at it then. But the thing we have now to do is to let the people know. Get away from this old "hate the leader" business, and get away from this idea that things will take care of themselves, because for some reason life was not builded that way; life was not cut by that sort of pattern.

How does all this work out on the floor here? Notice their inability to shoulder responsibility. They holler at the Democrats right here on this floor and say, "You are 'rubber stamps," because we have a program. We have bills introduced that are a means to remedy a wrong, to correct an error, to make it better for folks to live, to give us a little uplift, to get a little more economic security, to make it better for human beings to live in the land—the very things the Republicans spent 20 years promising. When you start to do it the Republicans get up here and vote as a unit against it. They do not bring you something in place of it. They do not tell you what to do. They just say, "Everything is wrong with you," and vote in a unit against it. It is so easy to do so. They say, "We are in sympathy with what you want to do: we are in absolute sympathy with the purpose and aims of what the Democratic Party wants to do; but we just cannot stand it, while that man is in the White House, to see it done."

That is often it, and that is often all there is to it. If they were sincere, it seems to me-I do not mean to slap at them and say they are not sincere-I mean if they were not so inactive, so willing to be supine and let nature take its course, they would be themselves offering a program. They would be introducing and helping to fight through measures that need to be fought through Congress and helping to pass laws. It is amazing how many things they fought bitterly, but now since they have commenced to bear fruit, since they commence to blossom forth, since they have gotten to where they carry their own weight and stand on their own feet, they will come on the floor and brazenly say, "We will not vote against that, we will not vote to repeal it today, but this new bill you are trying to get in will ruin us and wreck us and carry us into the maelstrom of some other great disaster." Lo, politics is a strange creature. [Applause.]

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 5 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Patrick] and the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. Rankin] have two traits in common. Whenever they are asked a question they answer with some wisecrack, and immediately after concluding a speech they ordinarily leave the Chamber. They do not wait for a reply to what they have to say.

Mr. PATRICK. Mr. Speaker, I will stick it out with the gentleman this time, I will assure him.

Mr. HOFFMAN. That certainly is a compliment.

The gentleman's argument or statement, or whatever it was, was quite illogical. In the first place, the gentleman said we were kicking all the time about everything the new dealers did, and before the gentleman concluded he said that we were too supine to offer any suggestions at all. He complains when we offer suggestions which we think are constructive. Then he finds fault and alleges that we do not offer anything to remedy the situation. He damns us if we do and he damns us if we do not. The gentleman said that when anything was to be done we had to ask you Democrats to do it.

I will admit that you told us that the deficit Mr. Hoover had of $5,000,000,000 was going to send us into bankruptcy. And what have you done? You have given us a deficit on the average of $3,000,000,000 a year since—an added deficit of over eighteen billion. Were we not going fast enough down the road to bankruptcy? You shoved us along ahead of you at high speed every year, until now you have reached the legal limit of indebtedness, until bankruptcy is no longer a theory; you have made it a fact; and you boast of your accomplishment.

Do something? Every Member in this House knows that the labor law you put on the book must be amended. The A. F. of L., which was the father of that law, which sponsored it, said in the papers yesterday and in a circular letter the day before that it must be amended. You do not even have the courage on your side to give us a hearing before the Committee on Labor, either in the Senate or before the Committee on Labor in the House. Now, why do you not do something?

You say we have not offered anything constructive. We put in a bill here, or I have, at least, which covers almost every single amendment the A. F. of L. had in mind and which covers other amendments proposed by the National Association of Manufacturers. Why not have the courage to give us the hearing which the A. F. of L., which business, which millions of taxpaying citizens are demanding?

Mr. PATRICK and Mr. WOOD rose.

Mr. HOFFMAN. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri. Mr. WOOD. Does the gentleman assume that the Labor Committee of the House is not going to have a hearing on those amendments?

Mr. HOFFMAN. I will say that although the gentleman holds a card, I think in the A. F. of L., up to this time you have not given any notice that you are going to give any hearing.

Mr. WOOD. Does the gentleman assume there are going to be no hearings?

Mr. HOFFMAN. We do not know.

Mr. WOOD. You do not know, but you are making statements that you do not know anything about here.

Mr. HOFFMAN. I say that up to this time—and Congress has been in session nearly 3 months and we all know that the country is demanding that the Wagner Act be amended—you have not given any indication that you are going to have any hearing. You are waiting for John L. Lewis to ruin your A. F. of L.

Mr. WOOD. You do not know what you are talking about

Mr. HOFFMAN. I do. The C. I. O. has been collecting money from the workers and turning a part of it over to the New Deal administration and the New Deal administration is "sicking" the Labor Board on the A. F. of L. and the majority has not had the courage to bring the proposed amendments out in the open and amend that law.

The A. F. of L. charges in substance, and it is becoming more and more a matter of common knowledge, that the administration is stalling; that, to aid the C. I. O., the so-called negotiations between the A. F. of L. and the C. I. O. are continued from time to time as an excuse for the failure to open the hearings on the amendment of the Wagner law.

As the administration aided the C. I. O. throughout the sit-down strike situation, so now it is aiding the C. I. O., denying the fair request of the A. F. of L. that hearings be held on the amendment of this law.

You talk about Teapot Dome. All right, we admit all that, and those men, or one of them, was sent to prison. What have you done about your marble deal? Nothing. What have you done with reference to the report coming from Kentucky that $300 was spent out of funds voted for relief for every single vote that was cast for a Democratic candidate? What have you done about all those dead men who are on the rolls down in Oklahoma—anything? Talk about doing something, what the majority does is to cover up the dirty work that has been done when relief money has been used to buy votes, and then charge us with fraud and corruption that occurred years ago.

If Republicans ever did anything of that kind, ever used money to influence elections, they used their own money. But the New Dealers have taken the money that was appropriated to buy food for the hungry, shelter for those who were exposed to the weather, food and clothing for those who were cold, and used it to influence elections. The new dealers have "played politics with human misery." They have diverted funds appropriated for a charitable purpose to a corrupt purpose. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. PATRICK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman ask unanimous consent for 1 additional minute?

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to talk for 1 min-

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

Mr. KEEFE. I object, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Sabath asked and was given permission to revise and extend his own remarks in the Record.

SENATE

TUESDAY, MARCH 28, 1939

The Chaplain, Rev. Z@Barney T. Phillips, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O gracious Father, of whose mercy it is that another day is added to our lives, hide not, we beseech Thee, Thy face from us, for in Thy light alone shall we see light. Grant to us in fuller measure the awareness of Thy presence, and harken to Thy children who confess their sins unto Thee, and, when Thou hearest, forgive.

For our temers, our insincerities, the foul desires, and fatal leanings of our souls we pray not for pardon only, but for cleansing. Absolve us from the things for which we never can forgive ourselves, those sad turned pages of our life which some chance stir of memory blows back again with shame; the hours beyond recall and the unheeded fading of bright ideals, that we may undertake once more the duties of the day with a conscience void of offense toward Thee and all mankind. We ask it in the name of Him who for our sins endured the cross, despising the shame, Jesus Christ our Lord.

The explanatory statement presented by Mr. LA FOLLETTE is as follows:

Senators Robert M. La Follette, Jr., and Elbert D. Thomas, of the subcommittee of the Senate Committee on Education and Labor, jointly introduced today a bill designed to eliminate certain "op-pressive labor practices." These practices were exposed during the committee's investigations of violations of civil libertles and the rights of labor. The bill prohibits employers from utilizing labor spies, strikebreakers, and strikebreaking agencies, and restricts the use of private guards and company police to company property. It also prohibits the possession or use of industrial munitions. The bill extends the provisions of the Walsh-Healey Act so as to cover employers guilty of the "oppressive labor practices."

The bill embodies, in a significant measure, the legislative recommendations contained in the committee's four reports on labor espionage, strikebreaking, private police systems, and industrial munitions. The committee, during the course of its investigation, found that the most persistent and significant violations of civil liberties occurred in the field of labor and arose principally from a labor-relations policy hostile to collective bargaining and the organization of unions. The committee's first report revealed and condemned the widespread use of labor spies by employers, and particularly the indefensible and highly profitable industrial espionage services supplied by commercial detective agencies. The second report disclosed the evils and incendiary nature of strikebreaking ervices in labor disputes and described commercialized strikebreaking and strike-guard agencies. The third report discussed the use of private industrial police as an instrument of opposition to collective bargaining and found that the activities of such private police in the field of labor relations resulted in bloodshed and brutality and the usurpation of public authority. The fourth report analyzed the use of industrial munitions and the accumulation of large private arsenals in anticipation of labor troubles. All of these subversive or violent practices were shown to spring from a common objective and to be closely related.

tallty and the usurpation of public authority. The fourth report analyzed the use of industrial munitions and the accumulation of large private arsenals in anticipation of labor troubles. All of these subversive or violent practices were shown to spring from a common objective and to be closely related.

"Oppressive labor practices" is the characterization given these activities by the bill. The aim of the bill is to prevent employers and others from engaging in them. The bill clearly permits employers to maintain at all times adequate protection for property and human life. Enforcement is through the Secretary of Labor, who is empowered to investigate and apply for injunctions against violations. The Department of Justice will have charge of prosecution. The proposed act purposely does not provide for any new Federal agency or administration. Use of the mails or instrumentalities of commerce is forbidden to violators.

In making public the draft of the bill, Senators La Follette and Thomas Jointly stated:

"This bill is several decades overdue. On complaints made and on the finding of past governmental investigations in the last 40 years, such a bill should have been introduced long ago. In several instances, as the studies and reports show, similar recommendations have been made, but nothing has been done. Now, after 2½ years of intensive investigation, affording some 18,000,000 words of testimony and exhibits, obtained during 98 days of public hearings, wherein 485 witnesses were heard, the subcommittee calls attention to its exhaustive record of studies in over twoscore industries, employers' associations, and communities, the testimony it took on over 116 strikes occurring from 1930 to 1937, and to the research, reports, and recommendations it has issued. The committee calls attention to another fact attesting the thoroughness of its inquiry. As a result directly or indirectly of interval plays and the information elicited in its hearings, the Bureau of Internal Revenue has proposed additional income-tax l exposed, although witnesses were time and time again asked to justify their action.

"The officials of a great motor concern, when forced to admit having hired labor detective agencies, asserted that they had just issued orders to discontinue such service. Officials of a great steel company declared that they had not used the weapons in their plant arsenals and had actually destroyed their machine guns. An official of a large radio manufacturing concern admitted that no check had been made of the bills of a strikebreaking agency furnishing 300 strike guards and billing their services at over $150,000, and concluded that if his concern should experience another strike he 'would do it different next time.' The representative of a large coal-mining institute, when questioned about the purchase of $17,000 worth of chloropicrin gas for use against 'bootleg miners' on mine property, declared the 'gas, after long consideration, had not been used.' Officials of another steel company told the committee they had discontinued espionage after the committee started investigating and had decided to prohibit their private policemen from acting off company property. In short, the committee encountered professions of reform rather than justification of the practices exposed. The nearest to defense of espionage and strike-breaking was the warning of an officer of an employers' association that regulation might result in 'bootleg' outfits getting the business and driving dastardly practices farther underground.

"As a result of the committee's exposures some industrialists have been persuaded to abandon certain oppressive practices, thereby saving themselves hundreds of thousands of dollars. For example, in the motor industry the committee's hearings resulted in the cancelation of hundreds of thousands of dollars. For example, in the motor industry the committee's hearings resulted in the cancelation of hundreds of thousands of dollars. The disposition of other employers to dispose of certain elements of their plant arsenals will or in anticipation of labor disputes.

"As the bill moves on to legislative consideration, therefore, we doubt that any person will undertake to justify labor espionage or commercialized strikebreaking, the use of private police for these purposes, and the use or possession of industrial munitions during or in anticipation of labor disputes.

"No bill could more directly aid industrial peace. In no way does the bill deprive the employer of the fullest protection of property. It does not touch his legitimate private protective equipment nor limit policing activities on his own premises. It does strike at aggressive private armies by whomsoever employed.

"While the investigation has apparently corrected some ills the committee emphasizes that investigation alone has long been proved insufficient. Legislation is needed to end the evils. The bill contains nothing that will cause concern to the great majority of businessmen, most of whom now conform to present enacted national nessmen, most of whom now conform to present enacted national policies. A powerful minority have, however, fostered the oppressive practices banned in this bill and have developed their use to the point of constituting a menace to civil liberty generally; hence the urgency for legislation."

The title of the bill is the "Oppressive Labor Practices Act of 1939." The purposes and policy of the bill are stated in the first two sections which contain findings of fact and definitions of terms. Section 3 outlines four oppressive labor practices against which the bill is directed. First, it is declared to be an oppressive labor practice to use labor spies.

The second oppressive labor practice is defined as the use of strikebreakers or strikebreaking agencies. Strikebreakers are defined as persons who are paid a bonus to replace regular employees during a strike or lock-out.

during a strike or lock-out.

The third oppressive labor practice is defined as the employment of private guards armed with guns or other dangerous weapons off company property except where necessary for protection against theft of goods or money in transit. The employment of men who have been convicted of crimes of violence to act as private guards during a labor dispute is likewise declared to be an oppressive labor practice. The Federal Bureau of Investigation of the Department of Justice is directed to cooperate with employers by searching their files for criminal records of applicants for employment as private guards during labor disputes.

The fourth oppressive labor practice is defined to be the use or possession of industrial munitions in or about a place of employment or during a labor dispute. Industrial munitions are defined as machine guns, sawed-off shotguns, and long-range tear-gas and sickening-gas missiles.

Sections 4 and 5 of the bill list the prohibited acts. Two classes

Sections 4 and 5 of the bill list the prohibited acts. Sections 4 and 5 of the bill list the prohibited acts. Two classes of persons are brought within the prohibitions of the bill—those whose directly engage in oppressive labor practices and those who assist in the commission of oppressive labor practices by furnishing goods or services. There are also two separate types of offenses listed. It is declared to be a crime to engage in an oppressive labor practice which affects commerce or to use the instrumentalities of the mails or of commerce for the purpose of engaging in an oppressive labor practice. In addition, the principle of the Wage and Hour Act is applied so as to make it criminal for an employer who engages in oppressive labor practices to ship his goods into interstate commerce. into interstate commerce.

Section 6 of the bill fixes maximum penalties of a fine of $10,000 or imprisonment of 6 months for violations of the criminal provi-

Section 8 authorizes the enforcement of the criminal provisions of the act by the Attorney General. Injunctive remedies are also provided for to restrain violations of the act. The injunctive power can be invoked only by the Secretary of Labor, who is given the necessary investigatory powers to exercise this authority. A separate title of the bill amends the Walsh-Healey Act and requires persons who make contracts with or secure loans from the United States to stipulate that they will not, during the pendency of the contracts or loans, engage in any oppressive labor practice.

UNEMPLOYMENT IN GERMANY

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, there has been considerable talk of late as to the unemployment situation in Germany. A few days ago I addressed a communication to the Department of Labor asking for information on the subject. I have received a letter from Mr. Arthur G. Stevens, Jr., Assistant to the Commissioner, enclosing some information. I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD the letter from Mr. Stevens and also the statement prepared by Mr. H. S. Hanna, chief editor, Bureau of Labor Statistics.

There being no objection, the letter and statement were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

> UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF LABOR, BUREAU OF LABOR STATISTICS, Washington, March 7, 1939.

Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. LOGAN: In the absence of Mr. Lubin, who is out of the city on official business, I wish to acknowledge receipt of your letter of March 2, requesting information regarding unemployment in Germany.

In order to give you a picture of the employment problem in Germany as compared with the United States, Hugh S. Hanna, chief editor of the Bureau of Labor Statistics, has prepared for you the attached memorandum. I hope you will find that it contains the information in which you are interested.

If you should want material on points not covered in this memorandum, we should be delighted to have you call upon us.

Very sincerely,

ARTHUR G. STEVENS, Jr., Assistant to the Commissioner.

REPLY TO STATEMENT THAT GERMANY HAS NO UNEMPLOYMENT PROBLEM (By H. S. Hanna, Chief Editor, Bureau of Labor Statistics)

In the continuing discussions of fascism versus democracy, one constantly repeated statement undoubtedly impresses, and at times disturbs, the average American. The statement is that the Fascist governments have abolished unemployment. In Germany, for example, it is said that at the end of the year only about a half million persons were registered as unemployed, whereas, in the United States, unofficial reports indicate that there were some 9,000,000 unemployed, with a large proportion of these on Federal relief work.

The figures cited give an entirely erroneous impression of the relative situation regarding employment conditions in the two countries.

In the first place the figures themselves are not comparable. The American practice is to count as employed only those with jobs in private industry or in regular Government service. As a The American practice is to count as employed only those with jobs in private industry or in regular Government service. As a result the nearly 4,000,000 persons engaged in work relief projects, including the C. C. C., are classed as unemployed, whereas the German practice is to include as employed all persons in the labor camps and other relief projects. Mcreover, the German figure cited refers only to persons voluntarily registered as unemployed at the state offices, and large numbers of persons, such as the whole "non-Aryan" population and political offenders in concentration camps, are not eligible for registration. Also it is a generally accepted fact, confirmed by authoritative observers, that many German workers, especially those who expect to be only temporarily out of work, as is the case with the building tradesmen in bad weather, do not register themselves as unemployed for fear that they will thereupon be drafted into the forced labor undertakings of the state. That there is a large amount of unregistered unemployment is evident from the fact that, according to official German statistics, there was a decrease of 969,000 (from 20,236,000 to 19,267,000) in the number of employed persons in Germany between November and December 1938, while, during the same period, the number registering as unemployed at the state offices increased from 152,430 to 455,656, or by barely 300,000.

If, therefore, the German practice of counting relief workers as employed were followed in this country, the estimate of total unemployment here would be approximately 5,000,000. On the other hand, if the American practice of estimating as unemployed all employable persons who are not working at a given date were followed in Germany, then the number of persons listed as unemployed in Germany would be very considerably increased—possibly to one and one-half or two million. This would mean that, as the

ployed in Germany would be very considerably increased—possibly to one and one-half or two million. This would mean that, as the population of Germany is only about one-half that of the United States, the disparity between the two countries in the burden of unemployment would be very much less than appears from a superficial acceptance of the published statistics.

But the fallacy of the argument that the German employment situation is far better than ours is still more evident when comparison is made on the basis of the relative proportion of the people productively employed. In the United States, with the exception of a military establishment so small as to be negligible as an employer of otherwise idle labor, all employed persons are engaged in productive labor; that is to say, they are producing goods and services of social value. Even the W. P. A. projects, whatever the merits of the criticisms made as to their relative efficiency, do produce vast quantities of useful things—roads, bridges, streets, sewers, forestation, and education. In contrast, a very large proportion of the employed workers in Germany are engaged in the maintenance of a mammoth military establishment, work which is essentially unproductive in the economic sense of the term. The persons so engaged include not only the military forces proper but those necessary to feed, clothe, and otherwise maintain such forces, as well as those engaged in the making and maintenance of fortifications, ships, tanks, airplanes, and other types of military equipment and supplies. All of them are supported out of the public funds and, from the standpoint of the economic status of the population, are just as much on relief as if they were receiving money doles for their support.

There is no way of ascertaining with any exactness the number of persons thus employed in the German military establishment.

There is no way of ascertaining with any exactness the number of persons thus employed in the German military establishment, including those, equally unproductive, who are employed by the soincluding those, equally unproductive, who are employed by the so-called party organizations. But a fairly good estimate may be made from certain known facts. Thus, according to authoritative statistics, Germany, on November 1, 1938, reported an active army of 750,000 men, trained reserves of 3,150,000 men, and an air force of 226,000, making a total land and air force of 4,126,000, or 5.2 percent of the population. On the basis of such active service as is required of the reserves, as indicated by the mobilizations which have occurred, and adding those employed in the Navy, it is probably conservative to say that Germany must have at least 2,000,000 persons constantly on active military duty. If there is added to this figure the number of civilian workers engaged in the making of military supplies, estimated as being at least 1,000,000, and if there is added still further as a minimum estimate another million machinists and mechanicians necessary for the another million machinists and mechanicians necessary for the efficient operation of a modern mechanized army of the size of Germany's, the total approaches 4,000,000 persons. This figure efficient operation of a modern mechanized army of the size of Germany's, the total approaches 4,000,000 persons. This figure does not provide for the large number of workers required to feed and otherwise maintain the armed forces. This would certainly take the labor of another one and one-half million persons, especially as the military is notoriously better fed and better maintained generally than is the civilian working population.

In grand total, therefore, there must be at least five and one-half million persons supported by the German military establishment in addition to a large but unknown number of secret police, guards, and other functionaries associated with the party government.

Looked at from this standpoint it is evident why German industry is so superficially active and why there may well be shortages of labor in certain particular specialized lines.

In any economic society the productive workers must support

In any economic society the productive workers must support those who are idle or unproductively employed. This means that in Germany, with a working population of some 20,000,000 per-in Germany, with a working population of some 20,000,000 persons, less than 75 percent and possibly less than 70 percent are productively employed and must support the unproductive activities of the remainder, who for the most part, represent the physical cream of the population. In the United States, in spite of the large number of the unemployed, the proportion of the population productively employed is much larger than in Germany.

The accuracy of these estimates is substantiated by the current tax situation in Germany. According to a dispatch in the New York Times of February 25, from its Berlin representative, taxes collected in Germany for the fiscal year beginning March 30, 1938, will be equal to 38 percent of the national income, as compared with 18 percent of national income collected in Federal, State, and local taxes in the United States in 1937, and with 19.6 percent in Great Britain. Great Britain

CONCLUSIONS

1. The improvement in employment conditions and general industrial activity, which has taken place in Germany in the past few years, has been due to the huge expenditures made for the military establishment of that country. These expenditures have given employment, directly and indirectly, to millions of persons. There is not the slightest indication that this improvement is in any way due to a better economic organization or to superior political policies.

2. Because of the many millions of German workers engaged in nonproductive military activities, the proportion of the population productively employed is much smaller in Germany than in the United States.

United States.

3. Regarded as a method of relieving unemployment, the German program is extremely costly. It is far more costly per individual given work than the American policy of stimulating construction and financing work-relief projects—partly because the total cost of supporting soldiers is greater than the cost of supporting civilian workers, and partly because under the American system, the civilian worker constitutes a net addition to the economic and social life of the country for the money paid him.

Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. BYRNES. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the report.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the report.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may we have an explanation of the report?

Mr. BYRNES. It is a complete report, signed by all the Senate conferees, and, I think, by all House conferees, with the exception of one. If the Senator desires me to state the adjustment which has been reached of the differences between the two Houses, I shall be glad to do so.

The amendment which we have called the O'Mahoney amendment, which provided that the President should not have power to abolish functions, remains in the bill with some clarifying provisions.

The Senate amendment as to the word "agencies" and its definition remains in the bill.

In fact, the only amendment of any importance that I can recall as to which the Senate receded was the amendment as to the time of debate, the conference report agreeing upon 1 hour's debate upon a motion to discharge the committee, and 10 hours' debate upon the resolution when the committee is discharged, or if the resolution is reported by the committee without a motion to discharge.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BYRNES. Yes.

Mr. VANDENBERG. What happened to the particular exemptions which the Senate added?

Mr. BYRNES. The exemptions in the bill as it passed the Senate are retained in the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The report was agreed to.

SALE OF COTTON ABROAD BELOW COST-ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, Senate Resolution 107, submitted by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. George], occupies practically the status of being the unfinished business.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Let the Chair state that in spirit it does, but not as a matter of parliamentary procedure.

Mr. BARKLEY. That is true.

I have conferred with the Senator from Georgia; and in view of the imminent action of the House on the agricultural appropriation bill, which contains items involving the cotton situation, and in view of the fact that the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. Smith] has suggested, and it has been agreed and understood, that the bill from his committee, which is on the calendar, will go over awaiting action on the part of the House on the agricultural appropriation bill, which may have some bearing upon the legislation which is necessary or advisable, the Senator from Georgia has agreed that his resolution may preserve its present status and go over without prejudice.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator mean to say that it shall be the pending business and go over without prejudice?

Mr. BARKLEY. That is correct.

The VICE PRESIDENT, Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The consideration of bills on the calendar, under rule VIII,

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, only three or four reports of committees have been made since the last call of the calendar. I ask unanimous consent that the call of the calendar be dispensed with.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

ACQUISITION OF STOCKS OF STRATEGIC MILITARY MATERIALS, ETC.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of calendar No. 125, Senate bill 572, to provide for the common defense by acquiring stocks of strategic and critical raw materials, concentrates, and alloys essential to the needs of industry for the manufacture of supplies for the armed forces and the civilian population in time of a national emergency, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Utah.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, what is the number of the bill?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill is Senate bill 572. It is

No. 125 at the bottom of page 4 of the calendar.

The question is on the motion of the Senator from Utah that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill designated by him.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with amendments.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will read the bill.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read the bill.

The first amendment of the Committee on Military Affairs was, in section 1, page 1, line 6, after the word "country", to insert "for common defense"; on page 2, line 1, after the word "materials", to strike out "concentrates, and alloys" and insert "to encourage the further development of mines and deposits of these materials in the United States"; and in line 6, after the word "these", to strike out "commodities" and insert "materials", so as to make the section read:

Be tt enacted, etc., That the natural resources of the United States in certain strategic and critical materials being deficient or insufficiently developed to supply the industrial, military, and naval needs of the country for common defense, it is the policy of Congress and the purpose and intent of this act to provide for the acquisition of stocks of these materials, to encourage the further development of mines and deposits of these materials in the United States, and to decrease and prevent wherever possible a dangerous and costly dependence of the United States upon foreign nations for supplies of these materials in times of national emergency.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 2, page 2, line 12, after the word "which", to strike out "raw materials, concentrates, and alloys" and insert "materials"; in line 14, after the word "such", to strike out "materials, concentrates, and alloys", and insert "materials"; and in line 17, after the word "the", to strike out "raw materials, concentrates, and alloys", and insert "materials"; so as to make the section read:

SEC. 2. To effectuate the policy set forth in section 1 hereof the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy acting jointly through the agency of the Army and Navy Munitions Board are hereby authorized and directed to determine which materials are strategic and critical under the provisions of this act and to determine the quality and quantities of such materials which shall be purchased within the amount of the appropriations authorized by this act. In determining the materials which are strategic and critical and the quality and quantities of same to be purchased the Secretaries of State, Treasury, Interior, and Commerce shall each designate representatives to cooperate with the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy in carrying out the provisions of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I desire to make a general inquiry of the Senator from Utah. May I ask what the attitude of the Departments is respecting this bill? Are the Departments in favor of the bill as it now stands on the calendar?

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Mr. President, the Departments which have considered this bill include the State Department, the War Department, the Navy Department, the Department of Commerce, and the Department of the Interior. The Departments all report favorably upon the bill. Most of the Departments stated in last year's reports that it was contrary to the President's Budget program, but this year the reports are different from that; and the report from the Treasury Department, which has lately come, states that there is no objection to consideration of the bill on the ground of its not being part of the President's Budget program.

I may say at this point that any objection to the bill on the ground of its being not in harmony with the budgetary program is hardly consistent, because the bill does not provide for expenditures in the ordinary sense. The bill merely provides for the purchase of stock piles, so that the Government will at all times, especially in time of emergency, have probably even a greater value in its stock and in its ownership than the purchase price. So from the standpoint of the Budget it is really and truly not a budgetary matter. The bill does provide, however, that as much as $25,000,000 of these materials may be purchased the first year, $25,000,000 the second year, $25,000,000 the third year, and $25,000,000 the fourth year.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator further yield?

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. I shall be glad to do so.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Am I mistaken in my recollection that the President's budgetary program at this point sought to limit this figure to $10,000,000 in each of the years?

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. A letter went to the House of Representatives suggesting that the first year the limitation be put at $10,000,000. I have assumed that the bill will go to conference, and that the proper adjustment in regard to the expenditure the first year can be made there; and it is not a point of vital concern to us here because of that fact.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Does the Senator mean that the letter to the House authorities was from the President?

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. I do not know. All I know is what I have read in the press; but I think the House committee, in reporting the bill, left the total sum of $100,000,000, but the distribution over the years has been changed.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Except as the Senate made a change at this point, would the $25,000,000 authorization for the first year be in conference?

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. There would surely be a difference, so far as that is concerned, if the House bill carried a $10,000,000 appropriation and our bill carried a $25,000,000 appropriation for the first year. There would be a difference.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Suppose the House bill did not carry the figure of $10,000,000, but merely carried the total of $100,000,000, and we passed the bill with an appropriation of $25,000,000 the first year: Would the $25,000,000 be subject to reduction to $10,000,000 in conference under those circumstances?

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. I should think not, unless there was some provision, such as has been suggested, that only $10,000,000 should be spent the first year. That, of course, depends upon the provisions of the House bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will continue the reading of the bill.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment was, in section 3, page 3, line 1, after the word "above", to strike out "commodities" and insert "materials"; in line 5, after the word "department," to insert "from the funds authorized in section 6 of this act"; in line 6. after the word "such." to strike out "materials, concentrates, and alloys from the funds made available by the provisions of this act and" and insert "materials"; in line 11, after the word "Navy", to insert "and to provide for the storage and maintenance and, where necessary to prevent deterioration, for the rotation of such materials. complish such rotation, the Secretary of the Treasury, with the approval of the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy, is authorized to replace acquired stocks of any such material subject to deterioration by equivalent quantities of the same material in such manner as he deems will best serve the purposes of this act. The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to pay the expenses necessary to accomplish such rotation out of the funds authorized in section 6 of this act. The Secretary shall include in his annual report to Congress a detailed statement of expenditures made under this section and the method of rotation employed"; and on page 4, line 1, after the word "reservations", to strike out "in" and insert "or in other", so as to make the section read:

SEC. 3. The Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy, when they deem such action appropriate because the domestic supply of any of the above materials is insufficient to meet the industrial, military, and naval needs of the country, shall direct the Secretary of the Treasury through the medium of the Procurement Division of his Department, from the funds authorized in section 6 of this act, to make purchases of such materials in accordance with specifications prepared by the Procurement Division of the Treasury Department and approved by the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy, and to provide for the storage and maintenance and, where necessary to prevent deterioration, for the rotation of such materials. To accomplish such rotation the Secretary of the Treasury, with the approval of the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy, is authorized to replace acquired stocks of any such material subject to deterioration by equivalent quantities of the same material in such manner as he deems will best serve the purposes of this act. The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to pay the expenses necessary to accomplish such rotation out of the funds authorized in section 6 of this act. The Secretary shall include in his annual report to Congress a detailed statement of expenditures made under this section and the method of rotation employed. The commodities so purchased shall be stored by the Procurement Division of the Treasury Department on military and naval reservations or in other locations approved by the Secretary of War and the Secretary of War

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I should like to make an inquiry of the Senator from Utah. Is it not true that many of these strategic materials come from countries which owe debts to the United States?

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. I shall have to ask the Senator to name one. I should think that statement might be true, except for the word "many." I do not think the statement including the word "many" would hold.

Mr. LODGE. We know that manganese comes from Austria, for example; and we know that there are other materials that come from the British Empire, let us say. Does it not seem a fair proposition that the debts which are owed to the United States could in part, at least, be paid by furnishing to the United States these materials, which do not in any way compete with anything that is produced by American labor in this country?

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. I think that is an idea that the Government might very well consider, except in the respect that the debts which are owed to the United States are foreign government debts, while the materials which will be purchased undoubtedly will be purchased from private concerns

Mr. LODGE. But the foreign governments involved could purchase the materials from the private concerns, or could make some sort of arrangement which would stand as a credit to them on their debts to us, could they not?

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. I should hope that would be the case; and if it is possible, no one will be more happy to have such an adjustment made than will the Senator from Utah.

Mr. LODGE. I am glad to have that assurance.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will continue the reading of the bill.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment was, in section 4, on page 4, line 4, after the words "Sec. 4.", to strike out "Commodities" and insert "Materials"; in the same line, after the word "Act", to insert "except materials which must be rotated to prevent deterioration"; and in line 12, after the word "national", to strike out "welfare" and insert "defense", so as to make the section read:

Sec. 4. Materials acquired under this act, except materials which must be rotated to prevent deterioration, shall be used only upon the order of the President in time of war, or when he shall find that a national emergency exists with respect to national defense as a consequence of the threat of war, or when he shall find and shall issue a proclamation that a state of emergency exists arising out of deficiencies in the supply of these commodities of such a character as to have a seriously adverse effect on the national defense, by unemployment, the closing of manufacturing plants and interruption in the supply of semimanufactured or manufactured commodities.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like to make an inquiry of my colleague. Has it been deemed necessary to make this authorization for 4 years? It seems to me that if 1 year or 2 years were allowed within which to see just how beneficial the measure might be, perhaps the war clouds would have abated, and there would be no necessity of projecting the legislation so far into the future. I wonder if that point was considered by the committee.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Mr. President, the sum was arrived at as a result of a joint meeting of all of the departments affected. I will answer my colleague's question by saying that the bill not only provides for acquiring the materials which are deemed strategic at a given time, but it also provides for encouraging the production within the bounds of the United States of materials which we think are here but which up to the present time it has not been economic to produce; so that in the total appropriation the bill keeps in mind at all times two objectives: First, the acquirement of a stock that would be available in case of an emergency; second, the encouragement of attempts to develop these materials from our own products, so that the United States may at all times have an independent source of supply of these materials which are so much needed.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question at that point?

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. The Senator said that some of these materials are not at present produced economically in the United States.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. That is true.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Will the Senator identify some of the products which are deemed not to be economically produced in the United States?

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Manganese is probably the com-

Mr. VANDENBERG. Let me pursue the subject a little further. Am I to understand that when a commodity is deemed not to be economically produced in the United States the bill would contemplate the purchase of such commodity abroad?

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. That is true under this provision. There is this advantage to the American producers, in that it is a "buy American" plan for making purchases wholly in the United States. In addition there is the further advantage that 1 year is allowed prospective American producers within which to get their products ready and in shape so that the Government may feel that it can rely upon contracts it may make

There is a still further provision which favors the American producer, namely, that in cases where Americans happen to build plants and make initial expenditures, the bond may be waived in making the anticipated purchases. The American producers are encouraged by every phase of the bill.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Who would make the decision as to whether or not a commodity is economically produced in the

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. The decision would have to be made by the consultive board set up, which is to be composed of the Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Navy, the Secretary of the Interior, and the Secretary of State; and I think the Procurement Division of the Treasury Department would be associated with the board.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Can the Senator indicate any commodity besides manganese which might fall within the description we are discussing?

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Yes; there are many commodities which might come within that description. There are three classifications of strategic materials—those which are purely strategic, for which we are completely dependent on the outside: those which are deemed critical, which we need, some of which we produce but not sufficient; and those which we may need only rarely. In this classification there may be certain metals, for example, which would be strategic at one time and not at another.

There is, for example, nickel. Ordinarily nickel comes from Canada. It is deemed that we can produce nickel in the United States for our own use, but so long as there was no difficulty between the United States and Great Britain, or between the United States and Canada, the ordinary flow of nickel from Canada to the United States would not be interrupted, and technically, therefore, nickel would not be strategic material. So in the framing of the bill it was necessary to frame it in general terms, to provide for all sorts of emergencies and all types of conditions.

Some of these materials are perishable. Some we have to rotate in order that the Government may not have to keep them on hand and allow them to deteriorate. Rubber, for example, is quite essential, and it is essential that it be used at a given time, or it will deteriorate. So there is provision for revolving.

Mr. VANDENBERG. In the list of essential materials, for instance, sugar is found. Is it contemplated that sugar is to be produced and stored under the terms of the bill?

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. I think not. There was once an occasion when that was necessary. If the Senator will let his memory go back to the time of the last war, he will recall that sugar became a military necessity on the part of the United States.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Precisely. Then we come back to the question I originally asked the Senator. The Department of Agriculture for some strange reason takes the position that we do not domestically produce sugar on an economical basis, and that therefore we ought to let the whole world raise our sugar for us. If, under the terms of the bill, it should finally be concluded that we should buy sugar, I am wondering whether it would be purchased abroad rather than at home.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. I hope not. I cannot conceive of the gentlemen who will make up the proposed board doing anything of that sort.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I could conceive of it as readily as I could the decision of the Department of Agriculture regarding sugar generally.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I have been reading the bill hastily. I see no provision in it for a resale of any of the materials purchased under the contemplated law.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. It is in the rotating section.

Mr. PITTMAN. That applies only to goods which may deteriorate. For instance, if the Government should buy what it considered an adequate supply of manganese, and there should be developed in this country an adequate supply of manganese, the Government would not then need the supply it had purchased abroad, and it should be authorized to dispose of it and put the proceeds in the revolving fund, so as to reduce the cost to the Government.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. It was assumed by the committee that as the Government uses its supply it will receive credit for that use, and the money will be available for keeping the supply up to the point which the commission or board decide is the point at which it should remain.

Mr. PITTMAN. I understand the theory of the proposed act to be that there shall be surpluses of certain materials on hand in the event of war, as otherwise the Government might be cut off from the foreign supply. What is contemplated would always be a surplus. But the surplus would not be needed if we developed an adequate domestic supply, and the Government should then be allowed to dispose of the surplus, and put the money back into the fund.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. The committee thought the provisions under section 5 took care of that suggestion.

Mr. PITTMAN. That would not apply to manganese because manganese does not deteriorate.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. No; but the ordinary rules of the Government in regard to purchase and sale would prevail.

Mr. PITTMAN. The trouble is that the bill is limited to materials which deteriorate. Nickel does not deteriorate; manganese does not deteriorate; platinum does not deteriorate. The bill is so limited that the Government could not dispose of a surplus, although we developed an ample supply within the country. I think there should be a provision that when there is in this country an ample supply of any of these materials, a supply sufficient to meet any demand, the surplus should be either entirely wiped out or reduced. There is no provision for that.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. I thought there was, in the citation which has been mentioned, although I am not sufficiently familiar with it to answer the question directly. That problem has arisen, and we have put it up to the experts in just that way, and the answer has been that there would be authority in the proposed board to do the very thing the Senator suggests.

Mr. PITTMAN. I cannot find it in the bill. All the surplus of these metals would be accumulated in order to meet a war emergency. They could not be used except in a war emergency. Yet the bill provides for the attempted development of these metals in this country. If the citizens of this country should succeed in developing them here, and a surplus should become absolutely unnecessary, or half of it should not be needed, the money should not forever be impounded; but the President should be given authority to sell all or a part of the surpluses. There is no such provision in

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. I understood there was.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Utah yield for a question?

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. I am glad to yield.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. In response to an inquiry directed to the Senator from Utah by the Senator from Michigan I understood the Senator from Utah to reply that the Secretary of State was one of those who would determine whether or not a commodity could be economically produced within the United States.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. I think that statement is a little different from the idea contemplated by the scheme of the bill. The question which has to be decided, of course, is whether or not a commodity is strategic. Then the question as to whether it can be produced economically in our country would hinge upon whether the board, the group of certain officers, which is to have the authority to issue an order or to make the contract, would decide that it was economically feasible. The Secretary of State would be one of those.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Where in the bill is that group fixed? Mr. THOMAS of Utah. I think the Senator will find it in section 3:

The Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy when they deem such action appropriate because the domestic supply of any of the above materials is insufficient to meet the industrial—

That shows that it is a little broader than the mere military necessity-

To meet the industrial, military, and naval needs of the country shall direct the Secretary of the Treasury through the medium of the Procurement Division of his Department, from the funds author-ized in section 6 of this act, to make purchases of such materials in accordance with specifications prepared by the Procurement Division of the Treasury Department and approved by the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. The Secretary of State does not appear. Mr. THOMAS of Utah. The Secretary of State is one of the group for which provision is made in the measure, as the Senator will see if he reads on.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I have not read far enough to find the designation of the Secretary of State.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. It is in the measure.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President-

Mr. JOHNSON of California. I thought the Senator from Wyoming had concluded.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I have been trying to discover where in the bill any authority is vested in the Secretary of State to pass upon the need for the materials with which the bill deals and the question as to whether or not they can be economically produced in the United States, and I have been unable to find that language. It gives me a little bit of concern because of the disagreement some of us have had with the reciprocal trade agreement policy of the Department of State.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator will find the reference to the Secretary of State in section 2, page 2, in the following

In determining the materials which are strategic and critical and the quality and quantities of same to be purchased, the Secretaries of State, Treasury, Interior, and Commerce shall each designate representatives to cooperate with the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy in carrying out the provisions of this act.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Then, under that language, the authority of the Board there set up is limited to determining whether the materials are strategic and critical and the quality and quantities to be produced?

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. That is correct.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. And the Senator does not apprehend that there is any provision in the measure which would cause those who are concerned about the policy and effect of the reciprocal-trade agreements to give it closer attention than has been given?

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. I should think not. In all the hearings and all the conferences there was present a repre-sentative from the State Department. That representative has been in agreement with the other departments with regard to the bill.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Apparently the purpose of the bill is to encourage domestic production.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. That is one of the purposes.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. And it is provided that commodities or materials which are not capable of production in the United States economically may be secured abroad?

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. That is true.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Is it true that the Secretary of State is clothed with the power of determining when foreign materials rather than domestic materials should be purchased?

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. No; I think that would be a stretch of his authority.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I wanted to be sure that that would be a stretch of his authority.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. It would be very much so.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. I am glad to yield to the Senator from California.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. I make my apologies to the Senator, because I have been in committee up to this time, and just now arrived in the Senate Chamber, so I have not heard the presentation the Senator made with respect to this particular measure. How much money does it carry?

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. It carries $100,000,000, spread over 4 years.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Well, that is a mere "bag of shells." [Laughter.]

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, where are these stocks to be stored, and how?

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. They are to be stored under the direction of the Secretary of the Navy and under the direction of the Secretary of War on military or naval reservations, with the one exception that with respect to those materials which deteriorate there probably will have to be some kind of special arrangement made.

Mr. VANDENBERG. This is not another Kentucky concentration, is it?

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. I do not know what the Kentucky concentration is, but I do not think it is that.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Such as the concentration at Fort Knox.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. I yield.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I notice the provision that the definition of "strategic" and "critical" is to be made by the Board. Yet in the report there are set out certain things that are indicated to be strategic and critical. I notice that in the report steel is indicated as being neither critical nor strategic. It is my understanding that steel is one of the most important products to be used in times of war. It might not be critical, but on what theory is it contended that it is not strategic?

As the Senator knows, I have been trying to prevent the shipment from the country of scrap steel. My bill has been carefully laid away by the Senator from Utah, and very gently treated. I do not like the idea of having in the pending measure a declaration that steel is not a strategic product in time of war.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Steel at the present time is not a strategic material in the United States. It is an essential material in time of war. So far as scrap steel and scrap iron are concerned, both scrap steel and scrap iron may become. under given circumstances, strategic as well as necessary and as well as essential.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. What is the difference between "essential," "necessary," and "strategic"? When does a material reach the point that it becomes strategic?

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. All necessary materials are strategic. I take it.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Now we have that straight.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me? I think I can reply to that question.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. I shall be glad to yield.

Mr. MILLER. A strategic material is one which is necessary and essential, but for a portion of the supply of which in time of conflict we have to look to foreign countries. A critical material is likewise an essential material for the prosecution of war, but the supply of which can under ordinary circumstances be obtained in this country. That is the distinction between "critical" and "strategic."

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. I yield.

Mr. McNARY. The Senator doubtless classifies the bill as an emergency measure.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. I think not. I think it is quite otherwise.

Mr. McNARY. The Senator has limited its operation to 4 years. I assume from that that the general nature of the bill has to do with an emergency which the Senator is trying to meet. Would the Senator, then, be willing to limit the life of the measure to 2 years?

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. The 4-year provision comes up in relation to the accumulation of stock piles. It is contemplated that within 4 years sufficient surplus will be accumulated so that the purposes of the bill will have been met at the end of the 4-year period.

Mr. McNARY. What would prevent the purpose being attained at the end of 2 years?

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. If $50,000,000, which would be spent at the end of 2 years, were deemed sufficient to provide the stock piles for the emergency, then, of course, the end would be attained at the end of 2 years; but that was not deemed sufficient by the committee and by the experts.

Mr. McNARY. Did the committee consider the period of 2 years in contradistinction to the period of 4 years?

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Not in that way; but the committee did consider that the purpose of the bill is to enable the Government at all times to have on hand necessary strategic materials which it can, if necessary in emergency, make use of; and it was deemed that over a period of 4 years, if we spent $25,000,000 a year, our stock piles would be sufficient to take care of the situation probably for all time and make the United States from the standpoint of strategy independent of the outside world. Mr. McNARY. What amount of strategic material is produced in this country? Is it the purpose of the bill to place a fixation on importation of rare and strategic material or to encourage and foster the production of it in this country?

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. The purpose is dual, and the Senator has covered the dual purpose very well in his question. The first is to take care of our Army and Navy and see that we have a stock pile of material. The second is to encourage the production within the United States.

Mr. McNARY. Assuming that $100,000,000 is to be used for the purposes specified in the measure, what proportion of that would be expended in the production of domestic material?

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. There is no division made in that regard.

Mr. McNARY. No; but the Senator must have some idea along that line.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. I could get an idea, and so could anyone else, by quickly running over the list of the various materials.

Mr. McNARY. It is important from my standpoint to know whether the bill attempts to foster domestic development and production of the materials specified in the bill, categorically, or to bring them in as importations from foreign countries. Somewhere there is a line between those

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Take manganese, for example. That is a material of which some of the experts say we have plenty, but in order to satisfy the demand of both our Army and our Navy, production of our domestic material would have to be developed and increased, and much of the $25,-000,000 would be spent for that purpose. It is deemed advisable to expend a considerable amount in the development of that very necessary strategic material.

Mr. McNARY. Does the Senator assume that approximately $25,000,000 of the $100,000,000 would be expended to foster production in this country?

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. I assume that the first year a large proportion of the $25,000,000 would be expended for that purpose. Probably half of it would be so expended. However, that is merely an estimate.

Mr. WHEELER and Mr. TYDINGS addressed the Chair. The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Utah yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. I yield to the Senator from Mon-

Mr. WHEELER. With reference to manganese, as I understand, the purpose of the bill is to foster the development of manganese in this country, and also to create a stock pile in the event of war, so that we may have a supply of manganese. So far as the Government's losing anything on the operation is concerned, let me say that today the principal places in the United States where manganese can be produced for use in the hardening of steel are in Butte, Mont., and vicinity. At the present time many miners are on the W. P. A. They are being paid something like $56 a month. If the miners could be put to work in the mines producing manganese the Government would save at least $56 a month for each one taken off the W. P. A. and put to work. In my humble judgment, the Government would save money if miners were put to work producing manganese. Some of the producers of manganese have stated to me that they are perfectly willing to produce manganese practically at cost, plus 4, 5, or 6 percent upon the actual investment. In that way many persons would be taken off relief, and at the same time the Government would receive something for its money. I think such a plan would be a great blessing to the Government and to those on relief.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President-

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. I yield to the Senator from Mary-

Mr. TYDINGS. I should like to ask the Senator one or two questions for information. In the event of emergency, or in the event of war, is it contemplated that the Government would resell the materials to private concerns for at least the figure that was paid for them at the time the Government acquired them?

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. That is my understanding.

Mr. TYDINGS. How much of the money would be used to build factories, as distinguished from the purchase of the materials themselves?

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. I do not think any of it would be used for that purpose. Some of it might be used for building storehouses on military and naval reservations; but I doubt whether even that would be necessary.

Mr. TYDINGS. In other words, the Government would simply make a contract in a given case to buy so much of the material; and I take it, it is assumed that private interests would put up whatever plant was necessary to make the material. Is that correct?

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. That is correct.

Mr. TYDINGS. The Government would not go into the business of producing the material per se.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. I think that statement is correct.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. I shall be glad to yield.

Mr. BYRNES. Three or four years ago a bill was introduced in the House to encourage the development of certain materials. The bill was before the Committee on Mines and Mining. Later an appropriation of $5,000,000 was placed in the naval appropriation bill, in the general supply account, to encourage strategic material development. The Appropriations Committee took the position that such legislation should be brought to the floor of the Senate and House from the legislative committees, and that it should be determined in that way what should be done.

If business is to be developed by contracts with the War Department or the Navy Department for the purchase of materials at high prices, it is evident that at the conclusion of those contracts in 3 or 4 years some provision will have to be made to carry on the business. The original plan was that, on the strength of the contracts from the Government, loans were to be secured from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation in order to bring about the development of strategic materials, not only in Montana, but in Virginia, Georgia, and elsewhere throughout the country. I suppose that every Member of the Senate has received letters-I know I have received them-from various States urging that we provide for the purchase of strategic materials, the purpose being that if the contracts were made by the Army and Navy, loans could be secured from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation on the strength of the contracts. The Navy bill has carried such an appropriation from time to time. I think $5,000,000 was the highest amount ever appropriated in that way. I should like to know whether or not the committee has gone into all the past history of this matter, and has now reached the conclusion that instead of $5,000,000 we should authorize the expenditure of as much as $25,000,000 a year. Is that the conclusion of the committee?

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. That is the conclusion of the committee.

Mr. BYRNES. Did the committee hear from the Army and Navy representatives?

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. At every committee meeting representatives from the Navy Department, the War Department, and the Department of Commerce, and other departments have been present.

Mr. BYRNES. Have they officially stated their opinion as to what should be the extent of our purchases each year?

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. No.

Mr. BYRNES. I must say to the Senator that, as I recall, before the naval appropriations subcommittee last year the Navy expressed its entire satisfaction with an appropriation of $5,000,000 for the purchase of strategic materials for the Navy. I do not know about the Army, because I am not on that particular subcommittee.

However, I wish to call the attention of the Senator to the fact that from the information furnished to the Naval Appropriations Subcommittee with respect to the various materials set forth in the report, it appeared that in most instances the Navy could purchase such materials in the open market for 25 or 50 percent less than they could be purchased for in this country. Therefore, I am interested in the question asked of the Senator. If the appropriation proposed is, for the purpose of national defense, to purchase materials which are not produced in this country, and which we should have stored in the event of war, that is one proposal. If, on the other hand, it is proposed to bring about the development in this country of the various materials set forth in the report. I think we should give careful consideration to the question whether or not it is feasible to do so, and whether or not the Government can make contracts for the purchase of a sufficient amount of such materials over a period of years to warrant individuals going into the business. I do not think we should permit to occur such a situation that an individual would go into the business of developing at great expense raw materials, such as manganese, in Georgia, Virginia, and other States in the belief that the Government will each year provide an appropriation for the purchase of such materials. and then have the Government decline to make a purchase 4 years from now. The producers would then come to the Congress and say that they were led to believe that if they went into the business it would be carried on, and that they had been injured by reason of the failure of the Government to continue to make appropriations. That is my fear. I should like to know if the Senator has investigated that phase of the subject.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. We have gone into that question. It is the judgment of the committee, and it is the hope of the chairman of the committee, that never again will we move into an uneconomic sphere. We felt that with the great diversity of experts available to the Secretary of State, the Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Navy, the Secretary of Commerce, and the Secretary of the Interior, the Government would never do an uneconomic thing under the provisions of the bill.

Mr. BYRNES. The idea is to develop the production of the various materials in this country.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. That is one reason for making the appropriation a little larger than the amount immediately required for strategic materials.

Mr. BYRNES. Does the Senator believe that even with $25,000,000 we could develop the production of nickel, rubber, manganese, tin, and mica? Or is it the Senator's idea that we could do so partially?

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. We may be very close to some of the materials and may reach them by simple experimen-

Mr. BYRNES. How are we to do it? Are we to do it by giving contracts to the producers of such materials?

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. That is the only way it can be done under the bill. Mr. BYRNES. Then I presume the situation of several years ago still exists and that the only hope of the producer will be that on the strength of the contract he will be able to borrow money from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and go into business.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. I think not. I think that type of contract will not be entered into. I am very sure that that kind of individual exploitation of something which is not proved will be guarded against. We have the experience of the war time on which to fall back. We have the experience which the Senator has mentioned on which to fall We know of the work of the Contract Adjustment Board, and what a tremendous expense the Government incurred as the result of the manner in which we attempted to obtain such materials during the Great War. In the light of such experiences the pending legislation is brought forth at this time to avoid a repetition of past experience. There are still some claims not adjusted.

Mr. BYRNES. A repetition is what I fear.

I should like to ask one other question. Does the bill provide for the determination by the Procurement Division of the Treasury, or by the Army and Navy, of how much shall be bought?

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. By the Army and Navy through the Procurement Division.

Mr. BYRNES. The Procurement Division will do the pur-

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Yes. The representatives of all the departments will function at the same time.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. I shall be glad to yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. The Senator will recall-and the point raised by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES] suggests the inquiry—that in the appropriation bills for the past 12 or 15 years allowances have been made annually to settle the war minerals claims resulting from the World War. I imagine that the purpose of the Senator's bill is to prevent to some extent the recurrence of such a contingency. Instead of making contracts to produce in time of war when the necessity arises, we want the machinery set up so that enormous claims will not be made for machinery set up, even though nothing was produced.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. That is true.

Mr. TYDINGS. That leads me to ask the Senator another question. Is it contemplated in the bill—I have been trying to read it through—that the contracts for the procurement of any of these materials will be so drawn that the Government will have a recurring liability similar to that involved in the war minerals claims because the producers of the articles expended large sums of money in setting up plants. and then the Government did not buy as much of the materials as the producers anticipated the Government would buy at the time the contracts were entered into?

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. I am sure that would not be the case, because every witness testified about our experiences in wartimes. Some of the witnesses pointed out that some of those claims have not yet been adjudicated; and we had information given to us about how, in the excitement of the moment and the zeal to get these materials under emergencies, all types of contracts were entered into. For example. some producers were told to ship ore, and that the Government would take the chances, so that great expenditures were entered into, and implied contracts were made; and, as everyone knows, the adjustments of those contracts have been going on since. It is to avoid the recurrence of that very thing that this legislation is looked upon as desirable.

Mr. TYDINGS. I think the Senator has answered my question very well, but I should like to ask him another question.

On page 4, section 5, the bill says:

Purchases under this act shall be made in accordance with title III of the act of March 3, 1933-

And so forth. That, I believe, is the section under which the Procurement Division now operates. Is that correct? Mr. THOMAS of Utah. It is.

Mr. TYDINGS. I should like to see some wording put in that particular section—I have not the wording available, but I suggest it to the Senator—so that any contract for the purchase of materials by the Procurement Division of the Treasury Department shall be in such terms that the producers of the commodity cannot afterward come to the Government and say, "Notwithstanding that your initial order was for $100,000 worth of this particular material, we were led to believe that if we would spend $500,000 in developing a plant, there would be subsequent orders; and now that no subsequent orders have come, we feel that the Government has a moral obligation to refund us the amount of money that we have invested in this plant." In other words, in my judgment, the contracts should specify definite amounts of material only, so that there cannot be any doubt about the Government's liability on the purchase of a certain amount of material.

In the case of the war industries claims, as the Senator will recall, a commission was appointed which went into the question of how much the various agencies had expended. Some of them expended a great deal of money to build plants, and received practically no orders when the war came to a conclusion, and they had very meritorious cases. I know the Senator is seeking to avoid a similar condition in this connection; but I think some language tantamount to my suggestion ought to be incorporated in the bill to make certainty doubly sure.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. We sought the advice of the experts, and they say that that sort of thing cannot happen again under this provision.

Mr. TYDINGS. If I may pursue the matter one step further, aside from the purchase of materials, could a plant be subsidized under this bill?

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. No, sir.

Mr. TYDINGS. Could the bill in any way leave the producer under the impression that he was to recapture a certain amount of his capital outlay to produce the material?

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. It could not.

Mr. TYDINGS. The advice which the Senator has had in writing the bill is to the effect that that door has been definitely closed?

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. I think it has been definitely closed, especially by the provision that a year is allowed for production and delivery; and, in addition to that, there is provision for the waiver of delivery bond.

Mr. TYDINGS. I see that provision.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. I suppose that provision would limit the contract all the more.

Mr. TYDINGS. One more question, and then I shall not again interrupt the Senator. Was it contemplated by the evidence brought before the committee that the Government will pay the present price for the materials which it is desired to purchase; or will the Government pay more than the present price for the articles it wishes to purchase and store?

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. In making the purchases, the rules of the Government still hold. Bids will be offered and accepted, so that there is no let-down of the usual Government practice.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator a question. The Navy this year submitted its estimate for strategic materials, asking $500,000. That is the amount included in the Budget. Why was it determined that it was necessary to buy $25,000,000 a year of strategic materials instead of $500,000, as the Navy asked?

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. The pending bill includes both the Army and the Navy.

Mr. BYRNES. Does it include $24,500,000 for the Army? I am serious about the matter. In the Budget all that the Navy has asked is $500,000. We gave the Navy $3,500,000 for the year 1938; we gave it $500,000 for the year 1939; and now, for 1940, the Budget submitted by the President asks for this purpose only $500,000. It seems to me that some statement should be furnished to the Senate as to what amount the Army and the Navy believe is essential from the standpoint of national defense to justify an expenditure of $25,000,000. We are finding it necessary to spend so much money for so many purposes that the question arises whether this is of greater importance than the other purposes for which the Army and the Navy are asking money.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. The $500,000 for which the Navy asked is for a current need; is it not?

Mr. BYRNES. Yes. We have had this matter before the committee for 4 or 5 years. We compromised one year on an appropriation of $3,500,000. For 1939 only $500,000 was appropriated, and all that the Navy asked for the next year was $500,000.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. That may be true; but this bill is for the purpose of building up stock piles, so that the materials will be available during times of emergency. If we had an emergency, $500,000 would not satisfy the needs of the Navy, would it?

Mr. BYRNES. The item in the naval appropriation act is for the same purpose; and we put this language in that

That materials acquired hereunder shall not be issued for current use in time of peace without the approval of the Secretary of the Navy, except that materials acquired under this title may be issued for current use when replaced by materials purchased from current appropriations.

If, out of current appropriations, the Navy purchase some more materials, they may use those that are stored and replace them; but the materials purchased under the provision I have read are part of the materials stored for use in time of war.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. If this bill should become a law, such an appropriation as the Senator's subcommittee has heretofore recommended would be unnecessary.

Mr. BYRNES. I agree that if we should appropriate $25,000,000, this $500,000 would not be necessary; but the Committee on Military Affairs did not hear officially from the Army and Navy as to the amount that in their opinion it would be necessary or wise to spend annually for this purpose, did it?

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. I will say to the Senator that the amount carried in this bill was put in it on the recommendation of both the Army and the Navy and the other departments. The figures were arrived at by a joint meeting of the departments.

Mr. BYRNES. Will the Senator tell me who appeared for the Navy?

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Captain Allen, I think.

Mr. BYRNES. They suggested the expenditure of $25,-000,000 a year?

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. They were parties to the sugges-

Mr. BYRNES. There was a general agreement then?

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Yes; a general agreement on the part of all the departments.

Mr. BYRNES. They asked us for $500,000.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, in further support of the remarks I made a little while ago, I give notice that I intend to offer an amendment; and before sending it to the desk I should like to read it because it is extremely brief. It proposes to add to the bill the following new section:

SEC. 8. The President is hereby requested to enter into negotiations with foreign governments which are indebted to the United States with a view to arranging with such governments to furnish the United States with strategic and critical materials for national-defense purposes in payment or part payment of the indebtedness of such governments to the United States.

I ask that the amendment lie on the table.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. I am glad to yield.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I should like to say to the Senator from Utah that I naturally am very much interested in the bill he is now discussing, firstly, on account of my interest, and his, in national defense; secondly, I am interested because I note that one of the purposes of the bill is to encourage the further development of mines and deposits of these strategic and critical materials in the United States.

In my State of North Carolina we are possessed of some very valuable deposits of nickel. For a number of months past I have had in mind the matter of bringing the subject to the attention of the Senator from Utah, but I thought it would be wise to wait until the bill itself reached the floor, in order that I might then more properly secure the information I am desirous of receiving in reference to the bill.

May I ask the Senator whether my impression is correct that some $350,000 is to be annually provided the Bureau of Mines for the development of undeveloped mines throughout the United States?

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. That is true.

Mr. REYNOLDS. May I ask the Senator if I have the correct impression when I understand that $150,000 is to be annually appropriated to the Geological Survey?

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. That is true.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Now, may I inquire of the Senator what procedure should be followed after the enactment of the bill into law? I understand that the bill carries with it a suggested appropriation of $100,000,000. Is that correct?

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Covering a period of 4 years; yes. Mr. REYNOLDS. In case the bill should pass, what would be the proper procedure in the various States of the Union where there are valuable deposits of minerals that we need to have stored, as mentioned in the bill, to enable the owners of the deposits to secure aid under the act for the development, we will say, of nickel mines in my State of North Carolina, copper mines in the State of the Senator from Nevada, or mines of manganese that might be found in the State of the Senator from Wyoming? What would be the procedure to be followed in case the bill should be enacted into law and we should be desirous of gathering certain materials that are essential in the prosecution of a war?

I make that inquiry because I perceive that there are present other Senators who doubtless have received letters from constituents possessed of valuable mineral deposits; and they, like myself, no doubt would like to know now what would be the procedure necessary to bring about aid from the Government under the act for the development of mines containing minerals classified as essential under this measure.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. I should think the application would go first to the Bureau of Mines; and after the Bureau of Mines has experimented and proved that the development of certain mines and certain processes is feasible and economic, I should think application should be made to the Government for a contract for the purchase of a certain amount of the materials; and then the person who is to supply the materials would be given a year in which to produce the materials.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Of course, I have read the bill and the report, and I was wondering whether or not it would help my part of the State of North Carolina, where valuable nickel mines are located, to present an amendment in a sense, or by way of suggestion, to the Senator's bill, which he has been explaining on the floor of the Senate. I am of the opinion that I would not avail my State of anything by offering any sort of an amendment or suggestion. Is the Senator in accord with that view?

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. I am sure the Senator's State would not have any better advantage than it has now.

Mr. REYNOLDS. That was my impression, but I wanted to be sure about it. It has been brought to my attention that interests which are not identical with American interests, but are foreign, and, in my opinion, opposed to the interests of the United States, that is, interests of Germany, have been interesting themselves, I cannot exactly say in the purchase of these properties, but have been interesting themselves in viewing the properties. I was wondering whether there was anything I could do by way of the presentation of an amendment to protect the American interests in my State, or to bring about aid through governmental money for the development of the mines to which I have referred.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. I think the bill implies in its spirit and in its wording that the American producer shall have all the advantage.

Mr. REYNOLDS. That was my impression, but I wanted to make sure.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. Mr. President, will the Senator from Utah yield?

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. I yield.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. I wish to find whether I have a correct notion of the bill. In the first place, I understand that wherever we now have developed deposits of the kind referred to which are economically feasible, the mines, of course, are operating and getting the market, whatever it is, to the extent it exists; but we have throughout the United States large deposits of manganese; we have them in Arkansas and the Dakotas and in other States, and also deposits of chromium and large deposits of a relatively low grade of ore.

There is a provision in section 7 of the bill which authorizes the appropriation of some $500,000 a year for a period of 4 years to enable the Bureau of Mines and the Geological Survey to make some preliminary investigations, borings and diggings, in these large low-grade deposits, nickel, or whatever the mineral may be, for the purpose of ascertaining whether or not they can be used commercially. Furthermore, the Bureau of Mines and the Geological Survey would be authorized to engage in certain technical studies, chemical and other investigations, in the effort to discover new proc-When and as we develop a possibility of marketing any of these low-grade ores by reason of preliminary developments and new processes, then the field will be open, and private industry will go ahead and develop the material, and when and as we need it, under the terms of the bill they will then sell to the Government. But it is not the purpose to spend any part of the $25,000,000 a year for the purpose of developing a raw product and ascertaining whether a success can be made of its production.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. That is correct.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. But $500,000 a year is provided, which may be used for that purpose.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, my understanding as to that, as I stated a while ago, is that $350,000 is the annual appropriation for the Bureau of Mines, and $150,000 for the Geological Survey.

In reference to what the Senator from Wyoming has just stated, let me make a further inquiry of the Senator from Utah. In case the owners of mining property in the State of North Carolina were desirous of pursuing the question of ascertaining as to whether or not these mines were valuable commercially, and should solicit the support of the Bureau of Mines, would it be necessary for those who own the mines to borrow the money, under the proposed act, or would the money be appropriated under the National Defense Act?

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. They would have to borrow the money.

Mr. REYNOLDS. To what extent would the Bureau of Mines, with the $350,000 annually, help the development of the mines in my State?

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. They would not help the mines directly. They would help in the discovery of processes. They would help in establishing the feasibility and the economic worth of the property, but that is the only way they would help.

Mr. REYNOLDS. That is the full extent?

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Yes. There is no subsidy.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I thank the Senator very much.

Mr. GILLETTE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Utah yield?

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. I yield.

Mr. GILLETTE. The Senator may have covered this question, and through my attention being diverted I may have failed to get the answer. I note that the first part of the bill is designed to provide that studies be made under the supervision of the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy to determine certain shortages in materials that are critical and strategic, and provision is made for the Secretary of the Treasury, through the Procurement Division, to make up the deficiencies through purchases.

In section 7, however, the bill directs the Secretary of the Interior, on his own motion and without any reference to the studies or needs as determined by the two other branches, to make studies of ores and materials, without limitation, not of materials strategically necessary but which are essential to the industrial needs of the United States for common defense. Why is such leeway given to the Secretary of the Interior, and why is he not held within the same horizon of limitation as in the purchase?

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Primarily because his field is exploratory, investigating, and experimental and it was deemed by the committee that no other branch of the Government would be so well prepared as the Department of the Interior, the Bureau of Mines, for doing this kind of work. They, of course, are conscious all the time of the economic, the industrial, and the strategic needs of certain metals. But the big idea behind the bill is to make such provision that we may avoid in the future the experiences we suffered in the last great emergency; so that if an emergency should come, there should always be a committee thoughtful about these things, and that such development as might come would not the type of mushroom development which we had, which was very bad for the country.

Mr. GILLETTE. I am in full accord with the purpose of the bill. I am merely wondering why we should give to the Secretary of the Interior blanket authority to investigate all the fields, whether their development is strategically necessary or not. There is no limitation, except his own viewpoint, as to where he can spend the $500,000 a year.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. It is deemed that that is exactly where the authority should be, because the Secretary of the Interior is expert in that particular field, just as the limitation as to what constitutes a strategic material is left with the Secretary of the Navy and the Secretary of War.

Mr. GILLETTE. But the Senator does not propose to limit the Secretary of the Interior on the strategic need as determined by the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. No; because the bill provides for industrial needs, and it is hoped that we will be able to develop those commodities which American industry needs in peacetime quite as rapidly as those things which the War and the Navy Departments need in wartime.

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Lucas in the chair). Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. I yield.

Mr. WILEY. I notice in the report the definition of "essential material," neither "strategic" nor "critical" is included, and that one of the items under that heading is zinc. Because of the reciprocity treaties or trade agreements which have been negotiated, a number of zinc producing mines in southwestern Wisconsin have been closed. I ask what effect the bill, if enacted, would have upon that situation. Those mines are closed, not because we have not the zinc, not that we cannot produce it, but because under the reciprocal-trade agreements people in other countries can produce it cheaper. Let me find out how this proposed law would operate on that situation. If the mines are not kept going, the mines deteriorate. The zinc is there. In present circumstances we need to employ labor. Labor is idle; labor is going on W. P. A. If there is something in the bill that will help remedy that situation, then certainly it will be something we are looking for in Wisconsin.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. I am afraid there is nothing in the bill that would remedy that situation. There is a possibility, which is very remote, so far as zinc is concerned, that the Government would decide to purchase a stock pile of zinc, and to that extent the zinc mines might benefit. But, so far as zinc in the United States is concerned, it is not strategic; it is necessary, but at the present time it is not strategic. So it is not covered.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, this whole matter has been under consideration since prior to our entry into the World War. Prior to that time Mr. Herbert Hoover, afterwards President, was in charge of what we termed the necessary rare war minerals. They were minerals such as platinum. At that time we produced none of it in this country. It could be obtained possibly from Colombia. Platinum is also produced in Russia. There was tin, which is produced to some extent in Great Britain and also in Peru. We produce no substantial quantity of tin in this country.

Mr. Hoover, in charge of that matter, was attempting to devise some plan by which we could obtain these metals in the event we got into the war and our commerce in the supplies of rare metals was cut off. He suggested that our Government enter into arrangements by which a Government-controlled corporation should take over certain tin mines and platinum mines. I suggested to him at that time that that would not cure the difficulty, because the power to place embargoes against exports, or impose taxes, is inherent in government.

In the long run there was no way that could be thought of by which we could assure a supply of these essential war minerals, which we have never produced in this country in sufficient quantities, except to store the metals in this country. There is a large list of them in the report, and I do not need to go into it.

I will state what I have in mind. There is no doubt, from this report, that the Army and Navy will advise from time to time as to the quantity of the metals or materials that should be stored here. Under the proposed law, the development of production in this country of certain of those rare minerals is purely incidental to the proposal. It may not change it at all. But the Navy Department and the War Department are to be the advisers under the proposed act, and should be the advisers.

There is one provision which I think should be in the bill. Our Government would, in an emergency, lay in a supply of platinum, or of tin, or of manganese, or of chromium, or of other minerals, vast quantities of which would be needed instantly in the event we were going into war, as was found to be so in the World War; but in the event the threat of war disappeared and there was a condition of peace throughout the world, these enormous supplies of metals which we do not produce here would not be needed, at least not in the quantities in which they would be needed under the immediate threat of war. The bill not only does not provide for the resale of such materials but it provides that they cannot be disposed of except during war or an emergent threat of war.

I should like to have the bill provide that when there is no threat of war, when peace seems to be smiling over the world, if that ever happens, the Government may recoup the money it has put out either for all or a part of the supplies which are proven to be unnecessary.

Today we have not a sufficient supply of manganese to meet emergency demands in war. We might buy 10,000,000 tons of manganese, but war might not come for some time. In the meantime, production of manganese in this country might be increased to such a point that we would not need the supply we had stored away. Yet, under the provisions of the bill, the supply could not be disposed of except under threat of war. There is no question that as the domestic supply increases to meet the demand the surplus should be reduced and the money should be returned to the fund.

So I offer an amendment, which I hope the Senator from Utah will accept, and at least take to conference, where it can be rewritten or eliminated if thought necessary. I have not had sufficient time to study the bill as I should have done.

I offer the following proviso, to be inserted at the end of section 4, on page 4:

Provided, That when the President finds that any material acquired under this act is not necessary to carry out the purposes of the act or that the quantity in possession is larger than is necessary, he may sell all or any part of such material. The proceeds of any such sale shall be allocated to and deposited in the fund herein provided for.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Mr. President, I shall be very happy to accept the amendment because I think it is in complete keeping with the whole spirit of the bill.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I do not understand the amendment clearly. With the main purposes of the bill I am in hearty accord, and I hope to continue to be so. But if there are amendments being added to the bill which change its nature from one of national defense to one of relief, I cannot go along as I have done in the past. I want to know what the amendment is and to understand it.

Mr. PITTMAN. I have heretofore tried to explain it, and shall with pleasure try to do so again.

As I said awhile ago, the chief object of the measure is to meet a war emergency if it should arise. As we discovered prior to the World War, certain essential war materials were necessary in the production of munitions and implements of war-chiefly platinum, chromium, and tin. We could devise no legal way by which we could assure those materials coming into our country under certain conditions of warfare when embargoes might be placed by countries which produce the materials. We had no remedy. It was determined at that time, when Herbert Hoover was in charge of what were termed the necessary, rare war materials, to take steps so as to assure to our Government that it would have the supplies on hand in case of emergency, threat of war, or even possibility of our country going into war. That is what I understand the purpose of the pending bill is. There is no doubt that the President will be advised as to necessary materialsthe bill so provides—by the Navy Department and the War Department.

But the bill at the present time, I will say to the Senator from Vermont, compels the President to hold all the materials and supplies he buys, and not dispose of them, except in an emergency. An emergency may be facing us now, or there may be no emergency; but we hope that in a year or two years, or some time, there will be no emergency at all, and perhaps for 20 years we shall have a period of peace. So if with respect to any of the materials which are held the President is advised that it is no longer necessary to hold them, or that they are held in larger quantities than are necessary, he should be allowed to dispose of them and replace the money in the fund.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I could hear no more than half of what the Senator previously said, but what I heard in connection with the amendment I observed on page 2, line 3 and following, of the bill as it is now printed, excited me to suspect there might be a similar objective in the amendment proposed by the Senator. I understood that the bill permitted exactly the type of rotation of the stock piles to which the Senator referred.

Mr. PITTMAN. I thought so when I first read the bill. As the Senator will observe, it provides that the President may rotate materials which deteriorate. Of course, metals do not deteriorate very much. The President can rotate metals. But even the rotation anticipates that the President will keep the same supply. There is no provision in the bill that if an emergency ceases to exist in this country the President may dispose of the materials. That is all the amendment seeks to provide for.

Mr. AUSTIN. If there is no such provision in the measure, there ought to be.

Mr. PITTMAN. That is all the amendment provides.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] in section 4, on page 4.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the next amendment.

The next amendment was, in section 5, page 4, line 17, after the word "with", to strike out "section 3709, Revised Statutes (as amended by act of June 25, 1910) (36 Stat. 861; U. S. C. 41:5), and the act of March 3, 1933 (47 Stat. 1520; U. S. C. 41:10a)" and to insert in lieu thereof "Title III of the act of March 3, 1933 (47 Stat. 1520), but a reasonable time (not to exceed 1 year) shall be allowed for production and delivery from domestic sources and in the case of any such material available in the United States but which has not been developed commercially, the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy may, if they find that the production of such material is economically feasible, direct the purchase of such material without requiring the vendor to give bond", so as to make the section read:

SEC. 5. Purchases under this act shall be made in accordance with title III of the act of March 3, 1933 (47 Stat. 1520), but a reasonable time (not to exceed I year) shall be allowed for production and delivery from domestic sources and in the case of any such material available in the United States but which has not been developed commercially, the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy may, if they find that the production of such material is economi-cally feasible, direct the purchase of such material without requiring the vendor to give bond.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 6, page 5, line 4, after "transportation", to insert "maintenance, rotation"; in line 5, after the words "storage of the", to strike out "commodities" and to insert "materials"; in line 9, after "June 30", to strike out "1939"; in the same line, after the figures "1941", to strike out "and"; after the figures "1942" to insert "and 1943"; and in line 10, after the words "under the", to insert "joint", so as to make the section read:

SEC. 6. For the procurement, transportation, maintenance, rotation, and storage of the materials to be acquired under this act, there is hereby authorized to be appropriated the sum of $25,000,000, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for each of the fiscal years ending June 30, 1940, 1941, 1942, and 1943, to be expended under the joint direction of the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 7, page 5, line 20, after the words "essential to the", to strike out "national defense or the"; in line 21, after "United States", to insert "for common defense,"; on page 6, line 8, after the word "which", to strike out "the" and insert "such"; in line 13, after "June 30", to strike out "1939,"; in line 14, after "1941", to strike out "and"; and in the same line, after "1942", insert "and 1943", so as to make the section read:

SEC. 7. (a) That the Secretary of the Interior, through the Director of the Bureau of Mines and the Director of the Geological Survey, is hereby authorized and directed to make scientific, technologic, and economic investigations concerning the extent and mode of occurrence, the development, mining, preparation, treatment, and utilization of ores and other mineral substances found in the United States or its Territories or insular possessions which are essential to the industrial needs of the United States for common defense and the constitutions regarded of mineral substances. are essential to the industrial needs of the United States for common defense, and the quantities or grades of which are inadequate from known domestic sources, in order to determine and develop domestic sources of supply, to devise new methods for the treatment and utilization of lower-grade reserves, and to develop substitutes for such essential ores and mineral products; to explore and develop on public lands and on privately owned lands, with the consent of the owner, deposits of such minerals, including core drilling, trenching, test-pitting, shaft sinking, drifting, crosscutting, sampling, and metallurgical investigations and tests as may be necessary to determine the extent and quality of such deposits, the most suitable methods of mining and beneficiating them, and the cost at which such minerals or metals may be produced.

(b) For the purposes of carrying out the provisions of this section there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, out of son $500,000, of which amount $350,000 shall be appropriated to the Bureau of Mines and $150,000 to the Geological Survey.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That completes the committee amendments.

Mr. AUSTIN. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I offer an amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. At the end of the bill it is proposed to add a new section 8, as follows:

SEC. 8. The President is hereby requested to enter into negotiations with foreign governments which are indebted to the United States with a view to arranging for such governments to furnish the United States with strategic and critical materials for nationaldefense purposes in payment or part payment of the indebtedness of such governments to the United States.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I should like to reiterate the remarks I made briefly earlier today with regard to the amendment. I think it is self-evident that an amendment of the kind suggested or procedure of the character proposed would not in any way interfere with goods which are produced by American citizens. One of the difficulties in the settlement of the debt question has been that if we imported goods from foreign countries such goods might compete with American-produced goods. That would not be true in this case. Here is an opportunity to confer a service upon the American people by providing them with strategic raw material. Here is an opportunity to confer a service on them by having the material come in without additional cost and also to confer a benefit in the way of development of international good will by having at least a partial settlement made of the debt question.

So I hope my amendment will be adopted.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, salutary and wholesome as are the spirit and purpose of the bill which proposes to develop strategic and critical materials which may be necessary in an emergency in the future, there are some other questions which are even more vital than the proposals of this bill.

The leadership for a protective tariff in the United States has passed from New England. It passed for economic reasons. The demand for a protective tariff is now led by the West, without regard to party. I need not now rehearse what I have said many times in this forum—although it could not be said too often-that the Democratic Party, and not Alexander Hamilton, was the father of the American protective tariff, and in this assertion history will bear me out. No one who makes any pretension to study history will question my statement on this head.

A tariff to afford some adequate measure of protection to those who are producing in this country-I emphasize the word "producing"-would give more truly independence, more efficiency, and more employment than any other law we could enact.

Since the able Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Longe] has been in the Senate, he has given evidence of close investigation of subjects upon which he speaks. However, the able Senator seemed to leave the impression that there are metals which the United States does not or could not produce, and that therefore it would be wise and expedient to seek to import from foreign countries such metals as we do not produce, or could not produce.

I commend the general idea of his amendment. However, I should be recreant not only to the West but recreant to our whole country if I failed to say that, so far as I know, within our own bosom, within our own hills repose all the metals which might be necessary to this Government in a time of emergency, or necessary to carry on the ordinary purposes of commerce, manufacture, chemistry, industry, and common life.

Within the past half century—yes, within the past 25 years—science has done many startling things. The agencies of science have returned from their remote excursions bringing many trophies. Men of science have lately tickled Nature until she has laughed forth secrets which for generationsyea, for thousands of years—she kept closely hidden and carefully guarded. To this generation, indeed, has been given the key to the kingdom of the material sciences. Whether we are any better or happier for all this is a question I do not now discuss.

At Fort Knox, Ky., some $11,000,000,000 in gold lies buried. In a desperate emergency perhaps a few tons of some of the rare metals might be quite as important to national defense as all the gold there buried. So I repeat that if we will but give proper encouragement to what I shall term the owners of small mines in the United States, the miners will smite with pick and drill the obdurate face of Nature and compel her to pour forth these necessary metals, and we shall not need to depend upon any foreign country for our critical and strategic metals in time of war or peace.

Up to the time of the World War we had neglected to develop an adequate supply of manganese. Every Senator present knows as well as I the importance of that metal in time of war, as well as its importance in time of peace. So hardly were we pressed during the war to secure manganese that we apparently offered a bonus to prospectors and miners who would discover manganese ores and extract the metal therefrom. Acting upon that encouragement, hundreds of men went forth and discovered and developed manganese ores. About the time the miners had the ore on the dump, the war concluded, and the United States was called upon for many years to pay-and I think properly so-large sums of money out of the Treasury of the United States to reimburse those with whom it appeared we had impliedly contracted to develop manganese ores.

I think this bill indicates prescience and forethought on the part of its sponsors and supporters. Its general purpose is good; and if we will set up a protective tariff upon the products of our mines we will not stand in need of securing metals from any foreign country.

My friend the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. Davis] sits before me and does me the honor to listen. It was believed that his State was a leader in the advocacy of a protective tariff. For a time it was. In the First Congress Mr. Fitzsimons, of the State of Pennsylvania, took the leadership for a high protective tariff.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ASHURST. Certainly.

Mr. MILLER. In connection with the remark of the Senator about manganese, I should like to interject that as a result of the war activity we stepped up the production of manganese in the United States from 1916 to 1918. In 1916 the production was 11,000 tons. In 1918 it was 318,000 tons. Immediately after the war ended we began buying manganese from Russia, and have been buying 800,000 tons a year from Russia under our trade practices. As a result the manganese miners of this country are now on relief.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I am immensely obliged to the able Senator from Arkansas for what he calls an "interjection," but what I believe to be a tremendous reinforcement of the argument I am trying to make. He is correct when he says that notwithstanding the fact that the United States possesses ample sources of manganese, we have been purchasing from Russia manganese which is produced by slave labor, or by forced labor.

We talk much about the workingman, about his woes, his troubles, and his tribulations. The workingman would like to have a few votes here in favor of a tariff to keep out forced- and slave-labor produced metals. He would appreciate such consideration equally as much as he would appreciate a fine speech. [Laughter.]

So far as within my power lies, ever since I became converted 20 years ago to the high protective tariff, I have never failed upon a proper occasion to speak for a protective tariff. It may interest Senators to know that in the early years of my career, like a bifurcated, peripatetic volcano, I traveled over the United States speaking for low tariffs. Some day I may bring into the Senate a copy of a speech I made nearly 28 years ago on that subject. It is regarded as one of the best speeches ever made for low tariffs.

It was so able that I have been answering that speech ever since. Our country cannot subsist without a high protective tariff. If I should be asked, "On what?" I reply, "A protective tariff on the products of the farm, the field, the forest, the factory, the mines, and the ranch."

Mr. SMITH. And the politicians. [Laughter.]

Mr. ASHURST. I did not catch the sotto voce remark of my learned friend, but I know it is an illuminating statement. Mr. SMITH. I thought it might be possible to obtain a high protective tariff on politicians.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, the politician needs no protection. If he be a true politician, he ought to be able to protect himself at any place, in any circumstance, at any time. [Laughter.]

When I speak of the politician, I do not employ the word "politician" as an epithet. We are here because we are politicians; and when we cease being politicians we shall go out of this body. Politics is a profession worthy of any young man's consideration. The Government is run by politics in the higher sense. It is only after a politician achieves fame, and after all motive to envy is silenced, that we begin to call him a statesman. Many of my brethren now in the Senate, after they have left these doors forever and are sleeping, will be called statesmen. They will not be called statesmen during their lifetimes. History and destiny quite properly are jealous as to the way and as to the place they assign living men and grant compliments to existing statesmen.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President-

Mr. ASHURST. I yield to my able friend from West Virginia.

Mr. NEELY. I rose to suggest as a substitute for the amendment offered by the distinguished Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] in favor of a high tariff to protect politicians from competition, that the Congress provide the public protection against politicians. [Laughter.]

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I have had experience with many persons. I have never met a more pungent intellect, and I have never met a man better fitted for public service than my able friend from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY]. When I say "able" I am not merely using the language of compliment, which is proper as used in the Senate. He touches nothing that he does not adorn. If I understood him aright, he wished to have the public protected from the politician. Is that the Senator's suggestion?

Mr. NEELY. Yes; but not the kind of politicians whom the eminent Senator from Arizona has described with his usual eloquent language which is always like apples of gold in pictures of silver.

Mr. ASHURST. I was using the word "politician" in the sense of a man who is earnestly desirous of serving his country. When I was a very young man there was another young man in our community who tried to conceal the fact that he wanted to be elected to Congress. Somehow he seemed apologetic. I said to him, "Do not apologize. No more valuable public service can be rendered to the country than true service in Congress. Do not be afraid of being called a

Here is my friend from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH]. A farmer; he is one of the scholars of the Senate. I shall ask him to tell the Senate the etymology of the word "politician." He will tell us that in the etymology of that word there is no epithet to be attached to the word "politician." Let him now make his admission. [Laughter.]

So, Mr. President, again expressing my approval of the spirit and purpose of the bill, I will say that I am prepared to consider any amendment or any suggestion which will cause foreign countries to look with any degree of amiability upon the payment of their debt to the United States. My able friend from Massachusetts [Mr. Longe], who is undoubtedly a student of foreign relations, seems to have a lurking idea or belief that foreign countries will ultimately pay their debts. They will never pay unless compelled to do so. It is a part of the policy of European governments never to pay another government. I shall support any move that may be made looking toward obtaining even a farthing due to the United States from foreign governments, whether they be democracies or autocracies.

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?
Mr. ASHURST. Certainly, I yield to my friend.
Mr. MURRAY. Will not the Senator make one or two exceptions to that statement?

Mr. ASHURST. Yes, Mr. President; and I thank the Senator. The able Senator from Montana, a few days since, very properly called attention to the fact that there are two governments, so far as we know, which pay their debts. One is Ireland, the land that has produced so many warriors, so many scholars, and so many orators that at times it seems that Prometheus took an extra fagot of divine fire and touched the lips of all Irishmen, thus making them eloquent by nature. That nation, Ireland, is not only paying the debts it owes but it has gone still further and is paying the debts which it is under no moral or legal obligation to pay. Am I right about that?

Mr. MURRAY. The Senator is right. Mr. ASHURST. That is No. 1.

The other one, Finland, a small country, is paying its obligations to the United States but the natural state of many European countries is "war." In the case of most of the young men in foreign countries, when they learn there is going to be war their eyes will sparkle as if they were viewing some beautiful picture or some exquisitely chiseled statue. For 2,000 years war has been the usual European occupation. So when we read of these so-called crises in Europe and imagine that we are going to save Europe we should remember that Europe's salvation, like the salvation of an individual, depends upon itself. Europe will save itself if and when it spends money for building up its internal resources and developing itself, instead of trying to take what belongs to some other nation.

We hear a great deal nowadays to the effect that the nations in Europe are much concerned over forms of government. Truth is that the troubles in Europe and the disputes there are not concerned with forms of government. The disputes in Europe are over lands, concessions, markets, harbors, material advantages, and imperial designs. A Senator is not a sophisticated man if he believes that the European nations are going to fight over any particular form of government. With a few noble exceptions, they do not care anything about the form of the government.

But I seem to have drifted away from what I was intending to say. I was saying that if we will develop our own internal resources, protect our shores, encourage the small mineowners of the United States, they will produce not only all the ferrous metals we need but also what we call the nonferrous metals, and rare metals and precious metals.

I was interrupted by the able Senator from Montana [Mr. MURRAY]. His State is a great producer of copper. The State of Arizona produces a vast amount of copper, possibly a third annually of all the copper produced in the United States, and Arizona has done so for many years. Copper in Arizona pays more than half of all the taxes paid there. Copper pays more than half of all the wages paid in Arizona. I have not vexed the ears of Congress urging laws giving copper special privileges. If we will but let the natural, honest, economic laws operate, industries like the copper industry will have no great difficulty and will flourish.

Mr. President, I now read a resolution adopted by the Arizona Small Mine Operators' Association on the 15th of Resolution passed unanimously by Phoenix Council, Arizona Small Mine Operators' Association, at its meeting March 15, 1939

Whereas it is the little-business man of today who develops and

A prospector goes into the hills; he sleeps beneath the starry stillness of the desert night. He has credit for food for a few weeks. We call it a grubstake. I say to my scholarly friend [Mr. Smith] that the word "grubstake" is a legitimate and accepted locution. I saw the Senator smiling. The grubstake is known to the law. A prospector discovers a mine, and the men who have grubstaked him become part owners according to their agreement. There is a prospect. It requires money for development. It requires from five to thirty-five or forty thousand dollars to make a preliminary discovery or exploration and then it requires additional capital to develop further and to operate. So long as we continue to hamper prospectors and to lay unnecessary burdens, fines, and amercements upon small mine operators, we need have no hope of any large development of our mineral resources.

Mr. President, consider a mighty and majestic river upon whose placid bosom may swim the commerce of a great nation-let us say the Mississippi River, adjacent to the State which you, Mr. President [Mr. Lucas in the chair], with your colleague so ably represent-does not gush forward at once a large stream, full panoplied, like Minerva from the brow of Olympian Jove. That great river sprang from small and meager beginnings-here a slender, small stream, here the melting of some snow, possibly in some alpine region, accumulating, accelerating, gathering more and more springs as it flows, until the slender streams finally reach the proportions of a great river. So it is with the mining industry. Prospectors very rarely, if at all, go out and discover offhand and without development a million-dollar mine. Actual mines are brought into existence because some man working with a pick and shovel, able to enlist some capital, develops a small mine into a larger mine, and that, in turn, is developed into a still larger mine. The mining industry must have legitimate encouragement at its original sources if it is to Arizona, so far, produces no fuel oil. I suppose we buy great quantities of fuel oil from Oklahoma. The Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. Thomas], who is a close student of the subject, will bear me out in the assertion that in many instances large sums of money, from fifteen to twenty-five thousand dollars, are required to test and ascertain whether or not there is even a prospect for oil. So, Mr. President, our independence from an economic standpoint, our security in times of war, if war should unhappily come, will largely depend upon our ability to produce essential materials from our own soil.

Senators who were here some 21 years ago will remember that one morning a grief of unusual poignancy settled upon us. We were notified that the ship called the Cyclops, coming here from Brazil loaded with manganese-we had not developed our manganese resources-had disappeared. I may say that no trace of the Cyclops has ever been discovered. She was lost with all her crew and passengers. It happened that the nephew of one of our Senators was on board the ship. We were required to secure manganese from a foreign country during wartime. Nitrates we were obliged largely to get from Chile during wartime. I join with all Senators in seeking the enactment of any legislation that will make the United States self-sufficient and self-contained, so that she will not be required to depend upon foreign countries for essential materials if we should unhappily have trouble in the nature of war.

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, while we are discussing measures pertaining to the national defense I desire to call the attention of the Senate to a large number of petitions which I have received during the past few days from citizens of Kansas. Several thousand citizens of my State have signed these petitions praying for the enactment of a neutrality law which will keep the United States out of all foreign entanglements; also, a large number of petitions praying for the adoption of an amendment to the Constitution authorizing a referendum vote on war.

Mr. President, all of us are much disturbed, horrified, in fact, by what is developing in Europe these days. It looks as if the Old World is war mad again.

Central Europe is on the march again.

Mr. President, I say that right now is a good time for the people of the United States to stop, look, and listen. It is my judgment that the more we face the world situation today realistically, and the less we face it emotionally-I might almost say hysterically—the better for us, and, in the long run, the better for Europe and the entire world.

Reading history casually, and studying maps of central Europe at different periods, it does not look to me as if lasting peace can ever be expected in central Europe unless practically all the states in this area can be united into one federation. Perhaps that process is now going on. I do not know; you do not know; nor is it likely that anyone else knows. But I will say frankly that I do feel that I know this much:

Trying to settle those boundary lines, trying to prevent such a federation, is no job for the United States of America. I will go further than that: I say it is none of our business. It would be an impossible task for the United States to settle the boundary lines of European countries, even if that were

I know there are those in the United States who are obsessed with the idea that we have a rendezvous with destiny to attempt some such fantastic feat; but I believe most Americans realize that such ambitions are just delusions of grandeur.

Let us look at the matter from the other angle. Do we want the nations of Europe to come over here and try to fix the boundary lines of nations either in North America or in South America? Emphatically, we do not. We have a Monroe Doctrine directed against any such procedure. Now I ask, have we any more right to go over to Europe to settle boundary lines than Europe has to come over here to settle boundary lines?

It seems to me there is only one logical answer to that question. Uncle Sam should keep out of Europe.

I abhor Hitlerism, with its Jewish pogroms, its persecutions of helpless minorities, its crushing out of human sympathies, as much as does anyone. I am not in accord with the ambitions of Mussolini to restore the old Roman Empire and its vanished glories.

We may as well be somewhat realistic in considering foreign affairs; in fact, we had better be. And let us keep in mind that the present situation in Europe is not all due-perhaps it is not even in large part due—to the ambitions of either Adolf Hitler or Benito Mussolini, or both.

Perhaps a glance at a map of Europe, and a comparison of that map with the map of North America, may help to explain what seems to many Americans the fantastic and horrible nightmare which they see developing in Europe these

When the late World War broke out in 1914 that map was bad enough in the eyes of anyone who could visualize what national boundary lines mean. In a territory two-thirds the size of the United States there were some score of sovereign nations, most of them densely populated, many of them unable to feed themselves, competing for markets, for raw materials, for political power.

The United States was persuaded at that time that to make the world safe for democracy the United States must send an army overseas to aid the Empires of England and France crush the imperialism of Germany. We sent our boys overseas. We poured billions and billions of dollars into Europe. We won the war for the Allies.

Then came the Treaty of Versailles. Boundary lines were again readjusted, as they are at the conclusion of most wars. Did the Allies establish boundary lines with the idea of promoting the welfare of Europe, of creating a more prosperous and peaceful Europe? I say the answer to that question emphatically is "no." The Allies drew up a peace treaty that might as well have been called a war treaty, written for the purpose of breaking up central Europe into more and smaller and weaker states, none of them strong enough to lead a national existence, none of them so weak that it did not constitute a threat to its neighbors when economic conditions became unbearable.

Instead of 20 nations, Europe consisted of 27 nations after the Versailles Treaty was written. Every nation except the United States grabbed off some more territory from Germany and her allies. Seven new sovereign states were in Europe west of Russia—Poland, Czechoslovakia, Finland, Estonia, Latvia, Hungary, and Lithuania. Serbia became Yugoslavia.

Seven thousand miles of new tariff walls were erected in western Europe. Twenty-seven nations, in an area about two-thirds the size of the United States, proceeded to restrict the trade of each other, to gain marketing advantages, to survive in a struggle for existence.

The boundary lines established by the Treaty of Versailles were impossible. They could be maintained only by force and by the use of continually greater force. No wonder England and France wanted the United States to head the League of Nations and supply the necessary police force to try to keep dismembered Austria and disrupted Germany inside those impossible boundary lines.

Hitler and Mussolini, particularly Hitler, were the logical results of the Treaty of Versailles. Some may not like that statement; I do not like to make it, but I believe it to be substantially true. Just imagine the United States broken up into 30 nations, perhaps a third of them incapable of supporting their populations, and prevented by tariff walls and standing armies from even trading with their neighbors on anywhere near even terms. Could it not be foreseen that an explosion would be inevitable?

Even supposing the United States did have a destiny in Europe—which I most emphatically deny—how could any of us, or even a President of the United States, determine how that destiny should or could be fulfilled?

In Europe today are two imperialistic democracies, England and France, to whom we are tied by blood relationship and traditional friendship. Then we see two dictatorships with imperialistic ambitions, Germany and Italy, with whom we have had no wars of our own. We joined in one war against. Germany in which Italy was one of our allies against Germany, in which Italy was one of our allies.

Partly in and partly out of Europe is another great nation—Russia, mysterious Russia, communistic Russia.

Complicating the European situation still farther is Japan in the Orient, trying to become the England of Asia.

What chance has a President of the United States, or a Congress of the United States, or the people of the United States, of straightening out that mess? Not a chance in the world. I repeat, our position is that of onlooker, and we should not for one moment consider taking sides in quarrels that we can neither understand nor hope to settle.

Let us insist on strict neutrality; let us strengthen the Neutrality Act, not weaken it. I say that we have no business trying to settle the boundary disputes among England, France, Italy, Germany, Russia, and a score of lesser European nations. Such disputes are entirely out of our sphere, no matter who may think we have a rendezvous with destiny somewhere in France. Let us mind our own business and follow the sound foreign policy laid down by Washington of avoiding foreign entanglements and alliances.

Our best foreign policy is to provide a strong defense for the United States and for the Western Hemisphere against attack, but not to defend the Rhine in Europe or the island of Guam in the Orient. Nor should we arm so heavily or so speedily as to give Europe or Asia reason to believe we intend to participate in their quarrels. We made the world "safe for democracy" once and got the worst of it. Why get into another European mess? I am also strongly opposed to any secret assurances being given to other nations that the United States will back them in case of war. If we are to enter into any alliances—and I am absolutely opposed to entangling alliances—better have them open, aboveboard, and ratified by the Congress.

Better still, let us adopt the war referendum amendment and serve notice that no official or set of officials can pledge this Nation to participate in other nations' wars until the people themselves have had a chance to say what they want done.

This is a good time not to go abroad looking for trouble—there is too much trouble there to be had for the looking and we have enough trouble of our own right here at home. Helping the farmer save his farm from foreclosure, getting jobs for the 10,000,000 unemployed in the cities, and balancing the Nation's Budget is enough to keep all of us busy for a while.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, the Senator from Arizona made the very pertinent observation that any provision looking to foreign nations supplying us with strategic materials should make it very plain that such materials are not being produced in the United States. I think that in the language of my amendment it was implicit that that could not be done, but in order to lay any doubts at rest I have exercised the privilege which I understand I have and have modified my amendment so that strategic materials which are produced in the United States will not come in under this arrangement. I believe too many goods of foreign production are already coming into this country.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I am very much pleased that the Senator has cleared up what might have been a doubt in his amendment. He says he has made the language explicit so that it will apply only to such metals as are not produced in commercial quantities in the United States.

Mr. LODGE. That is correct.

Mr. ASHURST. I shall take great pleasure in supporting the amendment in its present form.

Mr. LODGE. I thank the Senator. I modify my amendment by adding the words "which are not now produced in the United States" after the words "defense purposes," so as to make the amendment read:

SEC. 8. The President is hereby requested to enter into negotiations with foreign governments which are indebted to the United States with a view to arranging for such governments to furnish the United States with strategic and critical materials for national defense purposes, which are not now produced in the United States, in payment or part payment of the indebtedness of such governments to the United States.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I did not know the measure now pending was to be brought up, and I am not familiar with all its details; but I take it the purpose of the bill is to encourage the production of necessary materials of war. I wish to recite an experience I had during the last war.

As everyone knows, nitrates are the basis of all explosives. For a pertinent reason I went to Mr. Baruch, who was then the head of the War Industries Board, and asked him what supply of the basic material which is the sine qua non of all war materials, the explosive power, we had on hand. He had not paid any attention to it, so he investigated, and it was discovered that we had less than 2 weeks' supply for practice purposes. At that time we were wholly dependent upon the mines of Chile.

It developed that we came within a heart's throb of having Chile embargoed by Germany. Had that occurred, there would have been no other sufficient source of nitrogen available for the United States.

I introduced a bill, which passed this body and the House of Representatives, appropriating $20,000,000 for an investigation by the Government into certain water-power sites where we might engage in developing the newly discovered method of extracting nitrogen from the air. There was a plant at Niagara which at that time was producing what they call cyanamide, a composition of nitrogen and lime. The product was not very satisfactory and could not, without being reprocessed, be used for the manufacture of explosives.

As a result of the alarming situation of our Government in regard to its ability to go to war, which ability, in the final analysis, rested upon its possession of sufficient nitrates, experiments were begun in the extraction of nitrogen from the air. As everyone who has made any study of chemistry knows, the air is composed of four parts of nitrogen and one of oxygen. The necessity for this Government being independent of all other sources has resulted in the perfection of a process of extracting nitrogen from the air to such a point that today one company is producing enough nitrogen to supply the armies of the United States without limit, and it is producing it, by the Haber process, in such a form that it takes a minimum amount of manipulation to reconvert it into pure nitrogen necessary as a basis of all our explosives.

Mr. President, I am convinced that had not the startling fact been brought to the attention of the American people that we as a great nation, in the event of war, would be dependent upon a little strip of country on the west coast of South America for our power to fight, this great discovery would not have been made.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SMITH. I yield.

Mr. ASHURST. I perfectly recall the circumstance stated by the Senator, and while, history has never done ample credit to the able Senator from South Carolina, it was, in my opinion, none other than he, certainly so far as the United States Senate was concerned, who first called attention to the fact that we had on hand supplies of nitrogen which would last no longer than 2 weeks, and that if a blockade could be maintained around the ports of Chile, and such nitrogen cargoes as were bound for the United States could be seized, we would be powerless to move. I think that it was one of the gyidences of the Senator's real statesmanship when he exposed that fact, and not only exposed the fact, but took measures looking toward securing adequate supplies of nitrogen.

Mr. SMITH. I thank the Senator.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SMITH. I yield.

Mr. LUNDEEN. I was under the impression that we took care of that situation in part by the construction of the Muscle Shoals Dam.

Mr. SMITH. That was the result of the appropriation of the $20,000,000, at my suggestion. It was finally decided that Muscle Shoals was the place where the Government should set up its nitrogen plant. Since then it has been distorted into more or less of a power plant; but the object of the Muscle Shoals development was the production of nitrates for the United States during times of war.

Mr. LUNDEEN. If the Senator will permit a further interruption, I should like to ask him, can Muscle Shoals, as it is now constituted, be used for the production of nitrates?

Mr. SMITH. I think the machinery at Muscle Shoals is so obsolete that it would be difficult for the Government to modernize the plant without a tremendous outlay of additional money.

Mr. LUNDEEN. I take it, then, the Senator is in favor of installing modern machinery there, so that in the event of difficulty we would be able to produce the necessary nitrates?

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I wish to acknowledge that I never was more disappointed than when, after my efforts in the Senate had finally resulted in the location of the plant at Muscle Shoals, and the war was over, there was a clamor that we desist and let private enterprise go on, and in the same breath a demand that we enter into the production of power in competition with private industry.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, waiving the question as to whether governmental activity should enter into competition with private enterprise, is it not a fact—and I think the Senator ought to draw some comfort from the circumstance—that enormous amounts of hydroelectric energy are necessary for the production of air-fixed nitrogen? That is true, is it not?

Mr. SMITH. Not so much now. The process has been reduced to such a point that a comparatively small amount of hydroelectric power is necessary to produce a unit of nitrogen.

Mr. ASHURST. The Senator is a keener student of that subject than am I, but my general information, obtained as a result of an investigation I made a long time ago, is that large amounts of electrical energy are necessary to obtain the fixation of nitrogen.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, under the modified process enough power is generated at Muscle Shoals to produce all the nitrates the Army would need. The amount of nitrogen produced by a unit of electrical power is now so increased that the cost of a ton of nitrate is cut to one-half its original cost.

I desire to congratulate the Senator from Utah on the fact that he has introduced a bill which will develop some of our mineral resources to such a point that we will be independent of the rest of the world. With respect to those whose production at home we cannot develop we should make the best terms possible to get them from abroad.

I heard my colleague say earlier today that $500,000 was provided in the Navy bill with which to purchase the necessary strategic war materials. I think that would be like providing a 2 weeks' supply of nitrogen. Five hundred thousand dollars could not provide more than the current ammunition necessary to carry on gunnery practice and war games. Surely we would need more than $500,000 to possess ourselves of that one essential in time of actual war.

Mr. President, I believe—and I am going to take this occasion to say it—that our Government is duty bound to its citizens and to our great, rich country to see that it is amply protected at all times against any exigencies that may arise. I do not believe we have a right to interfere with or get mixed up in the embroglios of Europe. European countries can settle their own affairs as they see fit. But I want America to be so prepared with its fighting forces, its Army and Navy, backed up by our inexhaustible resources, as to be able to meet all comers who dare to interfere with us or to attempt to change our form of government.

Mr. President, so long as I am in the Senate, I am going to vote for every dollar that is necessary to be expended to keep us properly equipped to meet any exigency or emergency that may arise. I am not a pacifist in the sense that I think that peace on earth and good will to men will prevail during my lifetime or that of my grandchildren. I am afraid human nature is not ready for that great transformation.

In conclusion, I wish to say that the results of the experiment in extracting nitrogen from the air are almost parallel with the development of radio. There is an unlimited, infinite supply of it. The ingenuity of man has tapped the synthetic source and is now producing the material in such quantities as to make us forever independent of any natural deposits. It is a synthetic material, true, but it has the same chemical composition as the natural product.

I hope the Senator from Utah will have success with his bill. We are spending millions in America. We are pouring out money at the bung and trying to stop the drippings at the spigot.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Lodge] as modified.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I wish to ask the attention of the Senator from Utah. A number of Senators have to attend committee hearings, and have other engagements, which have compelled them to suggest that unless there is some haste or emergency with respect to the pending measure final action on the bill go over. I will say frankly that it is my purpose to move that the Senate adjourn until Thursday. Would the Senator from Utah have any objection to that course? Of course, his bill remains the unfinished business until it is disposed of.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Mr. President, I have no objection at all to the suggested arrangement.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. McNARY. I hope the able Senator in charge of the bill will consent to the request made by the Senator from Kentucky, because we have today a meeting of the Thomas Jefferson Memorial Association. The meeting is a very important one. In fact, the Commission is already in session, the meeting having begun at 2:30 p.m. If the Senate were to suspend at this time, we could attend the meeting.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, in order to have the matter before the Senate in the RECORD overnight, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD at this point in my remarks an extract from Fortune magazine of January 25, 1939, which is a background reading for common-defense plans; also a part of a clipping from the Christian Science Monitor of February 24, 1939, entitled "This Changing World," by H. B. Elliston—that part of the article only which relates to the buying and selling program.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matters referred to are as follows:

[Excerpts from article entitled "The High Cost of Peace," published in Fortune of January 25, 1939]

Besides the money needed for machine tools, the Army procurement experts would like to see $25,000,000 appropriated for the purchase of stock piles of the so-called strategic raw metals that do Besides the money needed for machine tools, the Army procurement experts would like to see $25,000,000 appropriated for the purchase of stock piles of the so-called strategic raw metals that do not exist in commercially exploitable form in the United States. These strategic materials include manganese, tin, tungsten, and chromite. If we do not contemplate war with Canada the nickelalloy problem solves itself; the partly United States owned International Nickel Co. is right next door. And if we are certain that the sea lanes to South America can be kept open, other shortages do not shape up as menacing. Manganese, an absolute essential as a steel alloy, can be had in Cuba. Chromite, needed for armor plate, gun carriages, and cutting tools, is practically a South African monopoly. But there is some in Cuba, and in wartime our civilian use of chromium for barroom fixtures could be dispensed with. Tin now comes from British Malaya, but Bolivia has quantities of this metal. Tungsten, needed for bullet cores and for hardening high-speed cutting tools, is imported from China and India. The United States, however, has plenty of tungsten deposits that can be worked when the occasion warrants.

But if this hemisphere is theoretically self-sufficient in metals, it does not follow that the severing of the sea routes to South Africa and Malaya would not result in immediate shortages in our supply of alloys. It takes enormous time to bring new mining regions into production. Common sense, then, would seem to indicate the logic of laying in a few stock piles, especially of manganese. The strategic metals might be purchased at low points in the business cycle, as a fillip to languishing international trade.

Rubber, silk, coffee, and tea are the nonmetallic strategic and critical raw materials that the United States lacks. Coffee, an essential as an army morale maintainer, can be had in quantity from South and Central America. Tea, an absolute necessity for British troops, could be dispensed with by Americans in a pinch. Nor n perimentation, nylon will almost certainly be adequate for parachutes and powder bags.

THIS CHANGING WORLD—GOODS OR GOLD—HOW GOLD RUSH COULD BE MITIGATED BY MORE IMPORTS OF USEFUL COMMODITIES—TYING UP EXTRA PURCHASES WITH STORAGE FOR DEFENSE

(By H. B. Elliston)

There's nothing new in buying and storing useful goods. Storage against emergency goes clear back to Joseph, and was an essential part of the economy of both imperial Rome and traditional China. Of late years, too, every country in Europe has adopted it. Even in Norway nearly 2 years ago I discovered the legislators discussing a buying scheme.

a buying scheme.

Why it hasn't hitherto figured in American calculations is probably because so many Americans think of the United States as self-sufficient. A fond delusion. From time to time I have itemized articles of American use for which the United States is dependent upon others. Some, it is true, are luxuries, but many are necessities, particularly in a country which must be armed as well as provided for in a world given over to economic conflict.

The outline of a buying scheme is already set out in an old bill. But the bill, proposed by Senator Elbert D. Thomas, of Utah, remains in storage, instead of the objects of it, even though the contemplated outlay is absurdly modest. What is wanted is a Thomas bill brought up to date, and it should provide for the acquisition and storage of these foreign commodities—manganese, chromium, tin, tungsten, nickel, rubber, quinine, coconut shells, quartz, crystal, silk, wool, manila fiber, and coffee.

If the supply of one of these commodities were interrupted, then some important industry would be affected; and if more than one were impeded from coming to America, then American living standards would suffer; and I know of no surer way of stumbling into war than seeing other people's war interfere with your living standards.

standards.

America could get most of these commodities relatively cheap. Silk has been skyrocketing of late, but the remainder are on the bargain counter. Let an emergency come, however, and Uncle Sam would have to pay through the nose, as he has paid before, for some of these vital commodities. The need for early action is military as well as economic. The spectacle of Japan drawing closer to Malaysia should turn American statesmanship to policy making with regard to both rubber and tin.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. LODGE. It is my understanding that when the Senate shall reconvene the pending question will be the amendment which I have offered.

Mr. BARKLEY. The status of the bill will be just as it is now. It is the unfinished business, with the pending amendment undisposed of.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I ask whether or not the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Lodge] was read into the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will say to the Senator from Washington that it will be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. BARKLEY. It will also be printed separately.

Mr. LODGE. My amendment was read into the RECORD. The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state that the amendment will be printed in the usual form.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, what was the statement made by the Chair?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair said that the amendment offered by the Senator from Massachusetts, as modified by him, will be printed in the usual form, as well as printed in the RECORD.

Mr. McNARY. As modified.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Yes.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGE REFERRED

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Lucas in the chair), as in executive session, laid before the Senate a message from the President of the United States submitting the nomination of Frederick I. Thompson, of Alabama, to be a member of the Federal Communications Commission for the unexpired portion of the term of 7 years from July 1, 1934, vice Eugene O. Sykes, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

RECESS TO THURSDAY

Mr. BARKLEY. I move that the Senate take a recess until Thursday next at 12 o'clock noon.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 2 o'clock and 40 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until Thursday, March 30, 1939, at 12 o'clock meridian.

NOMINATION

Executive nomination received by the Senate March 28, 1939 FEDERAL COMMUNICATIONS COMMISSION

Frederick I. Thompson, of Alabama, to be a member of the Federal Communications Commission for the unexpired portion of the term of 7 years from July 1, 1934, vice Eugene O. Sykes.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

TUESDAY, MARCH 28, 1939

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Eternal God, we thank Thee that Thine only begotten Son taught us to say "Our Father"; in these undying words are our utmost need and hope. We praise Thee that here is our spiritual fortune; may it glow with vision and inflame with power. Since we cannot by searching find Thee out, may we strive to learn of Thee by becoming more like our Elder Brother. Look upon us; love us and prepare us to know Him better. May we patiently bear with human infirmities as Thou dost bear with ours. We earnestly entreat Thee that our great country, founded upon thousands of precious influences, may continue to be strong for justice, goodness, and the right. Oh, may the Christ, "The Light of the World," reinvade our skies with clear, white solemnity until all selfish shrines are no more; thus spiritual night shall fade before the glorious illumination of the inner dawn. In the name of our Saviour. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Frazier, its legislative clerk, announced that the Senate had passed, with amendments, in which the concurrence of the House is requested, a bill of the House of the following title:

The message also announced that the Senate insists upon its amendments to the foregoing bill, requests a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. Thomas of Oklahoma, Mr. HAYDEN, Mr. Overton, Mr. Russell, Mr. Sheppard, Mr. Townsend, and Mr. Bridges to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the following resolution:

Senate Resolution 112 (March 27, 1939)

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with profound sorrow the announcement of the death of Hon. CLARENCE W. TURNER, late a Representative from the State of Tennessee.

family of the deceased.

Resolved, That as a further mark of respect to the memory of the deceased Representative the Senate do now adjourn.

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 4425) entitled "An act to provide for reorgan-izing agencies of the Government, and for other purposes."

RECIPROCAL-TRADE AGREEMENTS

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, considerable has been said about the effect the reciprocal tariffs have had on agricultural products. I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD at this point, to answer that argument.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

WHEN DID THE UNITED STATES LOSE ITS EXPORT MARKETS FOR AGRICUL-TURAL PRODUCTS?

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, there has been considerable talk regarding the loss of export markets for agricultural products in recent years. It might be worthwhile to examine not only the trend in agricultural exports but also the import figures for a number of years. The following table furnishes this information:

Value of foreign trade of United States in agricultural products1

Calendar year	Imports of agricultural products	Exports of domestic agricultural products
1929	$2, 218, 000, 000 1, 468, 000, 000 1, 007, 000, 000 668, 000, 000 743, 000, 000 858, 000, 000 1, 106, 000, 000 1, 307, 000, 000 1, 579, 000, 000 955, 637, 000	$1,693,000,000 1,201,000,000 821,000,000 662,000,000 694,000,000 748,000,000 710,000,000 797,000,000 827,629,000

1 Official figures.

It is seen that in 1929, the last year before the Tariff Act of 1930 went into effect, the agricultural exports amounted to $1,693,000,000. At the low of the depression in 1932 these exports had dropped to $662,000,000, or a net loss of more than a billion dollars. Those responsible for the action which brought about this result would, of course, like for these figures to be forgotten. They keep harping on the current exports when the situation is not half as bad as when the people relieved them from the responsibility of running the Government. It is seen that since 1932, in spite of droughts and other factors, the exports of agricultural products in 1938 amounted to $827,629,000, which was greater than any year since 1930. This export figure for agricultural products was some $150,000,000 more than for 1932. Once and for all, such figures should put a stop to the yelping about the loss of the export markets for agricultural products. That market was lost within the brief period from 1929 to 1932, when we lost more than a billiondollar market for agricultural products. It little behooves members of the party then in power to state or imply that this administration is injuring agriculture by taking the farmer out of the foreign market.

On the other side, it is seen that the agricultural imports in 1929 amounted to $2,218,000,000. As with agricultural exports, the imports decreased to a very low level in 1932. Also as with exports, there has been a rise since that time, except for 1938, when the agricultural imports, including coffee, silk, rubber, tea, bananas, and cocoa and other tropical products not produced in the United States, were not much more than half of what they were even in 1930, the year of the Hawley-Smoot Act. Agricultural imports were even below the 1931 figures during 1938. Total exports from the United States for the first 2 months of 1939 exceeded imports by $95,000,000, in spite of the almost daily whining about the country's being flooded with imports.

A leader of the opposition to trade agreements keeps reiterating that the Tariff Act of 1930 had nothing to do with the loss of export trade from 1929 to 1932. He repeats that the depression started before the Tariff Act of 1930 went into effect. To his mind that seems to be a simple and comforting answer to the responsibility of his party. He forgets, however, that the tariff revision was anticipated after the election of Mr. Hoover in November 1928 and that in fact the Republicans prepared for hearings on their so-called limited tariff revision in December of that year. In May of 1929 when the House bill was introduced, the country and the world saw what was coming and naturally this unsettled conditions. The complete collapse, however, did not come until 5 or 6 months later. The opposition cannot get away with the old alibi that the depression struck us before the nefarious Hawley-Smoot Act went into effect; we frequently have thunder and lightning before a storm strikes.

The Republicans might be reminded of the protest against the Tariff Act of 1930 by more than a thousand economists when they said to Mr. Hoover in May 1930:

America is now facing the problem of unemployment. Her labor can find work only if her factories can sell their products. Higher tariffs would not promote such sales. We cannot increase employment by restricting trade. American industry, in the present crisis, might well be spared the burden of adjusting itself to new schedules of protective duties.

Finally, we would urge our Government to consider the bitterness which a policy of higher tariffs would inevitably inject into our international relations. * * Tariff war does not furnish good soil for the growth of world peace.

Those responsible for carrying out that tariff against this protest now attempt in every conceivable way to hide their guilt and responsibility by calling attention to some temporary and unforeseen conditions. It is an old scheme to point an accusing finger at others when you are condemned before the world

In recent days the comforting but unsound phrase "the American market for the American farmer" has been bandied about in the House. The American market for the American manufacturer is just as sound and the one will inevitably follow the other. When American farmers and American manufacturers both decide that they want the American market and the American market alone for their products, then and only then can they enforce this glib slogan and live entirely at home. When they decide that they do not desire to buy or sell abroad, then they can have the American market to themselves.

Any time a Member of the House gets off the slogan, "The American market for the American farmer," pounds his fists against the desk, beats his breast, and waves the flag, he gets applause. The American farmer nearly succeeded in having the American market and the American market alone in 1932 and 1933. What were the results? Imports of agricultural products in any way competitive with American products were almost nonexistent. What happened to farm exports? They almost reached the vanishing point. Did all this bring good times?

In 1932, when we had almost lost our foreign trade, the cash farm income reached the all-time low for modern times of $4,328,000,000. In 1938, when the opposition alleges that times were so hard for American farmers, the cash farm income was $7,625,000,000, or $3,300,000,000 greater than for 1932, and the farm price index was 95 percent as compared with 65 percent. Agricultural imports, including coffee, rubber, tea, bananas, cocoa, and other tropical products not produced in the United States, were about $300,000,000 greater in 1938 than in 1932. Take that whole difference from the difference in the farm incomes for these years and we still have a clear farm income gain of $3,000,000,000 in 1938 over 1932. If the farmers were satisfied with the conditions of 1932, and possibly worse, they can have the American market and the American market alone for their products. I do not believe they were.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. MASON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the Record upon the subject of the political significance of the word "appeasement."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

RELIEF OF HOME OWNERS' LOAN CORPORATION MORTGAGORS

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute and to extend my remarks in the Record.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Mr. Speaker, on January 3, I introduced a bill, H. R. 40, to amend the Home Owners' Loan Act of 1933, to reduce the rate of interest on home loans to 4 percent, and to extend the amortization period to 30 years, in order to try and bring relief to the home owners throughout the country who are now holding H. O. L. C. mortgages.

From information I have received, there are thousands of owners who have fallen behind on their payments and are threatened with foreclosures. In many cases they have paid their interest, taxes, and part of the principal, and because they could not keep up their principal payments they are in danger of losing their homes.

When the H. O. L. C. bill was passed in the Seventy-third Congress it was intended to bring relief to the distressed property owners throughout the country.

There is not any question in my mind as to the fact that it did bring relief to many, but at the present time there are those who, because of their financial condition, are unable to meet their monthly payments as required by the act itself.

The object of my bill is to extend the time of payment from 15 years to 30 years and reduce the interest rate from 5 to 4 percent, as I understand from the daily press there are many banks today offering loans on property from 4 to $4\frac{1}{2}$ percent.

I personally know of many cases where persons have invested their entire life savings amounting in some instances from five to ten thousand dollars in homes. These citizens who have made such investments, are the kind that should be encouraged in these trying times, and I appeal to Congress to enact legislation to bring a measure of relief to them.

The Home Owners' Loan Corporation was created by Congress and in foreclosing mortgages are carrying out the mandate placed upon them by the act. They have no other choice except they may be temporarily lenient toward some deserving property owners. However, in all cases they must collect the interest and principal in the number of years specified by the act.

Therefore, I appeal to you, the Members of Congress to try and get the Banking and Currency Committee of the House to report my bill out favorably, or any other bill that will extend the time of amortization and lower the interest rates, so as to bring relief to those good citizens holding H. O. L. C. mortgages. [Applause.]

A bill (H. R 40) to amend the Home Owners' Loan Act of 1933, to reduce the rate of interest on home loans to 4 percent, and to extend the amortization period to 30 years

Be it enacted, etc., That the fourth sentence of section 4 (d) of the Home Owners' Loan Act of 1933, as amended (U. S. C., 1934 ed., title 12, sec. 1463 (d)), is amended to read as follows: "Each home mortgage or other obligation or lien so acquired shall be carried as a first lien or refinanced as a home mortgage by the Corporation on the basis of the price paid therefor by the Corporation, and shall be amortized by means of monthly payments sufficient to retire the interest and principal within a period of not to exceed 30 years; but the amortization payments of any home owner may be made quarterly, semiannually, or annually, if in the judgment of the Corporation the situation of the home owner judgment of the Corporation the situation of the home owner requires it."

SEC. 2. The fifth sentence of section 4 (d) of the Home Owners' Loan Act of 1933, as amended (U. S. C., 1934 ed., title 12, sec. 1463 (d)), is amended to read as follows: "Interest on the unpaid balance of the obligation of the home owner to the Corporation shall be at a rate not exceeding 4 percent per annum."

SEC. 3. The amendments made by sections 1 and 2 of this act shall apply only to interest and principal amortization payments falling due on dates occurring after 30 days from the date of enactment of this act.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. LEAVY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a radio address delivered last evening by the Attorney General of the United States.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. McGEHEE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and include therein an article by Hon. Lewis Jacobs, national Democratic committeeman for Mississippi, appearing in the Washington Post on March 5.

THE SUGAR-BEET INDUSTRY

Mr. JOHNS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. JOHNS. Mr. Speaker and Members of the House, I am going to bring to your attention briefly this morning some very serious protests which I have received from the beet-sugar manufacturers.

At a meeting of the United States Department of Agriculture, held in Chicago, Ill., in February of this year, Mr. B. H. Benidt, senior agricultural economist, in charge of the sugarbeet unit for the Sugar Division, submitted a proposal on marketing allotments for 1939, that would force many companies, so they advise me, to carry over some of the sugar produced in 1938 until 1940, and not permit these companies to sell a bag of sugar produced in 1939 until 1940. would create a condition which, these companies advise me, threatens their existence as an industry, and they say tends to defeat one of the purposes of the new Sugar Act of 1937, namely; orderly marketing.

One of the companies in my own district have about 1,500 farmers delivering beets to their factory, and other factory districts taking beets in this area have a greater number of growers. It has been the policy of one of these factories to finance the growers in their operations, including the working and delivery of their crops, and it has been their practice to make an initial settlement with them on December 15. It has also been the policy of the industry, so they advise me, to sell a liberal portion of their current production to help finance their operations, but if Mr. Benidt's proposal is carried out, they would not be able to do this, and the farmers would have to wait until 1940 for payment of 1939 deliveries, or until such time as the producers can market the sugar produced from their 1939 beets. This would necessitate a heavy burden on the producers and which there is no reason for them to be required to carry. In addition to this it would create a condition where on the 1st of January 1940, a market condition would develop that would enforce the rapid sale of sugar and defeat one of the purposes of the act, namely, orderly marketing.

The allotments are not fair, efficient, nor equitable to the growers and processors in my district, nor are they fair to those producing in other districts. The processing companies in this area during the past 5 years have on the average marketed in each calendar year their total January 1 effective inventories, plus 33.39 percent of the new-crop sugar produced in the fall of the year. Similarly the processing companies in this area during the past 5 years have on the average marketed in each calendar year a quantity of sugar equal to 153.4 percent of their January 1 effective inventories.

Comparing these figures with the figures for all beet-sugar processing companies in the United States as a whole during the same past 5 years shows that the processing companies in this area sell a much larger proportion of new-crop sugar than do all the processing companies in the United States as a whole. All the processing companies in the United States as a whole have averaged during the past 5 years marketings in each calendar year which were equal to their January 1 effective inventories plus 20.37 percent of new-crop sugar produced in the fall of the year. Similarly all the processing companies in the United States as a whole during the past 5 years have marketed on an average in each calendar year a quantity of sugar equal to 125.35 percent of their January 1 effective inventories.

The reason that the processing companies in this area have marketed sugar in this manner is:

First. Due to climatic conditions, the storage of sugar over long periods of time is unsatisfactory and expensive; and

Second. The financing of companies in this area is on the basis that all the January 1 effective inventories will be marketed in the current year, plus about 20 to 35 percent of new-

I also have received a serious protest from the manufacturers of beet tools for the handling of the beet crop. They advise me that it affects over 4,000 beet farmers and many more workers in about 35 counties in Wisconsin. For a great many years they have been privileged to furnish tools for the purpose of raising beets for sugar purposes and it is the feeling of the Wisconsin farmers and the sugar companies that the authority at present time is being exercised in such a way that it is detrimental to the domestic sugar-beet industry, which is a very important industry in the United States.

I have been asked, as their Representative in Congress, to take such steps as necessary to divest the Secretary of Agriculture of the dictatorial powers that give him the life and death control he now has over the beet industry which has brought about such disastrous results in the price of their product.

I have also received a very serious protest from the State of Montana in which they advise that only 29.5 percent of domestic sugar sales are allotted to domestic producers at present. Cuba has practically the same amount and our insular possessions 41.5 percent. American producers are rightfully entitled to all of the domestic market that they are able to supply. The import quotas of raw sugar as set at the present time have brought the farmers, the workers in the beet-sugar factories, and the laborers in the beet fields in direct competition with the poorly paid labor in the sugarproducing territories outside of continental United States; such competition has the direct result of lowering the standard of living of these farmers and laborers to a level incompatible with the American way of life. Sugar beets can be effectively grown at a reasonable profit and there is no food more valuable to the consumer in nutritive worth even at a much higher price than at present. The production of sugar beets provides employment at good wages for many times as many workers as the same acreage of other crops adapted to this latitude and any control of the expansion of sugarbeet acreage means more unemployment and more relief clients who could otherwise make a living in this industry.

There is grave danger that the present policy, if continued, will result in many now employed in this country losing their means of livelihood, thereby further increasing the already tremendous burden of unemployment. Our beet growers, if permitted to make a reasonable amount of money are, due to their higher standard of living, many times better customers for eastern industry than are foreign sugar laborers and planters.

The expansion of the domestic production of sugar should be encouraged as a problem of national economy and defense; the acute shortage of sugar during the World War demonstrated our need for much higher domestic sugar production in time of emergency.

I am in hopes that the Members of this body will secure a copy of Senate bill 69, introduced by Senator Ellender, and will study it carefully and support it when it reaches the House floor for consideration. In order to bring the provisions of this bill to your immediate attention, I desire to quote the bill, which is very short:

A bill relating to the apportionment of shares of the sugar crop for 1939 and 1940

for 1939 and 1940

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of the Sugar Act of 1937, the proportionate share (expressed in terms of planted acreage) for any farm, as determined by the Secretary pursuant to the provisions of section 302 of such act, of the quantity of the crop of sugar beets or sugarcane for the calendar years 1939 and 1940 required to be processed to enable the area in which such crop of sugar beets or sugarcane is grown to meet the quota (and provide a normal carry-over inventory) shall be so fixed or adjusted that the share of such crop for such farm shall be an amount not less than the amount of the share of the 1938 crop for such farm.

[Applause.]

PROGRAM FOR TOMORROW

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute in order to ask a question.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered. There was no objection.

Mr. RAYBURN. When does the gentleman from Missouri intend to call up the conference report on the reorganiza-

Mr. COCHRAN. The intention is to call it up immediately after 12 o'clock tomorrow.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAYBURN. I yield, Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Could the gentleman inform us what else is to be considered tomorrow?

Mr. RAYBURN. If we complete the pending bill today, which I hope we may, we will have general debate on the Department of Labor appropriation bill.

Mr. COCHRAN. I will say to the gentleman from Texas that, of course, the conference report cannot be called up on tomorrow, Calendar Wednesday, unless the House agrees.

Mr. RAYBURN. In reply to the gentleman I will say that the chairmen of the different committees who have the call have agreed that Calendar Wednesday business may be dispensed with tomorrow.

ARMY MEDICAL LIBRARY AND MUSEUM

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, my remarks at this time will be directed principally to the membership of the Appropriations Committee as well as to all Members of the House.

At the last session of the Congress I introduced a bill to provide for a new structure for the protection of the Army Medical Library and Museum. The bill was favorably reported and passed by both Houses of Congress and signed by the President.

There is involved in the library practically $25,000,000 worth of books. The library contains more than 600 volumes that cannot be duplicated and have not been reprinted. It is admitted to be the most valuable collection of medical authorities on the face of the globe, and it is at all times available to libraries and medical authorities throughout the country

I have in my hand an editorial from the Washington Star on the subject of the Army Medical Library, and I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks to include this short editorial.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. MAY. I have made these few remarks to emphasize the importance of early action by the Committee on Appropriations, and to say to them that the bill authorizes the appropriation of the sum of $3,750,000 for the construction of a new building to house and secure this library of more than 500,000 volumes and about the same number of manuscripts. I wish, Mr. Speaker, to say the present building is wholly insufficient for the protection of this most valuable collection of books, and it has no security against fire or the hazard of fire and may be lost at any time. I merely want to relieve myself of any further responsibility for the safety of this valuable library.

The editorial referred to is as follows:

[From the Washington Star] ARMY MEDICAL LIBRARY

Washington is the site of the largest medical library in the world—a total of more than a million volumes.

Very nearly everything that has ever been printed about the functions of maladies of the human body in any language during the past half century can be found among them. This great collection brings scholars here from all over the world. It renders invaluable service to that science which is closest to human interests—the science that is continually adding months and years to men's lives.

This collection is the formula to the description of the formula that the formula to the formula that the formula tha are making Washington a world medical center.

This collection is the Army Medical Library. It far transcends, of course, the ordinary needs of members of the Army Medical Corps. It is, perhaps, the most significant single unit in the system of hospitals and universities and research laboratories which are making Washington a world medical center.

This library is housed in a rather decrepit red brick building behind the National Museum, erected in 1887, and altogether inadequate for its purpose. Manuscripts, records, and books that are irreplaceable are exposed to the danger of fire and the hazards of dust, dirt, and decay.

In 1919 a site for a new building was acquired near the Army Medical Center. Congress has never seen fit to make the necessary appropriations for a suitable building. At the last session a structure to cost $3,750,000 was authorized, but no money was appropriated. There is a long gap between an authorization and an appropriation—a gap that sometimes never is bridged.

Groups of the medical profession all over the country are joining with the Army doctors in urging that this project be delayed no longer. There could be few better investments for the Nation—an investment in medical knowledge which is, in effect, an investment in longer life, less suffering, a more physically and mentally efficient Army, and more physically and mentally efficient people.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE APPROPRIATION BILL, 1940

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I renew my motion; and, pending that, I would like to reach some agreement with the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. Lambertson] as to the time for debate on the parity amendment, in which there seems to be considerable interest.

I am wondering if we can reach an agreement to have 2 hours of general debate, one-half of the time to be controlled by myself and one-half by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. LAMBERTSON] on the parity amendment. Would that be agreeable to the gentleman from Kansas?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

gentleman can agree.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I yield. Mr. DIRKSEN. There seem to be three diverse interests on this amendment-those who are entirely opposed, those who favor the language of the bill, and those who would like to have it increased. May I suggest to the chairman that he liberalize that somewhat and make it 3 hours instead of 2 hours?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I am very anxious to cooperate with the gentleman, but you will recall we originally considered 40 minutes on a side, and on request of the gentleman on that side I am extending the request to 1 hour on each side. We would like to finish this bill tonight. I hope the

Mr. LAMBERTSON. I do not think there are many other items that are controversial, and in view of the fact that there are these three groups or factions, why would not 2½ hours be satisfactory to the gentleman? I do not think it will take over an hour, aside from the 2½ hours that will be devoted to this amendment, to complete the bill.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, may I ask the gentleman from Missouri if the time will apply to the amendment and all amendments thereto?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. That is correct.

Mr. FERGUSON. Will control of the time be within the discretion of the Chair, or how will it be handled?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. It will be controlled by the two ranking members of the committee.

Mr. FERGUSON. Would it apply to the amendment and the amendments thereto?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. At the expiration of the time further amendments could be offered, but there would be no debate on them.

Mr. LAMBERTSON. I would suggest to the chairman of the subcommittee that our side will be liberal with the third

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. Speaker, I am still in doubt. Do I understand that this is further general debate or that this is to take the place of the debate on amendments under the 5-minute rule?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, pending the motion to go into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, I ask unanimous consent that 2 hours and 20 minutes' general debate be allowed on the parity provision of the bill and all amendments thereto, in lieu of time under the 5-minute rule, the time to be equally divided between and controlled by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. LAMBERTSON] and myself; that during the 2 hours and 20 minutes it may be in order to offer amendments in time yielded for debate.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, what was the gentleman's last reservation?

The SPEAKER. Let the Chair state the request of the

The gentleman from Missouri moves that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 5269, the agricultural appropriation bill, 1940; and pending that motion he asks unanimous consent that there may be 2 hours and 20 minutes of general debate in the Committee of the Whole on the so-called parity amendment to the bill and all amendments thereto, one-half to be controlled by himself and one-half to be controlled by the gentleman from Kansas; and that there be no debate under the 5-minute rule.

Mr. BRADLEY. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, do we have the assurance of the gentleman from Missouri that those who oppose this provision will have adequate time out of the two hours and a half?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. There will be 1 hour and 10 minutes on this side and 1 hour and 10 minutes on the other side; and, of course, those who are opposed to the provision will be recognized, as well as those who favor it.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, does the request of the gentleman from Missouri mean that there will be no debate on this paragraph under the 5-minute rule other than the debate regarding which request is being made at this time?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. We are substituting general debate for debate under the 5-minute rule.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. Speaker, may I ask the chairman of the subcommittee if this precludes 5 minutes' debate under the ordinary rules of the House when an amendment is

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. We are merely substituting general debate for debate under the 5-minute rule.

Mr. FERGUSON. Then the Member offering amendments cannot have even 5 minutes in which to present it?

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I think we should have a complete understanding about this. The last remark of the gentleman from Oklahoma indicated to me clearly that his mind and that of the gentleman from Missouri had not met. The gentleman from Missouri, in answer to his question, as I understood it, said to him that when time was yielded to him under the 1 hour and 10 minutes on this side he could offer his amendment. Then the gentleman from Oklahoma asked if that would preclude him from having 5 minutes on his amendment.

I ask that the Chair restate the request of the gentleman from Missouri.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent that there may be 2 hours and 20 minutes of general debate in the Committee of the Whole on the socalled parity amendment and all amendments thereto; and if this agreement is entered into, there will be no debate under the 5-minute rule on any amendments that may be offered after the expiration of the 2 hours and 20 minutes.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, that would not prevent a Member's offering any amendment he might desire subsequent to the expiration of the 2 hours and 20 minutes.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. It would not; but amendments offered after the expiration of the 2 hours and 20 minutes could not be debated.

Mr. TABER. But such amendment would not be debatable.

Mr. RAYBURN. That is right.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will answer the gentleman from New York, so that the RECORD may be perfectly clear as to the nature of the request and its effect. It would be permissible to offer any amendment during the 2 hours and 20 minutes discussion that was in order under the rules of the

Mr. TABER. But it would be in order subsequent to the expiration of the debate only to offer amendments.

Mr. RAYBURN. There would be nothing to prevent a Member's offering an amendment.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, a proposition is coming up in which there is general interest—so general, in fact, that when we get into the Committee of the Whole it will be necessary, if this agreement is not entered into, to move to close debate after a reasonable time. It will be necessary, in order to accommodate all those who want to speak, for somebody to control the time. It is not in order under the rules, either on motion or by unanimous consent, to control the time under the 5-minute rule. But by substituting general debate for the 5-minute debate we can accomplish the same result-dividing the time equally and giving each side control of half the time; and any Member who wants to offer amendments will have an opportunity to be heard.

Mr. SABATH. But the Speaker will be foreclosed from making a speech or being recognized to speak on his amend-

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. If a Member desires to offer an amendment he will apply to the gentleman from Kansas or myself and will be allotted 5 minutes.

Mr. SABATH. He will have to offer the amendment and before a vote is taken he will be foreclosed from explaining the amendment.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. No. He will have 5 minutes which he is granted to offer the amendment and speak on it. He will have 5 minutes to explain the amendment.

Mr. SABATH. But not at the time he offers the amendment.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Yes.

Mr. SABATH. Not when the vote is taken. I do not know how much thought the gentleman has given to his unanimous-consent request, but I fear Members will be foreclosed from discussing amendments. They may have good substantial amendments and they cannot speak on the amendment after the general debate has been exhausted.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, the gentleman from Missouri has told the House in good faith, of course, that if these gentlemen who have bona fide amendments will apply to him the gentleman from Missouri will yield 5 minutes in which the Members may offer their amendments and speak on them.

Mr. SABATH. But the vote will not be taken on the

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. A Member may offer his amendment and discuss it in the 5 minutes allotted to him.

Mr. SABATH. Is it not a fact, if I should offer an amendment in the first half hour and speak on the amendment, I cannot speak on it when the amendment is voted on?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Under the request the gentleman offers the amendment during general debate.

The regular order was demanded.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry. The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. FERGUSON. If a point of order is made against the section after general debate is concluded, what effect will that have on amendments offered to the section if the point of order is sustained at the conclusion of general debate?

The SPEAKER. A point of order would have to be made before debate began on the paragraph or amendment as the case may be. A point of order would come too late after the matter had been debated.

Mr. FERGUSON. Would a point of order be in order under this general-debate agreement? Could a point of order be made during the general debate?

The SPEAKER. A point of order may be made after the paragraph is read or after an amendment is offered.

Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Cannon]?

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands the gentleman from New York [Mr. MARCANTONIO] objects to the unanimous-consent request?

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Speaker, I do.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Cannon] that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 5269) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture and for the Farm Credit Administration for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 5269, the agricultural appropriation bill, 1940, with Mr. Parman in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The parliamentary situation is as follows: On Saturday last the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. JOHNSON] offered an amendment and spoke on it for 8 minutes. His time expired, and the debate was limited to 8 minutes on the amendment.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that time for debate on this amendment be extended for 5 minutes, the time to be allotted to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. Johnson].

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON]?

There was no objection.

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Chairman, for the information of the House I ask unanimous consent that the amendment may be again read by the Clerk.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. TARVER]?

There being no objection, the Clerk again read the amendment, as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Johnson of Oklahoma: Page 88, line 3, strike out the period, insert a colon and the following: "Provided, That of the funds made available in this paragraph not exceeding $500,000 shall be available for general administrative expenses in the District of Columbia, and not exceeding $1,300,000 of such funds may be expended in the District of Columbia for personal services in connection with research and investigations, account in a particular stations and planning man reproduction and feebcooperative relations and planning, map reproduction, and technical supervisory and inspectional activities."

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Oklahoma desire to be heard on his amendment?

Mr. TARVER. May I state to the Chair that the gentleman from Oklahoma was heard for 8 minutes on his amendment on Saturday.

The CHAIRMAN. By unanimous consent, 5 additional minutes have been granted him. Does the gentleman from Oklahoma desire to be heard?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, it was the understanding of the committee that the request of the chairman of the committee was that I close debate.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. TARVER] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Chairman, I hope the members of the Committee will give me attention during the 5 minutes I have. The opponents of my position, the supporters of the amendment, have had and will have altogether 16 minutes as against the 5 minutes allotted to me.

This amendment, if adopted by the House, will very seriously cripple the work of the Soil Conservation Service. I do not know what you think of the Soil Conservation Service. I believe it is one of the best institutions for which this administration is responsible. But certainly, whether it is a good institution or not, if it is a thing that ought to be got rid of, the way to get rid of it is not by so hampering it in its administrative activities as to make it unable to properly

The effect of this amendment will be to transfer about $434,000 now being used for personnel services in the District of Columbia to work of similar character in the field. When the gentleman from Oklahoma pointed out that in his opinion insufficient personnel was available for work in soilconservation districts he apparently had the idea that this amendment would correct that situation, if it exists. As a matter of fact, it would not. The money available for work in soil-conservation districts is included in the operations item in the justifications. The transfer of $434,000 from the personnel item to the field would not make that money available for work of that sort in soil-conservation districts but would simply mean that the work that is now being conducted in the city of Washington would have to be transferred to the field and conducted there, and would consequently add to the expense of the Soil Conservation Service in carrying on exactly the same character of operations it is now carrying on.

The gentleman from Oklahoma speaks of the vastly expanded organization which there is in the Soil Conservation Service. The organization is substantially the same as it has been ever since Congress made provision for enlarging it and enlarging its work. The Soil Conservation Service by reason of the mandate of Congress has been vastly increased. When that increase came about your Subcommittee on Agricultural Appropriations spent days going over with the officials of the Soil Conservation Service the type and character and number of personnel that would be required both in Washington and in the field, and the organization as at present set up represents our judgment as to how these matters ought to be fixed insofar as they can be fixed in an appropriation bill. We have gotten along very well with this set-up for, I believe, 3 years, but the gentleman from Oklahoma came in at the last hour at the meeting of our subcommittee, when we had no opportunity to question the authorities of the Soil Conservation Service regarding his contentions, and made an appeal that a general reduction be made in this personnel item in this appropriation on his idea that it would be used in the soil-conservation districts in the field. The gentleman had no specific information, and if you will examine the record of his evidence in the hearings you will find that to be true. The gentleman had no idea of how much money would be needed in order to provide this additional service in the soil-conservation districts, or if he did have such an idea he failed to give the committee the benefit of his informtion.

I take the position that after your committee has carefully studied this matter, as has been true, and has approved this set-up in the form in which it now exists, that the House ought not, upon the appeal of the gentleman from Oklahoma, apparently actuated by some of his differences with officials of the Soil Conservation Service, to disrupt that setup and to cut off $434,000 from the appropriation now being used in the District of Columbia. The effect of it would be to transfer it to the field for use in the same type of work there, which would necessarily have to be carried on at far greater expense than it is being carried in the city of Washington at the present time. The gentleman may have some merit in his contentions with regard to the treatment accorded Members of Congress by the Soil Conservation Service. That is not a matter we can control by this appropriation. There may be some merit in his position that additional funds ought to be provided in the operations fund for work in the soil-conservation districts. If that is true, that objective would not be accomplished by the adoption of this amendment. If that is true, the subcommittee of which I am a member would be pleased to hear evidence at any time when we are considering further appropriation bills for this Department as to the number and character of personnel necessary in the soil-conservation districts and to provide adequate funds therefor. However, this thing ought not to be handled by way of an amendment which does not affect the purpose which the gentleman has in mind and which would have the effect, which I stated in the beginning. of seriously hampering and crippling the work of the Soil Conservation Service in Washington.

I ask you to look at pages 3358-3359 of the Record to get the statement of the Soil Conservation Service regarding this matter. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Dirksen] is recognized for 3 minutes.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, the procedure of the gentleman from Oklahoma is not unusual because the amendment simply undertakes to fix a limit on administrative expenses in Washington, D. C., and to fix a limit on the amount that may be employed for research in the District of Columbia. The effect of the amendment, of course, will be to cut down about $52,000 in administrative expenses.

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. DIRKSEN. I cannot yield; I have only 3 minutes.

Mr. TARVER. The gentleman is making a statement that is not in accordance with the facts.

Mr. DIRKSEN. There will also be $434,636 less to spend on research that is being done in the District of Columbia. My notion is that this is regular procedure, and all you have to determine is whether it is feasible and well-advised under the circumstances. My own opinion on the matter is that it can very well be done. The Soil Conservation Service was set up to do work in the field, and, like so many other bureaus, it has gotten topheavy. It is less than 4 years old, yet the total personnel of the Soil Conservation Service today is over 9,519. This shows how these bureaus can grow in a short space of time. Out of the $24,000,000 that is made available in this bill, over $18,500,000 is to be expended for personal services, and so often they concentrate their activities in an office here in the Nation's Capital when they ought to be out behind a contour plow somewhere in Kansas or Illinois or elsewhere.

The only purpose of the amendment of the gentleman from Oklahoma is to constrain and to compel the expenditure of more of these funds in the field and a little less money in the District of Columbia, and in that respect I think it is well advised, and I think it can be well supported, and that it is regular procedure; and I shall suggest to the Members on both sides that they vote for the amendment of the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. Johnson]. I think he is on pretty fair ground. [Applause.]

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Dirksen] has explained the purpose of the pending amendment very accurately and forcefully. This is not altogether a personal matter on my part, but it is a sincere effort on the part of Members on both sides of the aisle to have a major portion of the money that this Congress is appropriating for Soil Conservation Service spent out in the field, where it belongs, rather than the conservation of so much soil in the Washington office of this Bureau.

Now, the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Tarver], my good friend and a distinguished member of this committee, who has just made an able defense of his position, began his statement; if I recall correctly, saying that if my amendment is adopted it will seriously cripple this agency of the Government. That is an ancient, worn-out cry that has been made from time to time by many boards, bureaus, and agencies of government. It is the same answer we hear from every department of the Government when committees make an effort to curtail their rapidly expanding functions in the District of Columbia.

The gentleman from Georgia has suggested that you turn to your RECORD of last Saturday and read the statement of the Soil Conservation Service in opposition to the pending amendment. I join my good friend from Georgia in that suggestion. Frankly, I do not believe the Chief of the Soil Conservation Service, for whom I have much respect, dictated that statement. It is too vague and indefinite. You will find that the first two or three paragraphs of nearly an entire printed page haggles over figures. You will be interested in the statement, unsigned, but admittedly from someone in authority in the Soil Conservation Service. It is a rather lengthy dissertation as to whether my figures are correct and leaves the inference there is a difference of 50 cents between my figures and theirs. In my statement in support of this amendment I pointed out we propose to reduce the amount for personal services in the District of Columbia $52,000, and they say I am wrong. They say, in bold type, that my statement is incorrect. They say the amount is $52,000.50. [Laughter.] Can you imagine such a thing?

After having haggled over figures for nearly one-third of a printed page, this important epistle goes into some detail concerning that portion of my amendment curtailing research and says that my statement was wrong. They insist that my amendment not only includes research but also includes cooperative relations and planning. Yes; it does include a lot of planning—planning on the part of this Bureau in Washington, planning to perpetuate themselves in office, planning on bigger and fatter appropriations.

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Not right now. I shall be glad to yield to the gentleman in just a moment if I have the

But we must not overlook those important words, "cooperative relations." Be sure to get that. Read it over and over, then I suggest you go down to this Bureau and make some casual suggestions concerning some of your soil-conservation districts, or anything else that you or your people are vitally interested in. You will then be amused at these words, "cooperative relations." Certainly, it has not demonstrated much cooperative relations with the Congress of the United States, or with individual Members of this body.

But, getting back to this statement of the Soil Conservation Service, a little further on they take very serious exception to my statement and spend nearly one-third of a full printed page denying in no uncertain terms that I stated the policy correctly with reference to their attitude toward the Congress of the United States. Then, finally, after denying it over and over again, they say, and I quote from their statement, not mine:

While we have never prevented anyone from having friendly relations with Members of Congress, we do require—

Did you get those words?-

we do require that when official matters are discussed employees have full knowledge of the policies discussed and that the proper interpretations are given; further, that where the person making contacts does not have full knowledge, the matter be referred to the proper officials for interpretation.

Please bear in mind that the statement I am reading is not mine, but is a statement by them setting forth the policy of the Soil Conservation Service. These employees, although most of them are college graduates, are unable to interpret for themselves but must have someone else to do the interpreting for them.

But let me read further from this statement advising us of their policy. Now listen to this:

We believe that official contacts should be made with the knowledge of the administrative officer in charge and that at least an informal report be submitted subsequently

And so forth. Then they go on and on actually trying to explain and defend such an unreasonable and, I might add, un-American policy, which is exactly what I said the other day, that before an employee of the Soil Conservation Service is permitted to discuss official matters with Members of Congress, either at his office or over the telephone, he must first secure special permission to do so. It is also admitted that after such permission is given, in case same is given, that "at least an informal report be submitted subsequently." course they are very kind and considerate not to force the employee to make a written report on his contact with the Member of Congress, what he said to the Member, and exactly what the Member might have said to the employee. But why quote further? Why comment? Their own statement speaks louder than anything I might say.

Now, let us see about the latter part of their statement placed in the record. After having denied in no uncertain terms that letters have gone out from the Soil Conservation Service asking that those on the pay roll out in the States write letters to Congressmen, especially those members of the Committee on Appropriations, urging the Members of Congress to vote for additional appropriations, you will note they add that this is a fact, so far as they know. I hold in my hand here a letter that I shall be pleased to show any Member of Congress who desires to see it, which letter I am advised, was dictated by an official high in the Soil Conservation Service. This letter not only suggests but urges additional funds for the Soil Conservation Service. Frankly I have no objections to those interested urging additional funds. The fact is that I should like very much to see additional funds added to this bill for the purpose of aiding every organized soil-conservation district in Oklahoma as well as throughout the country. But why do they wish to deny the fact that they are trying to bring pressure for more funds? I am ready to fight for more funds—not for overhead but for the soil-conservation districts. I give notice now that I have submitted an amendment, which is now on the Speaker's desk and which, if adopted, will increase the sum to be expended $1,000,000. Our farmers are demanding more soil conservation in the field and less so-called conservation in Washington. In other words, hereafter let our slogan be "more conservation and less compensation." [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma IMr. Johnsonl.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. Cannon of Missouri) there were—ayes 141, noes 31.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, to say a word or two about the situation that we are facing in the next two or three paragraphs in the bill. The next paragraph relates to conservation and use of agricultural land resources, Department of Agriculture. Notwithstanding the fact that this item provides practically $70,000,-000 more than will be spent this year to pay out in benefits to the farmers, and is $14,000,000 above the Budget, I am not going to put up any fight against it, because I believe that the farmers are probably in need of this money, in view of the low prices, due to Secretary Wallace's agricultural program. The next paragraph on page 90 relating to parity payments I hope will be eliminated. I hope that a limitation will be placed upon the conservation and use of agricultural land resources so that no such amount as $10,000 may be paid to any one individual, as the law permits at the present time. If we are talking about relief, and are ever going to get anywhere, we have to spread it out somehow to giving this money in very small amounts to the farmers who are most needy, and if we give as much as $500 to any one farmer, it would seem to me as though that ought to be the maximum. I make this statement so that the membership may know what my personal position is. Frankly I do not believe in any operation such as raising the parity item to $500,000,000 in order to beat it. I shall oppose that just as I shall oppose the whole thing.

Mr. GILCHRIST. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment. As has been stated by the eminent gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER], we are now approaching in the next paragraph conservation payments. There is, as he has stated, a limitation in the law as to how much should be paid to any one man under that section of the present law. The limitation is $10,000. Personally, I can agree with the gentleman from New York that the present limitation be reduced. I have prepared and have in my pocket an amendment, but am yielding to the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. Case], who will present his own amendment on that proposition. We must have the amendment sooner or later to this provision of law, and the reason is that the present provision is very inequitable and unjust as it now stands. I wish the gentlemen on both sides could see the conditions as they now actually exist. In the State of Iowa, for example, the great insurance companies have taken over by foreclosure many hundreds of farms. These companies cannot limit themselves to the amount that is provided in the present law, because they lose money by doing so. Consequently, they go to their tenants and to their sharecroppers and say, "Bill, you cannot go into the program this year, you cannot get the benefit of these conservation payments, because we landlords will not allow you to do it. We do not profit by it ourselves; therefore you must stay out. We cannot allow you to go in or get any of this money." Now, this is unfair to the tenant. It is manifestly unjust. Congress ought to provide a modification in this law so as to allow the small folks to get a portion of these benefits, so that the sharecropper or the tenant can be allowed to go into the program and get his share of it. Therefore, the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. Case], after conference with some of us who are of like mind with him, is about to present an amendment.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GILCHRIST. For a question.
Mr. FERGUSON. Does the bill reported out of the Agricultural Committee lowering the maximum to $5,000 and taking the ceiling off if earned in conjunction with tenants meet the objections of the gentleman?

Mr. GILCHRIST. It meets most of them. I have presented a bill of my own which I think, of course, is better, but there are 434 other unrelenting Members of this Congress who do not seem quite to agree with me. Let us so provide in this bill or in some other bill that the poor fellow, the tenant and the sharecropper, can get some of this money. He cannot get it now. If the amendment to be proposed by the gentleman from South Dakota is carried, it will not add any money to the appropriations in the bill, but it will distribute it to those who ought to have it. The big farm baron should not have it, but the poor sharecropper or the tenant ought to have it. There is a peculiar thing about tenancy. If you go where land is cheap-very cheap-you will find the tenants are living in squalor and want; that they do not have the decencies required for physical living; they do not have the things you ought to provide for an ox. So let us do something for them. If you go into that portion of the country where land is at a high price, as, for example, in my district, then you will find that tenancy has been increasing by leaps and bounds. Land ordinarily in my district is worth $100 an acre, and there are counties where there are 70 percent of the people who are tenants, and yet they are not allowed to get any of the privileges of this act. I hope the amendment will be adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate upon this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 15 minutes, 10 minutes to be allotted to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Nelson] and 5 minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. Johnson].

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. Chairman, with but few exceptions, the best speech any Member of Congress makes is the one he never makes. 'This forum is both a sounding board and a slab. Too much talk on the part of a Member, unless he has something constructive to contribute, is dangerous. It has been said that we dig our graves with our teeth. It is equally true that we dig our political graves with our tongues. There are times, though, when to remain silent is to fail to do one's duty.

The debate on this bill has been long on fight and short on facts. Doubtless this situation is due to the excitement and heat of the discussion rather than to any desire to deceive. Some statements, though, call for correction.

For instance, we were told that in 1937 agricultural imports exceeded $3,400,000,000. The facts are that agricultural imports for the calendar year 1937 were valued at $1,579,000,000. Of this amount, competitive agricultural products represented but $868,000,000.

While I do not have the figures since June 30, 1938, and which would show a far more favorable agricultural trade balance for the United States, total agricultural imports for the fiscal year ending July 1, 1938, fell to $1,155,000,000 in value, only $588,000,000 worth being competitive agricultural imports. In other words, competitive agricultural imports decreased more than $200,000,000 as compared with the calendar year 1937. During the fiscal year ending June 30, 1938, agricultural exports amounted to $891,000,000, compared with only $588,000,000 in competitive agricultural imports.

We have many times been told of the vast importation of agricultural products. Corn is frequently referred to. Let us see what the figures show. For the calendar year 1937, 86,337,000 bushels of corn entered the United States.

Those of us directly interested in farming well remember the disastrous droughts of 1934 and 1936, the latter year resulting in a grain shortage of more than a billion bushels.

Let us look further, to the fiscal year 1937-38. For the full 12 months, and from the entire world, only 34,440,000 bushels of corn grown in other countries entered the United States. By comparison, how much is this? My answer is that one county in the congressional district which I have the honor to represent has in a single season grown one-sixth as much corn. Furthermore, there are now practically no corn imports. As to wheat, millions of bushels are being exported.

Much discussion has dealt with dairying. It must be that as we listened to the lamentations concerning the lovely land o'lakes many of us were disillusioned. We had thought of Wisconsin as an outstanding dairy State, made prosperous through the milk pail. Instead, it has been represented that this once great business has been and now is being operated at heavy loss. Seldom has poverty, present or impending, been given greater publicity. Almost tearfully we are told of how the dairy business in Wisconsin is disabled or dying. I shall not refer to it as a Wisconsin wail, but as a portrayal of a prosperity that is past or passing, it was perfect. Hired mourners could not have done more. During the debate on this bill, Wisconsin voices—not all—have, from this forum, broadcast the sad story.

Mr. Chairman, I do not charge that the professed interest in behalf of the dairy cow has been all "bull." Far from it. Far be it from me to question any man's sincerity. With any who have thus spoken—spoken in sorrow, I am sure—I sympathize. I love Wisconsin, the splendid State which gave to me the best neighbors, the dearest friends, I have in the world. I think of the glory of the Wisconsin that was, of the days when men from Missouri journeyed to dairy land of big dollars, there to purchase breeding stock, so that they, too, might share in the wealth that the blacks-and-whites and other breeds made possible. Can it be that gone are those days, gone forever? It may be so. For who, in view of the pessimistic picture painted, would go from any other State to Wisconsin, there to buy land or cattle?

Just here, Mr. Chairman, under permission granted, I shall include figures showing assistance that the Federal Government has given to the dairymen not only of Wisconsin but to other States.

Time and again it has been suggested that the Federal Government has done little or nothing for dairymen, and especially those of Wisconsin. So my curiosity, like my sympathy, was aroused. I started out to secure some facts, and here are a few that I have found: For the calendar year 1937, benefits paid to Wisconsin farmers for cooperation under the A. A. program were $10,868,000; and for the calendar year 1938, $11,737,000. In fairness it should be said that in these figures it is impossible to separate the different branches of farming.

Let us now look at the figures for the United States as a whole. Naturally these apply, first of all, to Wisconsin. The Commodity Credit Corporation was authorized by law to make loans up to $33,350,000 to the Dairy Products Marketing Association for the purchase of not to exceed 115,000,000 pounds of butter to stabilize the market. Butter purchased under this provision from July 1, 1938, to March 13, 1939, totaled 114,000,000 pounds during the summer and fall. Then the Federal Surplus Commodities Corporation stepped in and purchased in the markets another 26,000,000 pounds of butter for relief distribution during the winter. The Dairy Products Marketing Association butter was to be available for resale to the regular trade at seasonal increase in price. Of this Dairy Products Marketing Association butter, 47,000,000 pounds has been sold to the Federal Surplus Commodities Corporation for relief distribution.

We now turn to the price of butter and the effect Federal aided purchases had in holding up the market. From June 15, 1938, to July 15, 1938, the price of 92 grade butter in Chicago was 25½ cents. When the Federal Surplus Commodities Corporation entered the market, the price advanced to 25½ cents, where it remained until March 13, when the Federal Surplus Commodities Corporation announced suspension of purchases, and then the price fell to 21¾ cents, proving conclusively the advantage which dairymen had derived as a result of Government buying. On March 23, the latest figures I have at hand, the price had advanced until it was 24½ cents.

What I have said indicates in part the great help that the Federal Government has given to the dairy industry. The price was maintained as stated, despite production of butter at a very high level throughout the winter of 1938-39. To such an extent has butter been disposed of that on March 1, butter in storage, other than that then held by the Government or agencies referred to, amounted to less than one-half the yearly average amount in storage at this time.

While it is true that prices received for the finished product were lower than for some other seasons, the cost of production was very much less than when prices of feed were practically prohibitive. Those of us who maintain herds of cattle or handle other livestock, readily recall corn at $1.45 a bushel, as was the case following the drought of 1936. We want no repetition of such experiences, when, regardless of price received for livestock, there could be no profit.

Getting back to Government assistance, this was not limited to the purchase of butter. The Federal Surplus Commodities Corporation purchased millions of pounds of dried skim milk and more than 100,000,000 pounds of fluid milk. Then, too, previous to June 1938, the Federal Surplus Commodities Corporation had purchased several millions of pounds of cheese. In short, the figures as supplied by the Division of Statistical and Historical Research. Bureau of Agricultural Economics. United States Department of Agriculture—figures which time does not permit me to use in full-completely answer the question, "What have they done for the dairy farmer?"

Mr. Chairman, I do not criticize those who have here presented a dark picture of Wisconsin dairying. Every man should do his duty as he sees it. Still I wish that in this joyous season of bursting bud and fragrant flower-cherryblossom time in Washington-there might have been sounded a more optimistic note, a note less suggestive of the sad, lonesome cry of the loon as I have listened to it on northern lakes.

In conclusion I am constrained to compare conditions in the once great, but now reported little prosperous, dairy State of Wisconsin, with the much-favored State of Missouri. Missouri, which grows more blue grass than all the States north of her northern border or south of her southern border, is a State of abundant feed, comparatively mild winters, and long grazing seasons. If Wisconsin dairymen desire to better their conditions, we invite them to leave the State of 10,000 lakes and come to Missouri, the dairy cow's happy habitat, "land of a million smiles."

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NELSON. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I desire to make the observation that the distinguished gentleman from Missouri is making a very interesting and informative address. May I also add that the great State of Missouri and the second congressional district of that State are extremely fortunate to have a gentleman of the vision, courage, and statesmanship of the gentleman who is now addressing this body to represent them in the United States Congress. [Applause.]

Mr. NELSON. I thank the gentleman.

In the dairy industry Wisconsin and Missouri are not unrelated. The dairy department of the University of Wisconsin taught the world how, by using a simple device, to measure the amount of butterfat in milk; the dairy department of the University of Missouri discovered and gave to the world the secret of how, by scientific breeding and notably the use of proper sires, to put the butterfat in milk.

So to you, my colleagues of the farther north, I extend a cordial invitation to come to a State-

Neither north nor south, nor east nor west, But part of each, of each the best.

Missouri welcomes. Why should Wisconsin wait? Come, be of good cheer. The cause of milk and butter, man's best food, is not lost. Missouri stands ready to pick up the milk pail, if dropped by Wisconsin, and carry on for cow and country. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to return to page 87 for the purpose of offering an amendment to increase the amount for the soil conserva-

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, of course, the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma adopted a while ago was not at the proper place. The gentleman would not only have to go back to the point he mentioned but also to the head of "General administrative expenses," on page 86, where he did not offer the amendment; but entertaining the opinion regarding the desirability of this amendment which I do, I must object to the gentleman's request.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last three words.

Mr. Chairman, the purpose of the amendment I offered, to which the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Tarver], who claims to be such a great friend of the Soil Conservation Service, has taken the responsibility of objecting to, proposes to increase the amount for field operations, including the soilconservation districts throughout the country exactly $1,-000,000. My amendment, as I stated a few minutes ago, has been pending for some time-in fact, it was offered, as the Chair will verify, before the amendment to cut the overhead or administrative expense was presented. The purpose is plain. I have sought to offer it to the field-operations item. If adopted, it would increase the amount for the soil-conservation districts throughout the country. The amendment also provides that not more than 25 percent of the full amount under field operations could be spent in the District of Columbia. Is not that reasonable? Could any possible objection be raised to that? Then why does the gentleman from Georgia raise the point of order, merely because the reading clerk has read a few lines beyond that item in the bill? Here is a chance to show who the real friends of soil conservation are. Again I ask, Why the objection? Is it because the boys downtown do not want an appropriation where they cannot spend more than 25 percent of the money in the District of Columbia? If the gentleman from Georgia is in good faith, I submit that he has a chance to demonstrate his faith by his works now. I beg the gentleman to withdraw his objection and permit this body to vote on a real soil-conservation amendment and permit us to increase the amount for the field service $1,000,000. That is what I am fighting for. I want to see every soil-conservation district in the United States actually in operation. If this amendment is permitted to be voted upon now, it will be adopted, and I submit that if my amendment with the 25-percent proviso, that I have every reason to believe that we can take care—and by that I mean operate—every legally organized soil-conservation district in the United States.

The body demonstrated a few moments ago in adopting my amendment by 6 or 7 to 1 that it desires to have at least a major part of the money appropriated for the Soil Conservation Service actually out in the field, rather than in building up a large, unappreciative, and autocratic bureau in Washington. [Applause.]

I submit that we have too much soil conservation within recent months in the District of Columbia and too little soil conservation out in the districts where the Congress of the United States intended the major part of the money to go.

I realize full well that a reasonable amount in the Soil Conservation Service should be expended in the District of Columbia, in the regional offices in the State, and area offices. And in this connection I want to make it plain that I have no quarrel with our regional director or coordinator, as I believe he is called, Mr. Merrill, of Fort Worth, or our State coordinator, Mr. Wortman, stationed at Stillwater, Okla. Both are high-class, efficient, and courteous gentlemen. Again, I submit that the Congress of the United States is more interested in soil conservation out in the States and in the districts where the people have voted for those districts and have organized legal conservation districts than they are in conserving the soil or conserving or maintaining the jobs in the District of Columbia. [Applause.]

I have been hoping that the distinguished gentleman from Georgia would rise in his seat and withdraw his point of order against my amendment. The fact is, I cannot conceive of anyone as broad-minded and fair as the gentleman usually is to raise a technical objection. Surely the distinguished gentleman will not object to even discussing an amendment on the floor or even permitting the amendment to be read on the floor of this body. But that is his prerogative as well as his responsibility, not mine.

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Yes; I have been waiting for the gentleman to rise.

Mr. TARVER. I want to say to the gentleman that when he said a while ago the reason for the objection was that the Soil Conservation Service objected to any limitation on its personnel expenditures in the District of Columbia he was entirely mistaken.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I thank the gentleman for his statement. I am certainly willing to accept his statement at face value. But the gentleman undoubtedly has a reason for his objection to the consideration of my amendment. He has not given any reason whatsoever.

Mr. TARVER. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. No; I cannot yield further unless the gentleman desires that I yield to him for the purpose of withdrawing his objection to the consideration now of my amendment proposing to really do something for the Soil Conservation Service as well as for the farmers throughout the country who are entitled to technical and engineering information. Certainly the gentleman will not object to giving this body an opportunity to vote on an amendment that will aid thousands of farmers. Again I must remind Members that legislation creating these districts in Oklahoma, and I am sure the same is true in other States, was prepared by the Soil Conservation Service in Washington. In Oklahoma our farmers were assured that the Soil Conservation would take them over and operate them. Twenty-seven districts have been organized and they have taken over only 10, so I am advised, up to date; and we are told that at least 9 or 10 districts now organized in my State cannot be taken over because of lack of funds. Therefore I again beg my friend from Georgia to withdraw his objection and give Members the opportunity to vote on my amendment so that the country will know who are the real friends of soil conservation in this Congress. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Oklahoma has expired.

The pro forma amendments were withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

CONSERVATION AND USE OF AGRICULTURAL LAND RESOURCES, DEPART-MENT OF AGRICULTURE

Mr. CASE of South Dakota and Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. Case], a member of the committee. Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Case of South Dakota: Page 89, line 9, after the colon, insert "Provided further, That of the funds in this paragraph no payment in excess of $1,000 shall be paid for any one farm operated by one person: Provided further, That no payment in excess of $1,000 shall be paid to any one person or corporation unless at least one-half of the amounts so paid shall be paid to sherecompers or restricted. be paid to sharecroppers or renters of farms for which payments are made."

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the amendment.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman the purpose of this amendment is to accomplish what is sought to be accomplished in the bill H. R. 3800, introduced by the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture, now pending on the Unanimous Consent Calendar. This amendment fixes a limitation of $1,000 but would change the limitation if the farm is rented and if the landlord gives his renter or sharecropper at least half of the soil-conservation payments.

The problem at stake has been well stated by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Gilchrist], when he pointed out that the present limitation carried in the act of 1938 limits the payments so that in the case of lands that are owned by insurance companies or other large landholders the burden really falls upon the renter. A variation of the problem is afforded in my own State of South Dakota. Some years ago the State of South Dakota in an attempt to help the farmers of the State, set up a rural credit board which offered to lend money much the same as the Farm Credit Administration has done since. Under circumstances of the last 15 years, the rural credit board acquired many of the farms and now owns nearly 7,000 farms and operates them through renters in the State of South Dakota.

Under interpretation of the present act the Department here holds that whenever a landlord operates a farm under a rental arrangement where he participates in the proceeds from that farm he is an operator, and the only way these farms can be rented without that applying is where they are rented for cash. To make the thing concrete, last year the rural credit board from the farms which it had cooperating in the farm program received about $140,000. There were about 7,000 farms involved. This means they got on an average, benefit payment of $20 a farm. The limitation of the law that goes into effect this year means that it cannot receive over $10,000. The board, consequently, does not want to rent its 7,000 farms on a share basis because it will cost them $130,000. So the burden falls upon the renter. The only way he can escape is to pay cash rent, and he does not have the cash to pay. So here we are in March and many of those farms are unrented and the farmers do not know what they can do.

The situation I have described with respect to these rural credit farms exists also with respect to farms owned by insurance companies or other multiple farm owners. The purpose of this amendment is to make an exception in the limitation where the sharecropper or renter gets at least half the proceeds of the soil conservation payments.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I yield.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Suppose a person or corporation owned more than one farm. Would the gentleman's limitation of $1,000 apply to each farm or to the entire holdings of the individual? In other words would it limit him to receiving the one payment of $1,000 regardless of the number of farms he had?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. If he were the operator of the farms it would, but if they were operated through a rental proposition and he paid his tenant half the proceeds, it would not limit him. I may say to the gentleman that I have an amendment to follow this which preserves the $10,000 provided in the present act under certain conditions.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I may say to the gentleman that I think his purpose of helping the renter is an exceedingly good one and hope that the language of his amendment does that without injuring the act in other particulars.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I yield.

Mr. HOPE. Under the gentleman's amendment, if I own a farm of 50,000 acres and rented all to one tenant, would I then get away from that limitation as to benefit payments?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I do not think so.

Mr. HOPE. Why not if I gave him half?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. That would be operated as one farm and would fall within the limitation prescribed in the first section of the amendment.

Mr. HOPE. Suppose I divided it up into two farms. I would then, would I not?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. If the tenants got half of the payments, the gentleman might get away with it.

Mr. HOPE. No; there would be no limitation in that case. Mr. TABER. Yes; because in each case the tenant would get half, which would be $500 on each farm, so the owner would get $1,000.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. There is a limitation in the first section of the amendment of $1,000 per farm.

Mr. HOPE. But it would not apply to the landlord who had more than one farm, even though each farm might be 25,000 acres in extent. He could still lease it to a tenant. and, while the tenant might not get more than $1,000, there would be no limitation upon what the landlord could get.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I think, if the gentleman will examine the wording of the amendment, he will find it is somewhat different than the illustration he gives.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the amendment proposed by the gentleman from South Dakota that it is legislation under the guise of a limitation.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from South Dakota desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, this amendment is a limitation on payments; and in the present instance one would have to turn from the gentleman from Missouri as chairman of the subcommittee to the gentleman from Missouri as parliamentarian. The Chair will find the following on page 62 of Cannon's Procedure:

As an appropriation bill may deny an appropriation for a purpose authorized by law, so it may by limitation prohibit the use of money for part of the purpose while appropriating for the remainder of it. It may not legislate as to qualifications of recipients, but may specify that no part shall go to recipients lacking contain qualifications. certain qualifications.

In this particular instance the qualification is set up for the landlord that he shall give at least half this payment to his sharecropper or renter. Viewed in this light I believe the Chair will find it is a pure limitation.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, the proposed amendment couples with the purported limitation affirmative directions and is legislation in the guise of a limitation.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. PATMAN). Cannon's Precedents, page 667, volume 7, 1936, section 1672, states:

An amendment may not under guise of limitation provide af-firmative directions which impose new duties.

The last part of the pending amendment states:

Unless at least one-half of the amount so paid shall be paid these croppers or renters of farms for which payments are

It is the opinion of the Chair that this requires affirmative action; therefore the point of order is sustained.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment which I think meets the point that the gentleman just raised.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Case of South Dakota: Page 89, line 9, after the colon, insert: "Provided further, That no payment from these funds for any one year shall be made to any person or corporation in excess of $10,000 unless the payment is with respect to more than one farm and then only if the excess be in the total of payments to a landlord who shall furnish to the Secretary of Agriculture a certificate from the county committee in which his farms are located stating that his division of the proceeds of that farm's benefit payments with the renter or share-cropper are fair and customary in the community.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order against the amendment.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I shall speak only to the point of order. The purpose involved here, of course, is the same; but to obviate the difficulty which the Chair raised with respect to the first amendment with reference to requiring affirmative action by the Secretary of Agriculture or imposing additional duties, I call the Chair's attention to the fact that this amendment specifically provides that the person in question shall furnish to the Secretary of Agriculture a certificate from the local county committee stating that his division of the rents is fair. It puts the duty on the landlord and not on the Secretary.

In this connection I call the Chair's attention to the various paragraphs in Hinds' Precedents which are cited under the head "Limitations," to which I invited the Chair's attention in the first instance. May I call the Chair's attention especially to the rulings cited on pages 644 and 645, volume 4, of Hinds' Precedents of the House.

On page 644 the Chair will find that the then Chairman of the Committee, the Honorable Theodore Burton, of Ohio, stated:

The question arises whether these are limitations merely. If so, the amendment is in order; if not, it is out of order. It is maintained that this amendment changes existing law. In a sense every limitation changes existing law.

Let the Chairman note:

In a sense every limitation changes existing law.

Then, coming to the particular amendment then involved:

Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be available for the agricultural college of any State or Territory until the Secretary of Agriculture shall be satisfied and shall so certify to the Secretary of the Treasury that no trustee, officer, or employee of said college is engaged in the practice of polygamy or polygamous relations. relations.

As the Chair will find in further consideration of that particular ruling, it was held the provision that the certificate of qualification be offered to the officer in question eliminated the imposition of any additional duty. That is why in the instant case I have provided that the person involved should offer the certificate of the local county committee to show that he has the desired qualifications; that is, that he divides the income and payments fairly with the renter.

Mr. PACE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. PACE. How can the gentleman insist this is a limitation fixing the limit at $10,000 when that is already the limit fixed by law? It could not be classified as a limitation when the limitation already exists under the law.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Of course, the same argument could be applied to the whole long list of cases cited here on the pages surrounding those I have cited. The amendment does seek to change existing law. I am not contending it does not change existing law. However, I do contend it does so in the form of a limitation by setting up the requirement that these payments shall not go to certain persons who lack the required qualifications; that is, landlords who do not share the payments fairly.

Many instances could be cited of parallel amendments having been accepted. I may call the Chair's attention to the fact that in each of these propositions considerable latitude has been recognized. For instance, an amendment to provide that engineers should have 5 years' experience was held to be out of order, but the same purpose was then accomplished by an amendment proposing that-

This sum shall not be available to pay a chief engineer who has not had at least 5 years' experience.

That was held to be in order. It was the same proposition stated the other way around. It was held to be a denial of payments to anybody who lacked certain qualifications. That is what is proposed in the amendment I have submitted.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Texas [Mr.

Jones! desire to be heard?

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I would like to be heard for a moment.

On page 5, section 102, of the present act there is a flat $10,000 limitation on the amount that any person may receive. Insofar as this amendment is effective at all, it changes this provision, but it stipulates that if there is more than one farm the $10,000 shall apply only to each farm. That is a clear change in the law because he stipulates if there is more than one farm then the $10,000 flat limitation in the present law shall be of no force and effect. Certainly that is a change in the law.

The amendment has some good features, but I think this thing is so complicated it needs to be done carefully and after thorough consideration. That is the only reason I make the point of order. It is clearly legislation under the guise of a limitation, because if it has any effect it would increase expenditures rather than limit expenditures.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. JONES of Texas. I yield to the gentleman from South Dakota.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. May I point out it does not provide for any additional appropriation.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Yes; but the gentleman has reduced the appropriation, if he is going to have a limitation.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I should like to call the attention of the gentleman from Texas to the fact that the language setting up qualifications for the landlord is almost verbatim and I think is verbatim with most of the language in the gentleman's bill, H. R. 3800, in defining the division of the payment between the landlord and the tenant.

Mr. JONES of Texas. I said to the gentleman it has some features that are alike, but some of them I am afraid go a little afield.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. The language referred to in H. R. 3800 is new legislation.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Yes.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. The set-up proposed in the present bill does not take care of the situation.

Mr. JONES of Texas. I believe the gentleman is advancing that as a persuasive argument in favor of the amendment rather than on the point of order.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. But, of course, it does set up the qualifications of those who receive the money.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Yes. I believe this had better be done in the regular way.

The CHAIRMAN. It is the opinion of the Chair that the amendment, although in the guise of a limitation, is legislative in nature and not in order on an appropriation bill. The Chair, therefore, sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

PARITY PAYMENTS

To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to make parity payments to producers of wheat, cotton, corn (in the commercial corn-producting area), rice, and tobacco pursuant to the provisions of section 303 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938, $250,000,000: Provided, however, That, notwithstanding the provisions of said section, one-half of this sum shall be apportioned among such commodities in accordance with the provisions of said section 303 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938 and one-half shall be apportioned among such commodities in the same proportion that funds available for sections 7 to 17, inclusive, of the Soil Conservation and Domestic Allotment Act would be allocated to such commodities in connection with the 1939 agricultural conservation program on the basis of the standards set forth in section 104 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938: Provided further, That such payments with respect to any such commodity shall be made upon the normal yield of the farm acreage allotment established for the commodity under the 1939 agricultural conservation program, and shall be made with respect to a farm only in the event that the acreage planted to the commodity for harvest on the farm in 1940 is not in excess of the farm acreage allotment established for the commodity under said program: And provided further, That the rate of payment with respect to any commodity shall not exceed the amount by which the average farm price of the commodity is less than 75 percent of the parity price. is less than 75 percent of the parity price.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state the point of Mr. TABER. I make the point of order that it is legislation on an appropriation bill and changes existing law.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, the point of order is conceded.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is conceded, and the Chair sustains the point of order made by the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER].

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Cannon of Missouri: Page 90, after line 22, insert:

"PARITY PAYMENTS

"To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to make parity payments "To enable the secretary of Agriculture to make parity payments to producers of wheat, cotton, corn, rice, and tobacco pursuant to the provisions of section 303 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938, $250,000,000: Provided, however, That, in expending the appropriation in this paragraph, the rate of payment with respect to any commodity shall not exceed the amount by which the average farm price of the commodity is less than 75 percent of the parity price."

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment and all amendments thereto close in 2 hours and 10 minutes.

Mr. COOLEY. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Chairman, may I inquire of the Chairman whether or not sufficient time will be given to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERGUSON] to introduce his amendment seeking to increase the amount?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Time for the gentleman from Oklahoma was included in the request.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Chairman, I object.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Percuson to the amendment offered by Mr. Cannon of Missouri: On page 91, line 3, in the amendment to the amendment strike out "$250,000,000" and insert "$500,-000,000."

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 8 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

There was no objection.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. Chairman, the Committee on Agriculture last year brought before the House the Farm Act of 1938, which in section 303 provides for making parity payments to farmers. When the Naval Affairs Committee authorizes funds for the construction of battleships the money is voted without question. When the Military Affairs Committee authorizes expenditures for the Army the money is voted without question. The Committee on Agriculture should have the same treatment. As a new member of the Committee on Agriculture, this year I listened to statement after statement about the pitiful condition of the farmer. No member of the committee or no Member of the House that heard these statements or has knowledge of the farm situation will question the pitiful condition of agriculture in this Nation. The average price for cotton sold in the Nation for 1938 was 8.6 cents per pound, the average price for corn was 47.3 cents a bushel, and the average price for wheat was 53.4 cents a bushel. These prices spell disaster, suffering, and actual want for the farmers of the Nation.

These prices, as far as the farmer is concerned, have the same result on the farmer's standard of living as a dollar-aday wage would have on labor. Another year of these disastrous prices means thousands of farmers abandoning the farm to go on relief in cities or small towns. If the Republicans in this House wish to balance the Budget at the expense of the relief workers and the farmers, let that be their responsibility. The country will not long tolerate a party based on negation, opposed to everything, advocating nothing. In spite of the continuous wave of economy propaganda in the newspapers the people of this Nation realize that the Democratic Party, the Democratic Members of this House, must accept the responsibility of providing the funds necessary to save this Nation from disaster, and we must not be perturbed by propaganda emanating from those who are not sharing the disasters of the farmer and relief worker.

Realizing that section 303 of the 1938 Farm Act authorized parity payments, I canvassed the members of the committee. I talked to the distinguished chairman, the gentleman from Texas, and the distinguished ranking minority member, the gentleman from Kansas. I talked with every member of the committee. A majority, including the chairman and the minority ranking member, agreed that parity payments should be made. Not a single member of the Committee on Agriculture definitely said he would vote against parity payments. With this in view I asked the Secretary of Agriculture for an estimate of the amount required to pay parity payments that would bring the price of wheat, cotton, corn. tobacco, and rice, the five products included in the bill, to parity. The Secretary informed me it would require a billion dollars. After talking with many members of the Agriculture Committee we agreed we could not hope to get more than $500,000,000. I was informed by the Secretary of Agriculture, through his Statistical Bureau, that $500,000,000 would bring the price of agriculture products to about 85 percent of parity. If the Congress meant what it said in the Farm Act of 1938, it is the duty of this body to appropriate this $500,000,000 to relieve the shocking conditions of agriculture by raising the prices of these five commodities. If we do not provide these funds, this $500,000,000, a large percent of the next crop of cotton, the next crop of corn, and the next crop of wheat will be stored under Government loans. This means that the warehousemen and elevators will be the main recipients of benefits from the farm programs through storage charges.

The Government already has loans on 207,000,000 bushels of corn, 11,000,000 bales of cotton, and 81,000,000 bushels of wheat

Add to this another crop in 1939 such as we had in 1938 and it will mean huge additions to the storage of farm products under loans, and this will mean absolute disaster for farm prices in this country. The chairman of the Committee on Agriculture [Mr. Jones] himself made the statement on this floor that he thought it might be cheaper to accept this amendment appropriating $500,000,000 than to continue the loan policy. When you take crops out of the loan and let the 1939 crop go into commerce, it will flow into the channels of trade, both foreign and domestic, without ruining the farmer, because parity payments will take up the slack between what he has to sell his product for and what he receives. This $500,000,000 will cost less in the long run than a continued loan policy.

The House has been told that to vote $500,000,000 will jeopardize the chance of getting $250,000,000. I, for one, am not going to let a parliamentary situation keep the farmer from getting a semblance of justice. I cannot believe that any Member of this House in either party—and both parties are pledged to a farm program that will help the farmer—I cannot believe that any Member will vote for an amendment in the Committee of the Whole and then reverse his position when the roll is called in the House.

The condition of agriculture today, with its disastrously low prices, challenges the Democratic Party and the Congress to do something about it. This is your opportunity and probably the only opportunity that will present itself at this session of Congress. Let us accept our responsibility to the 30,000,000 farmers of this Nation by voting up this $500,000,000 amendment.

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. FERGUSON. I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. COOLEY. How much is it costing the Government at the present time for storage of the one crop, cotton, which is now in storage?

Mr. FERGUSON. I understand it costs around $30,000,000 to $35,000,000 a year for storage.

Mr. COOLEY. Is it not $45,000,000 a year?

Mr. FERGUSON. Forty-five million dollars may be correct. I may say to the gentleman and to the Committee that when a man receives a payment under the agricultural program he is no longer eligible for relief, and this appropriation would obviate the necessity of spending a lot of relief funds. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the ranking members of the Committee on each side of the House be allowed an extension of 10 minutes, respectively, in which to conclude debate on this amendment.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Reserving the right to object, the request does not prejudice others in their right to request additional time?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. My request is that the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. Lambertson] and myself may have 10 minutes to close debate on the proposition.

Mr. DIRKSEN. That is agreeable.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I move that debate on this amendment and all amendments thereto close in an hour and a quarter.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Cannon].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. Bradley of Pennsylvania) there were—ayes 80, noes 97. So the motion was rejected.

Mr. HARRINGTON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. Ferguson].

When we passed the farm bill last year the plainly indicated intent of the program was to increase the farmer's income from the price of his products to an equality with the prices of the commodities he has to buy. That is known as parity. The principle of parity was written into the bill. The machinery of parity was set up in the bill. But we failed to provide the necessary money to see that he received parity for what he was permitted to produce under the program. In other words, we went through a lot of motions, but the farmer did not get what he ought to get under the farm program.

In the case of corn, I believe our farmers who complied with the program received a gross of around 67 cents a bushel, counting his soil-conservation benefits on top of the loan value of his crop. As I understand it, by increasing the fund for parity payments in the pending bill by $250,000,000 we can guarantee our farmers the equivalent of 90 percent of parity. This would mean that instead of 67 cents the corn farmer would be assured of 76 cents.

The difference between 67-cent corn and 76-cent corn is the difference between getting by and getting sunk—the difference between a chance to break even or the certainty of a loss. I know that it will help chase the depression out of the Corn Belt, and I assume that a similar effect would be felt in the wheat country, the cotton South, and other crop areas.

Let me remind you, gentlemen, that in order to qualify for these parity payments the farmer must cooperate and comply with the Department of Agriculture crop-control program. He cannot produce to the maximum of his acreage and deluge the market with surpluses. He must abide by the acreage allotment worked out by his local committee under the general scheme of things as prescribed by the Department.

Now, when a farmer shows himself willing to cooperate in the solution of our national-farm program—when he makes good on his end of the bargain—I think it is the duty of the Congress to make good on the implied promise of the Farm Act and see that he receives at least 90 percent of the parity price. We promised him parity when we passed the farm bill. Let us make good on that promise now.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The story is told in the following figures of the farmers' condition. The cash income of farmers in the United States in 1936 has been figured at $8,100,000,000, compared with $10,000,000,000 in 1927 and $16,000,000,000 in 1919. In other words, you will see that the gross income of the farmer is gradually decreasing all the time and it was lower in 1938 than it was in 1936.

Now, remember this, Mr. Chairman. The farm population of the country constitutes about 25 percent of our population. It is estimated that we had a gross national income for 1938 of approximately $70,000,000,000, and 25 percent of the people, the farm population, are going to receive 10 percent of the income of the Nation for 1938, an unfair share of the Nation's income.

We need go no further, as I said upon this floor the other day, in support of the amendment of the gentleman from Oklahoma, than to quote the figures given by the Secretary of Agriculture before the Senate Committee on Agriculture when he said, "If you give the farmers the cost of production bill it will cost the American consumer $1,000,000,000

Now, if his statement is true, that the farmers are farming at a loss of $1,000,000,000 a year, it is time this Congress tried to correct that, if possible. I also want to call your attention to this fact: In 1932 the Democratic Convention pledged itself to the American farmer that it would give him excess of costs as a fair price for his products. I ask the Democratic in this House, have we kept the promise? I also wish to call your attention in connection with the same Democratic platform that it used these words:

Extension and development of farm cooperative movement and effective crop surpluses, so that our farmers may have the full benefit of the domestic market.

In other words, we pledged ourselves to the American farmer that we would not permit farm products to be imported into this country in competition with the American farmer. Have we kept that promise?

Now, Mr. Chairman, if we vote this $500,000,000, it only means a few battleships and a few thousand airplanes. We voted here the other day money for thousands and thousands of airplanes and a number of battleships that we will never use, and I hope to God we will never have occasion to use them. Why not vote something to give the American people who are underfed and underprivileged, as has been repeatedly said upon the floor of this House, a consuming power so they can put to work the idle people of this country.

I was talking with a man the other day who said that the ten or eleven million people in this country who are out of employment had been pretty patient. I am not so sure that they will remain patient. I think it is about time, instead of straining our eyes looking across the Atlantic Ocean a distance of 3,000 miles for war clouds, that we looked at home to see what our conditions are right under our nose. [Applause.]

I want to say this to you also. It is economy to put the farmer upon his feet. He is the best buyer we have outside of the laboring man. He will go into the manufacturing institutions and buy farming implements, clothes for his family, and he will likewise make the improvements upon his farm that are necessary so that his home will be habitable.

I also want to ask these questions:

Is there anybody in this House who wants to eat bread made from a bushel of wheat that does not represent the cost of production? Again is there anybody here who wants to wear clothes produced from cotton that was raised at a less cost than what it took to raise it. [Applause.]

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. In view of the fact that I am one of the few farmers in this House, and one Member who has only taken up 2 minutes previously of the time of this House, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for an additional 3 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is recognized for 8 minutes.

THE BASIS OF A REAL FARM PROGRAM

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. Mr. Chairman, we have heard a lot the past few days and have seen huge headlines in the press concerning the billion-dollar relief bill for agriculture. Let us get this straight for the RECORD. This bill appropriates for Weather Bureau, Forestry Service, roads and elimination of grade crossings, and other nonagricultural items, a total in the neighborhood of $210,000,000. So please let us be fair and refer to the $800,000,000 agriculture measure, not a $1,000,-000,000 bill. Of course, $200,000,000 may not look like much to some of you, but to me, after trying to make a living out of farming for years, $200,000,000 represents 200,000 taxpaying farmers who would like to have $1,000 each with which to buy paint, lumber, and new machinery they need, which could be manufactured by the men now on W. P. A., in whose behalf we hear so much now about the necessity of $150,-000,000 for immediate aid.

I do not think that a Member of this House would vote against double the $150,000,000 for W. P. A. if he knew that that money would be spent honestly and that men needing relief, and not chiselers, received this aid.

AGRICULTURE ENTITLED TO PARITY

May I read a telegram received from the Minnesota Farm Bureau Federation in relation to this $250,000,000 for parity payments:

We urge retention of $250,000,000 for A. A. A. parity payments in agricultural appropriation bill.

May I say to you Members, what can any of us interested in agriculture as a whole say but just that we want this $250,000,000 parity payment left in this bill? Are you men from farming sections of America, simply because this $250,000,000 does not help directly your own particular agricultural commodity, going to say, "Oh, to so-and-so with this. It does not help dairying. Why should we vote for it?"

Are you men who want more money for W. P. A., although W. P. A. has in 1938 received four times what agriculture received in that same year, going to reach the depths in refusing to appropriate money to at least give the Agricultural Adjustment Act, that the Congress passed last year, a half chance to operate and show what it can do for the farmer?

ONLY PART OF OUR FARMERS CAN SHARE THIS SUBSIDY

Mr. Chairman, we all know that this $250,000,000 will not even give 50-percent parity to the five crops—wheat, cotton, corn, rice, and tobacco—let alone to our great livestock industry. The greatest one part of agriculture, dairy products is not in the act. Yet it ranks first in 1937 with $1,459,000,000 production. Corn is second with $1,456,000,000, hogs third with $1,173,000,000, wheat fourth with $869,000,000, cattle fifth with $842,000,000, and cotton, that we hear so much about lately, sixth with $784,000,000.

LET US HELP ALL OF AGRICULTURE

Are we from the dairy sections going to be dogs in the mangers and refuse to support agriculture as a whole just because cotton obtains more than one-third of this $250,000,000? No, my fellow Members; what helps one section of agriculture helps another. I for one will support this $250,000,000 appropriation; but at the same time I will also support, if given the opportunity, legislation designed to give the dairy farmer, to which class I personally belong, and the livestockman equal opportunity to share our Nation's subsidy to agriculture. Three million eight hundred thousand farmers received help from the A. A. A. last year. Let us help the other 2,500,000 farmers become eligible for the same subsidy—or call it what you may—for producing food for the consumer at a loss.

SECRETARY WALLACE ADMITS DOUBT

I was very much interested the other day to hear Secretary Wallace admit before the House Committee on Agriculture that to carry into effect section 303 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938 would require seemingly hopeless sums of money. In the first place, processing taxes were out, due to the opposition of the President. In the second place, Congress would never appropriate the huge amount necessary to really give parity to agriculture.

In other words, the Secretary has admitted that the present act does not and never will give cost of production or parity prices to the farmer. This appropriation for parity payments of $250,000,000 will, however, partially right the wrong to a portion of our agriculture, the greatest one industry of America.

FNORMOUS APPROPRIATIONS ALREADY MADE FOR OTHER PURPOSES

Billions of dollars have already been appropriated for other purposes so far this session. We gave to relief $725,000,000; we have had the independent offices bill passed carrying more than $2,000,000,000. Our national-defense expenditures will crowd, if not exceed, two billions.

Mr. Chairman, in my opinion it is just as important for our national defense to make this appropriation for the farmer in order to remove this cancer gnawing at the vitals of our great democracy. No nation can exist and prosper with a huge portion of its people—one-third, in fact—losing their faith in government because they are forced to produce food for the rest at a loss. No American citizen worthy of the name wants to consume food grown on farms in Minnesota or elsewhere at a loss to the farmer any more than does that farmer want to buy manufactured products produced by orientals when our own workmen are out of work.

A REAL FARM PROGRAM

Let us either appropriate the money necessary to give the farmer parity prices in all agricultural commodities or, if this administration is unwilling to do this, then why not quit beating around the bush and adopt the cost-of-production bill, which would form the basis for a real farm program.

Furthermore, follow this up by refinancing of our farm indebtedness at a low rate of interest, as in the Frazier-Lemke Refinancing Act, or some other measure designed to accomplish this great need. Second, discard the reciprocal-trade agreements and restore the American market to Americans. Third, refund the processing taxes unjustly gathered from the hog producers and cancel the old feed and seed loans which hang like a millstone around the necks of impoverished agriculture.

Then, Members of the House, agriculture's buying power would take off of W. P. A. millions of men and put them to self-respecting work manufacturing paint, machinery, autos, radios, clothing, and thousands of other articles sold by the small retailers to my fellow farmers throughout America. This Congress by such action would serve notice that agriculture in America will be given the consideration which this real, basic, all-important industry of our Nation deserves. [Applause.]

Mr. MASSINGALE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I am rising in support of the amendment offered by my colleague from Oklahoma [Mr. Ferguson]. I do this, not because of the fact that Mr. Ferguson and I happen to come from the same State but I believe that I am actuated by the very highest kind of motive. That is, to see that the farmers of America are no longer disappointed, deceived, or deluded. We, in effect, promised the farmers parity prices. We have not been able to deliver. We might just as well make a frank avowal of that. They expected to get parity prices on their 1938 crops. They have not got anything, and now it has just dawned upon them that we were speculating—making political promises. Gentlemen, we have fed them on that kind of stuff for 150 years. Let us quit it.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. MASSINGALE. I would like to yield, but I do not have he time.

Secretary Wallace himself testified before the Senate and House Committees on Agriculture and he even testified as far back as 1936 that this program was a failure, insofar as benefit to farmers from acreage reduction was concerned. Congress does not seem to be satisfied with that. Here we are now asking for $500,000,000, which admittedly will not do the job, and unless you appropriate it he will not even get 75 percent of the parity he has been expecting.

Let me call your attention to this: The farmer believed last year, when he pitched his crop, that he was going to get these parity payments. He did not know at that time that he had to wait for the money to be appropriated out of the Treasury before he would get any of it. He sees it now. In other words, the Secretary of Agriculture filled his pockets with cheese and led the march of the farmers into the trap, and now he is back here before Congress and he is telling the farmer that we cannot do what we told him we were going to do, and we have got to have an additional appropriation for it and even then he cannot get his parity money until after he supports the 1940 program of the present bill. Now, let us give it to him or give him a prospect of getting it.

Let me tell you this: I hope this will be a lesson to the American Congress, to the American farmer, and to the American people as a whole, that we are going to abandon these foolish philosophies of trying to do something by cutting down acreage, killing cattle, killing hogs and things of that sort, and restore the American farmer to the estate of decency, at least, that he used to have. We can do that. We can give him parity and better than parity. We can give him cost of production. There is a petition on file up here, No. 5, that will give to the farmers of this country what it costs them at least to produce a pound of cotton or a bushel of wheat or any other commodity that we grow on the farms of this country. Let us give it to him. We have got to quit this. Congress cannot go on year after year appropriating five hundred million to a billion dollars a year in order to carry out this darned fool philosophy that some fellow has picked up somewhere [applause and laughter] and tries to foist on the people of the country and make the farmers endorse it in order to get an imaginary payment. [Applause.]

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

I ask unanimous consent to proceed for an additional 5

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, before we get too far afield in the discussion of the pending Ferguson amendment, which seeks to increase price-adjustment payments to $500,-000,000, I think perhaps a word or two might not be amiss in bringing this matter squarely before the Committee, together with the historical development of price-adjustment payments.

Last year when the work-relief bill left the House it went to the Senate, and in the first week of June 1938 the Senate wrote into the work-relief bill a provision for price-adjustment payments in the aggregate for $212,000,000. The bill in that form went to conference and the $212,000,000 was retained. When the Budget figures came before the subcommittee with respect to parity payments this year there was no indication from the President, there was no intimation from the Secretary of Agriculture, there was no suggestion from the Bureau of the Budget with respect to price-adjustment payments. I will defy any Member of this Committee to examine the rather voluminous testimony before the subcommittee and find a single shred of testimony in behalf of price-adjustment payments.

It simply is is not there. Now it is rather singular that the President said nothing to us about it in his message on the 5th day of January. It is rather singular that the President has sent us no supplemental message. It is rather strange that the Secretary of Agriculture made no affirmative request for this money. The only place in these hearings where you will find any allusion to price-adjustment payments is on page 1685 where they are suggested by the legislative representative of the American Farm Bureau Federation, Mr. Ogg. Now let me say for Mr. Ogg that he is a very able gentleman and he made a very fine presentation before the committee, but the thing I want to emphasize first of all is that there is no Budget estimate for this item, there is no request from the President, there is no request from the Secretary of Agriculture, there is no request from the Budget Bureau, and no one can stand in his place and confute this statement because these are the facts.

Secondly, let us get clear as to the language of the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938. The gentleman from Oklahoma stated awhile ago that these payments were authorized. The language of section 303 does not mean that to me at all. It states that if and when the Congress of the United States shall make the appropriation, then, and only then, the Secretary of Agriculture shall be authorized and directed to make these payments. This is no authority for price adjustment. It is permissive language. This is simply designating the Secretary of Agriculture as the disbursing officer after the Congress has indicated in its wisdom what it wants to do about these payments. So remember that it is the responsibility of this Committee, and it is the responsibility of Congress. Whether or not there shall be price adjustment payments is after all a matter for the Committee and for the Congress to determine, but I want to emphasize the fact that there is no request from the President, from the Budget, or from the Secretary of Agriculture. That is No. 1. Secondly, the language of section 303 of the Farm Act of 1938 can scarcely be construed or interpreted as an authorization for these, if by authorization is meant that Congress is obligated to this course of action. It simply makes the Secretary our agent if and when the appropriations have been made.

I am not insensible of the distress that is everywhere in the country in the farm domain. I know they are not getting enough money, but I want to be particularly careful that as we go along in this discussion we keep our feet squarely on the ground and know precisely what we are doing. I have sometimes thought if you are going to go part way, why not go the whole hog? If parity payments, or "parity income," as the Secretary of Agriculture prefers to term it, is a very desirable objective, and if the Federal Treasury will stand it. why not appropriate all that is necessary in order to achieve

Let us take a look at the figures submitted by Mr. Ogg and see where we stand so far as 1938 is concerned. It must be remembered that price-adjustment payments apply to only five commodities-cotton, corn, wheat, tobacco, and rice. Out of the $250,000,000 you tobacco farmers and you tobacco representatives will get nothing. They will write it down in the book at perhaps $5,000,000 or $6,000,000, but you will not get anything-you cannot because the prices were at a rather high level. Two million dollars will probably be set aside for rice, but you rice farmers are not likely to get it. From $90,000,000 to $100,000,000 will be set aside for cotton, from $70,000,000 to $75,000,000 will be set aside for wheat, and from $70,000,000 to $75,000,000 will be set aside for corn. You dairy farmers can just bet your life now you are not going to get a dollar.

It ought to be made clear, as we consider whether this is to be $250,000,000 or $500,000,000, precisely how the money is going to be disbursed. Now, let us look at the crop year 1938. The parity value of the five basic commodities was about $3,400,000,000.

The proceeds from the crop according to estimate was about $2,100,000,000. The benefit payments were $290,000,-000. The total, therefore, in payments and in proceeds from the sale of the five basic commodities was a little less than $2,500,000,000. How much further do you think we shall have to go in order to reach parity? We need over $1,000,-000,000 in addition thereto in order to achieve parity. Now, that is the situation in a nutshell, and I sincerely trust every gentleman in the Committee will have that very definitely in mind when it comes time to register on this matter, whether you vote $250,000,000 or $500,000,000; and so I just want to summarize it: There has been no Budget estimate, no request by the President, no request by the Secretary of Agriculture; and you will find a suggestion of this price issue only in the testimony of Mr. Ogg at page 1685 of the hearings.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield.

Mr. FERGUSON. If parity payments were not authorized under section 303 would not the amendments all be subject to points of order?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I do not think so.

Mr. FERGUSON. It is clearly an authorization or the amendments would be subject to points of order.

Mr. DIRKSEN. The gentleman misunderstood. I said it is presently the responsibility of Congress. The act starts with the statement, "If and when." When the gentleman himself was here in the Well of the House he gave the impression that there was a clear duty upon the Congress to appropriate this money. I do not envision it as a clear duty under section 303 at all. We have entire discretion in the matter; and is it not rather odd under those circumstances, is it not rather odd that the Department of Agriculture, huge factfinding agency that it is, has failed to make this request? Is it not strange that the President has made no request? He is just as much interested in the welfare of the farmer as is any other person.

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield.
Mr. COOLEY. Does not the gentleman understand that the Secretary of Agriculture has advocated a processing tax for the financing of this farm program? And does not the gentleman also understand that the President is opposed to the processing tax? Is not the reason no suggestion in this connection was made is because there was a difference of opinion between these two men?

Mr. DIRKSEN. It would be far more accurate, in view of the testimony given by the Secretary of Agriculture before the subcommittee, to say that he has been deliberating and thinking around the edges of a processing tax, never having made a commitment of any kind on that subject since the old lamented processing tax went out of the window. On page 3 of the hearings the Secretary stated that in his speeches he had suggested the feasibility of a processing tax. Certainly he left no doubt in the minds of the members of the Subcommittee on Agriculture that he was not going to make an affirmative proposal for a processing tax.

Mr. Chairman, it is no light undertaking to write into an appropriation bill the sum of $250,000,000 when there have been no hearings on that item. It is no small thing to appropriate a quarter of a billion dollars when the President has not indicated a desire for its inclusion, and when he indicated to the Secretary of Agriculture that there should be offsetting taxes to counterbalance that item. It is no small thing to appropriate this huge sum when the Secretary of Agriculture himself would make no commitment to the committee on this item. Surely no one will attempt to justify this procedure. If it is done now, there will be nothing in the way of writing similar sums into other appropriations, and then one can really shudder for the fiscal stability of

I can think of nothing that would so justify a deep and abiding sense of alarm throughout the country than if the House should follow such a procedure.

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I rise at this time because of statements inadvertently made by the gentleman from Illinois which are not supported by the record. The gentleman stated that no evidence had been adduced before the subcommittee with reference to the subject matter of parity payments except that of Mr. Ogg, who appeared as the representative of the American Farm Bureau. The gentleman from Illinois, because of engagements before another subcommittee, was not present at all of the hearings had before our subcommittee. I direct your attention to the examination by the subcommittee of the Secretary of Agriculture, and particularly to statements made by him on page 6 of the hearings. I also direct your attention to the evidence of Mr. R. M. Evans, head of the Agricultural Adjustment Administration, in whose testimony some reference was made to the subject matter here discussed. On page 6 of the hearings, I asked the Secretary of Agriculture this question:

Mr. Chairman, may I ask a question before you proceed to the next item? Do you think it essential to the success of the farm program that this committee should make an appropriation for the continuance of parity payments?

mr. Wallace if you define by success of the farm program the objective set forth in the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938, it is obvious that you cannot be successful without more payments.

Of course, the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938 is the only farm program the farmers of this country now have.

I am quite in accord with the views of some of my colleagues who feel that that program must be changed or modified in order to be finally successful. I voted against the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938 when it passed the House of Representatives.

I do not believe that the plan which is outlined in that act is sound or one that will be found permanently successful; but it is the only program we have, and we must either follow that and make parity payments and endeavor to attain the objectives set forth in that act, or we must leave the farmer distressed and with a constantly diminishing income, which for the present year, so far as Federal benefits are concerned, will be substantially 30 percent less than it was for the year 1938. With the market values of his crop depreciating, there will thereby be brought about a very much greater percentage of decrease in income than is represented by the decrease in the amount of Federal benefits.

I feel that the President's position with regard to the advisability of trying to raise the money to carry on whatever program is finally adopted, otherwise than by taking the money from the general funds of the Treasury, is a sound position; but you and I, who are not members of the Committee on Ways and Means, are not in position to bring tax legislation before the House of Representatives, and until the Ways and Means Committee may see fit to report to this House legislation which will enable the program to be financed from other than general funds, we have only one of two recourses left: That is, either to abandon the farmer and make no effort to be of further assistance to him, or to make appropriations for his benefit out of the general funds in the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. Chairman, remember that the farmers of this country on the whole receive very little from the Works Progress Administration appropriations that we make. I do not know how it may be in other sections of the country, but I know in my own district those who are customarily employed on farms are not permitted to have W. P. A. employment. That rule was modified for 2 months during last fall, but at the expiration of the 2 months those people who were customarily employed on farms were dropped and were told they must secure employment on the farms and could no longer secure this character of relief through the W. P. A.

I feel that as one measure of relief, not only to the farmer, but to the unemployed in industry in this country, Congress ought to make arrangements for the people in this country who are hungry or ill-clad to secure the benefit of huge farm surpluses, instead of having their export to foreign countries subsidized.

We are subsidizing this year the exportation of 100,000,000 bushels of wheat at a cost to the people of European countries of 26 cents per bushel while our own people pay 55 to 60 cents. There is talk of subsidizing the export of cotton. I would rather spend the money of the United States to feed and clothe its own people.

With further reference to the exact question involved in the parity amendment, I recognize the fact that the establishment of a permanent policy of paying grants and subsidies, whether known as parity payments, soil-conservation benefits, or otherwise, out of general funds in the Treasury to any particular class of the people of the United States, would be unwise and eventually destructive of the Government itself.

At the same time, no one will or can successfully contend that the principle involved is different in character from that which confronts us when we undertake to continue permanently a system of grants to those who are unemployed in industry, to those who live in the slums of the cities, and to various other elements of our population who have from time to time been the beneficiaries of the beneficence of this administration. The entire system except as a matter of most pressing emergency and within the most restricted limits is faulty to the core and it must be drastically revised within the not distant future or this Government will be confronted with very grave danger.

I am not disturbed about the possibility of change in the form of our Government. I have confidence in the wisdom and integrity and capability for self-government of the American people. But I do believe the present trend toward extravagant expenditures, beyond the ability of our people to meet through taxation, will, unless checked, destroy the credit of the Government itself, force the repudiation of public and private debts, and make necessary a long and painful period of reconstruction before we can again reach the point in national development which we occupied before the present emergency began,

It is not inconsistent on my part that, entertaining these views, I am, nevertheless, pressing for parity benefits for farmers out of the Public Treasury. I would rather see those benefits provided by some system similar to processing taxes to raise money from those who consume the farmers' products to place him on a parity with those who make their livelihoods in other ways. It is not the fault of those of us who are not on the Ways and Means Committee that legislation of this sort is not brought before the House. But you have not made arrangements by taxation to raise the money for the unemployed in industry before you appropriated during the last 6 years $15,000,000,000 for their relief; and that is true, notwithstanding the fact that most of the beneficiaries of those appropriations are located in the wealthiest States of this Union. Why insist that the farmer raise his benefits by special taxes and then expend more tremendously huge sums for the relief of unemployment in industry without that requirement?

Who is in worse condition than the farmer? In 1938 his income available for living expenses was $4,750,000,000, as against $58,745,000,000 for nonfarm population. Thus, the farmer had around 8 percent of what the nonfarmer had, although his numbers aggregated around 33 percent of the nonfarm population. If an unwise policy is being pursued for the relief of the nonfarm population, if money not raised by taxes is being poured out for them to the extent of $15,000,000,000 in 6 years, then why, in Heaven's name, should those of us who feel that that policy is unwise, permit the farmer to be made the goat by not receiving his share of the beneficence which his labor must eventually help to repay?

Should we stop this unwise and impracticable method of attempting to deal with distress, agricultural and nonagricultural? I think so. If you will undertake to do it, I will stand with you. If, however, you attempt to make fish of one class and fowl of another, to spend huge sums for the population of cities and deal niggardly with the farmer, I shall be one of those who will exhaust every possible effort to see that the farmer is placed on a parity in the distribution of national funds, even if we cannot secure for him, as would be far more desirable, parity in the prices of his agricultural products.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the proforma amendment.

Mr. Chairman, in view of the statement of my good friend, the gentleman from Illinois, with reference to the lack of testimony in the record concerning why we should have parity payments, I am going to take the time to give a little testimony myself on that point.

One can talk for hours in describing the agricultural situation, but I think I can bring it to your attention by citing a very few figures. In determining the relative standing of agriculture as compared with other industries, we commonly go back to the 5-year period, 1909 to 1914, not because farmers were getting rich at that time—far from it—but because that was a normal period and there existed at that time a fairer relationship between agricultural and nonagricultural prices than has obtained any time since.

What is the relative situation of agriculture and other industries today as compared with the 1909 to 1914 period? These figures from the Department of Agriculture tell the story: In January 1939 the composite price of all grains was 66 percent of what it was during the 1909 to 1914 period. The price of cotton and cottonseed was 71 percent of what it was during that period. I am mentioning only grains and cotton because they are the commodities which are included in the provision for parity payments. Tobacco is also included, but since its prices are almost equal to parity it will not share in the payments unless there should be a tremendous price decline.

Now, what is the other side of the picture? Listen to this: In January 1939 industrial wages were 211 as compared with 100 in the 1909 to 1914 period. The wholesale price of all commodities was 112. In January 1939 farm wages were 117 as compared with 100 in 1909 to 1914, and prices paid by farmers for commodities used in living and production were 120 as compared with 100 in the base period.

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOPE. Not just at this point.

Mr. NICHOLS. I just wondered if farm machinery was in there.

Mr. HOPE. I will cover that a little later.

Let me ask in all sincerity what would happen if this situation were reversed? Suppose that industrial wages today were 66 percent of what they were in 1909 to 1914 and that farm prices were 211 percent of what they were then? Would we be hearing any complaints from industrial centers? I rather think we would.

Now, you may say, even though this situation exists, "What justification does it afford for paying subsidies out of the Federal Treasury?" Just this, that the relative condition of the farmer today, as compared with the base period, is very largely the result of legislation enacted by the Congress of the United States on behalf of other industries. Our tariff policy has been to the disadvantage of agriculture-not intentionally perhaps, but actually so-because tariffs cannot help producers of surplus crops which are covered by this parity-payment provision, and also because even where tariff rates are effective farmers are not in a position to take advantage of them to the same extent as industry.

Today, as the result of legislation, transportation rates on the farmers' products are fixed. Commission charges he must pay at the stockyards are fixed. Industrial monopolies have, to a large extent, fixed the price he must pay for his machinery. Legislation enacted by Congress for the benefit of labor—such as the Wagner Act, the Railroad Labor Act, and the Wage and Hour Act-have all contributed to the present condition of the farmer because it has increased the cost of everything which the farmer buys. I am not at this time criticizing the purpose of any of this legislation. I am not expressing any opinion on it as to whether it is good or bad as a national policy. I do say, however, that it has very definitely contributed to the situation in which the farmer now finds himself.

That brings us to the question of what can be done to remedy the situation, because I assume that there is no one who does not want to remedy it. It seems to me either of three things can be done. One is for Congress to repeal all of the legislation which has brought the farmer to his present position. Another is to arbitrarily fix prices on agricultural products at a point where the farmer's income will compare with income from other industries. The other is to give the farmer a subsidy out of the Federal Treasury which will put him on a price and income parity with producers in other industries. We have not the opportunity today to do any one of these three things. We are not going to have the opportunity to do any one of these three things during this session of Congress. We do have the opportunity today, however, to appropriate a sum of money which, while it may seem large, is but a small part of that to which the farmer is entitled if he is to be put on the same level as other producers.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 3 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kansas?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOPE. There is a general agreement, I think, on the part of leaders in both industry and agriculture that until a more permanent solution of the agricultural problem can be worked out, there must be subsidies from the Federal Treasury. To my Republican friends I call attention to the provisions of our party platform for 1936 where the party pledges itself, as follows:

To provide in the case of agricultural products of which there are exportable surpluses, the payment of reasonable benefits upon the domestically consumed portion of such crops in order to make the tariff effective. These payments are to be limited to the production level of the family type farm.

Let me call attention also to the attitude of two of our great business organizations on this question. In December 1938 the committee on agricultural cooperation of the National Association of Manufacturers submitted its report to the association. Among other things, that report stated:

This committee reiterates its belief that it is essential to the welfare of manufacturing industry that the farmers receive fair prices for what they produce. Your committee recognizes that the question is probably one of an equitable price relationship more than price level, and it recommends that the National Association of Manufacturers lend its fullest support to any sound effort to bring about such a relationship between industry and exceptions. agriculture.

In January of this year, the United States Chamber of Commerce sponsored a conference composed of 50 farm and industrial leaders. At the conclusion of that conference Mr. George H. Davis, president of the chamber, gave out a statement which is reported in the Washington Post for Thursday, January 26, 1939, as follows:

CHAMBER OF COMMERCE PARLEY HERE FAVORS FARM SUBSIDY—"BONUS" SHOULD BRING "FAIR PRICE," DAVIS DECLARES AFTER TALK

Abandonment of extensive machinery for control of agriculture and a straight subsidy to farmers on production for domestic use were favored at a conference yesterday of about 50 farm and industrial leaders under auspices of the Chamber of Commerce of the United States.

George H. Davis, of Kansas City, president of the chamber, declared prevailing sentiment at the conference was that the farmers should receive a "fair price" for that part of agricultural commodities consumed in this country.

The difference between a fair price and the prevailing market price, he explained, would be made up by a Government subsidy or "bonus" paid direct to producers. Although the conference, held behind closed doors, took no formal action, he said the majority of those present felt that distribution of agricultural commodities should be left to private facilities.

"The general view," he said, "was that subsidy payments should not be coupled with a plan for crop-control period. Farmers would be permitted to raise as large crops as they want."

He said there was strong sentiment among the conferees against price fixing.

Since the present bill was reported two great farm organizations have gone on record as favoring this $250,000,000 appropriation. The American Farm Bureau Federation, through its president, Edward A. O'Neal, has stated its position in the following telegram:

WASHINGTON, D. C., March 24, 1939.

Washington, D. C., march 24, 1935.

Honse of Representatives:

Urge your support 250,000,000 parity payments in agricultural appropriation bill. Vitally important Congress provide these funds, as promised section 303 of A. A. A. of 1938. Continuation of parity payments essential to effective operation of A. A. A. in protecting farm prices and farm income. Parity for agriculture is essential to industrial properties. to industrial prosperity.

EDWARD A. O'NEAL,
President, American Farm Bureau Federation.

On yesterday John Vesecky, president of the National Farmers Union, gave a statement to the press urging Congress "to make such appropriations as will give the farmers full

Mr. FULMER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may proceed for 2 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Carolina?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOPE. I do not assert that all of the above quotations are in direct support of this particular appropriation, but I do cite them as indicating the general acceptance on the part of political, industrial, and farm leaders of the principle that under existing conditions it is absolutely necessary to supplement the income of agricultural producers, and particularly the producers of surplus commodities by means of a subsidy from the Treasury.

The $250,000,000 proposed is but a drop in the bucket. It would take several times that much to bring full parity to the producers of farm commodities. I think the farmer deserves full parity, but I do not believe it is practical at this time to attempt to give him more than $250,000,000 plus the amounts that are carried in this bill for soil-conservation payments. To give him less, however, is to deny the farmer even a small modicum of justice. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. PIERCE of Oregon. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forms amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I am a real farmer living on my farm, and I have lived there for 40 years. My district is devoted to farming. It raises a large quantity of wheat. I am deeply interested in farm prosperity. I am seriously worried with the easy-I will not say the flippant, but the easy and careless-way in which we vote millions upon millions of dollars out of the Treasury. Government credit will last my time, but what of my 11 grandchildren coming on? I am wondering whether we are going to have any financial stability.

I do not think we ought to vote this $500,000,000 out of the Treasury for parity payments for three commodities, and I am going to vote against it. [Applause.] I am going to vote reluctantly for the $250,000,000. We need it, but we should be making arrangements to raise it by some form of taxation.

I think it is the duty of the Ways and Means Committee of this House to provide ways of getting this money. I think we should quit voting these untold millions without knowing where they are coming from. I believe the farmer ought to have parity and I believe we can get it by putting on processing taxes. The people who use the food and the fibers of this country ought to pay the cost of production.

Mr. POAGE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PIERCE of Oregon. Not now.

I just cannot understand how we are going to get cost of production simply by passing a law. It seems to me it is the duty of the committees to bring to this body bills showing how this money is going to be raised.

In a few days we are going to be asked to vote for $150,000,000 for W. P. A., and before we go home in midsummer we are going to be asked to vote a thousand million dollars for W. P. A., and we are in the red all the time. I am truly frightened at the prospect and the way we vote out these millions of dollars.

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. PIERCE of Oregon. I yield for a question.

Mr. COOLEY. I would just like to ask the gentleman if he has not supported Bonneville Dam and all those other large expenditures of money?

Mr. PIERCE of Oregon. Surely; and that is all money that is coming back into the Treasury. It is all reimbursable. Every dollar invested in Bonneville power project will come back into the Treasury with interest, and, on top of that, it will help to bring prosperity to the Northwest.

Mr. COOLEY. Does not the gentleman believe that prosperity on the farm will affect the general prosperity of the Nation?

Mr. PIERCE of Oregon. Not a doubt about it; and I will go with you on any appropriation up to cost of production to the farmer, but show me how we are going to get the money.

Mr. COOLEY. It is the duty of another committee to bring in that bill.

Mr. POAGE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. PIERCE of Oregon. I cannot yield further, as I want to conclude this statement.

I am firmly convinced that in some way we must work out legislation so that every necessary product of the farmer will bring to the man who produces it at least the cost of production. Legislation must be enacted that will in some way be able to get the money from the one who uses the foods or fibers and to pay it where it is justly due, so that the producer thereof may no longer be compelled to furnish it at a loss. I will admit it seems impossible to do this in the free and open markets of the world. The only way I can see at the present time is by processing taxes paid directly into the Treasury of the United States, upon the articles produced on the farm, so that the cost may fall upon those who make use of the foods or the fibers.

I think the Appropriations Committee was extremely liberal to the farming world when it provided $250,000,000 additional out of the Treasury of the United States, without any corresponding processing taxes moving into the Treasury designed to meet the losses the Treasury would sustain by this appropriation. I do not feel that we should jeopardize the whole program by attempting to raise the amount appropriated to a half billion dollars. I thus put myself on record as a conscientious objector to that larger appropriation now.

The $250,000,000 will give to the wheat men a parity-price contribution of 15 cents a bushel, which, with their soilconserving appropriation, will give to the average wheat man something like 25 cents or 30 cents a bushel in payments over and above his selling price or loan value. I think we better be satisfied with that amount than at this time attempt to increase this by 12 cens or 15 cents more per bushel. I think the same reasoning will apply to cotton, tobacco, and other basic commodities included in the partial parity-payment program. [Applause.]

Mr. TERRY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. Chairman, as one member of the subcommittee that reported out this bill I wish to assume my full responsibility for reporting the item of $250,000,000 for parity payments to the farmers of the country. This, of course, will not give parity payments, but from the testimony on the hearings it will give about 75 percent of parity.

We have heard a great deal from both parties about their friendship for the farmers of the country, and this afternoon you will be given an opportunity to show whether or not you are friends of the agricultural interest of this country.

We have done much for industry, we have done much for labor, and yet it is the consensus of opinion of the whole country that we have not done what we should have done for agriculture. We have been a sick country for some time now, and one of the reasons is that we have never done what we should have done for agriculture.

Mr. Chairman, all of the activities of this land are interrelated, and you cannot have a well and sound manufacturing industry, you cannot have labor in a healthy condition and at the same time have agriculture down in the depths of lowpurchasing power.

Mr. Chairman, at page 1698 of the hearings, in a discussion showing the interdependence of industry and agriculture, it is

A study made by a statistical economist connected with one of the large Chicago industries showed that with each 10-percent change in national income, there is reflected a similar change of 10 percent in the total pay roll of the Nation. A 10-percent increase in farm income reflects a 25-percent increase in gross profit of all reporting corporations, a 11-percent increase in distribution of profits in the form of dividends from all enterprises. A 10-percent change in national farm income immediately is reflected in a 10-percent change in the value of all stocks listed on the New York Stock Exchange. A 10-percent change in farm income is reflected in a 16-percent change in the profits of the International Harvester Co.; a 22-percent change in the profits of General Motors; a 14-percent change in the profits of the United Fruit Co.; 10 percent in the profits of the International Shoe Co.; 8-percent change in the profits of packers; 10-percent change in the profits of millers; and 12-percent change in the profits of the large cotton manufacturers.

I am giving you these figures to show you that by increasing farm income you increase the income of all of the business activities of this land. In the last few days I have heard a great deal about logrolling on this bill. I have heard that the people who are in favor of relief will not go along in favor of these parity payments unless they have some assurance as to what those in favor of parity payments will do for

Mr. DUNN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TERRY. Not now. It is a strange thing that those who are in favor of parity payments are being crucified, as it were, by those in favor of relief on the ground that members of the Appropriations Committee in favor of parity are at the same time not in favor of larger relief funds. The fact is that some of those on the committee who most strongly oppose relief also oppose parity prices.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Arkansas has expired.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Arkansas, who is a member of the subcommittee, be extended for 5 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. TERRY. Mr. Chairman, I do not believe in logrolling. I have never asked any of you people to vote for parity payments simply on the ground that I have supported legis-lation that you are in favor of. I have voted for the United States housing program, when there is not one single housing authority in my State, because I felt that the people in the large cities, the working people and low-income groups, should have the benefits of that program.

I am one of those Members from the South who voted for the wage and hour bill, because I felt that the great unorganized portions of our laboring people should get the benefit of the legislation. I have felt that those unorganized masses of laboring people who have not up to this time attained the benefits of union labor should receive help from the United States Government. We are now engaged at great length in endeavoring to find world markets for our products, both manufactured and raw. Yet you people who are declining to give the agricultural interests of this country parity payments are neglecting the greatest market that you can have. We have over 30,000,000 people engaged in agriculture in this country, a large part of our national population, who have not the necessary purchasing power to buy those things manufactured in the North and the East. When you deprive the agricultural people of these parity payments, which will assist them to have purchasing power, you are neglecting, probably, the greatest market that you can find.

Mr. McGRANERY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TERRY. Yes.

Mr. McGRANERY. If the Budget Director has not included this $250,000,000 in his set-up, will the gentleman say whether it will not be necessary to go out and assess some new taxes in order to raise the $250,000,000 now being asked for parity payments?

Mr. TERRY. I say to the gentleman that the Secretary of Agriculture, as was well stated by my colleague from Georgia [Mr. TARVER], made no objection to this item. He said it was not included because the President has said that he wished us to find a source of revenue to cover it, and yet I say to you that the President of the United States and others in authority here have not asked us to find taxes to pay for relief for housing, for armaments, and for those other programs for which huge sums have been appro-

It is a strange thing that we in this House should now be quibbling about finding a source of taxes for the $250,-000,000 that we are now seeking for the benefit of the agricultural interests.

Mr. McGRANERY. My question to the gentleman is whether the Budget Director included this $250,000,000?

Mr. TERRY. It is admitted that he did not, and the gentleman well knows that.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TERRY. Yes.

Mr. HOPE. Will not we get this money from the same place where we are getting the billion dollars of new national-defense money that we expect to spend?

Mr. TERRY. I say to the gentleman that we passed the largest national-defense bill on the floor of this House a few weeks ago in about 14 minutes by the clock, and nothing was said about whether or not we had to first find the taxes to pay for it. I appeal to you men of the House to give us these parity payments.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Arkansas has again expired.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. The gentleman who preceded me, the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. Terry], figures on spending but deems it not a proper question to be asked. Where are you going to get the money? I say to the Members of Congress that you have appropriated now for the five regular bills and the four additional bills which you have passed, including this agriculture bill we are now discussing, as follows:

For relief (W. P. A.)	$725,000,000
First deficiency bill	23, 765, 041
Independent offices bill	1, 668, 218, 340
Legislative establishments
Treasury and Post Office	1, 701, 189, 114
War Department (military)	513, 188, 882
Second deficiency	139, 871, 028
Agriculture
Interior Department	159, 839, 815
Total	6, 038, 691, 557

Now, I ask you the question, Where are you going to get the money?

It is a sensible, sane, and very pertinent question at this time to the House of Representatives. The total amount we collected last year was $6,241,661,226.99. That shows that we have appropriated already a sum about equal to the amount we collected last year; yet the amount that we will receive in our income next year is going to be much less, according to the President's statement, than we received last year. It will be $500,000,000 less than we have already appropriated this year for 1940.

You still have to appropriate for the nonmilitary establishment, for the civil functions of government. Last year we appropriated $198,000,000 for this purpose. You have the Navy appropriation bill yet to pass; last year it was $553,-000,000 for Navy. You have the State, Justice, and Commerce bill yet to pass; you appropriated $132,000,000 last year for that. You have the District of Columbia bill yet to pass, and you appropriated last year $50,000,000 for that.

You have relief to take care of for 1940, and last year you appropriated $3,772,000,000 for that. If you appropriate the same amount of money this year for 1940 that you appropriated for this year, you will have to add to the amount you have already appropriated the sum of $4,705,000,000, which would make the appropriations at this term of Congress over ten and one-half billion dollars. This will be about five billion more than you will receive in 1940 under present conditions.

WHERE ARE YOU GOING TO GET THE MONEY?

Now, gentlemen, if you read the article in the Washington Post this morning, where the news reporter questioned those who came from the White House yesterday, you know the President of the United States is now going to put it up to Congress; at least, he says so. You know and I know that we have appropriated and spent more money in the last 6 years than was ever appropriated in any 12 years in the history of this Nation, outside of the war years. If the President of the United States says that from now on he is going to be for economy, then he is going to put it up to the Members of Congress. Are you going to be men enough to stand up here and assume the responsibility which the people of this country are looking for Congress to assume, or are you going to be nothing but pollywogs and mollycoddles that do not have sufficient business ability to try to look forward to the fact that you must collect the money before you spend it? Are you going to permit children yet unborn to pay the bills for the folly of this Congress? That is the question we are confronted with at this time. We need Congressmen with ability and with backbone to run the affairs of Congress in this trying time.

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. I yield.

Mr. NICHOLS. I wonder if my friend would be interested in my correcting him in a matter of about $50,000,000 in his statement?

Mr. RICH. Well, I asked the Appropriations Committee's office for these figures and I feel sure they are correct.

Mr. NICHOLS. The gentleman has just stated that we would appropriate $50,000,000 for the District of Columbia. Of course, the gentleman understands, does he not, that that money comes from taxes assessed in the District, and only $5,000,000 of it comes out of the Federal Treasury, which is a little discrepancy of some $45,000,000?

Mr. RICH. Well, I got these figures from the office of the Appropriations Committee, and last year we appropriated in the District of Columbia bill $49,392,686. When I hear on the floor today talk about $250,000,000 as if it were not anything, I want to say I have heard so many of you talk about one hundred million, a billion, and all kinds of figures until it makes the people of this country dizzy in the head, and not one of you knows what $10,000 is. [Laughter and applause.] That is what you are thinking about—$10,000. The most of you fellows are thinking about that salary check. [Laughter and applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. Kerr] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. KERR. Mr. Chairman, it is needless for me to apologize for entering this debate, when you recognize the fact that the agricultural area which I represent is one of the greatest and most prosperous agricultural areas in this country at this time.

I must confess that I have not yet quite understood why it is that some Members of this Congress on both sides of this House, who should be in favor of this $250,000,000 parity appropriation, criticize the action of the Democratic Party in respect to these things in which they are in-terested. You have heard during this debate, the reciprocaltrade agreements attacked. They have been attacked when the Members who attacked them ought to have known that through these reciprocal-trade agreements we have taken off a large surplus of the various commodities that have been accumulated in this country for several years, and which could not have been removed otherwise. Those gentlemen's constituents who attacked these trade agreements have been the principal beneficiaries of those agreements. You have heard those gentlemen who represent the dairy interests of this country, and we are all interested in this wonderful industry of the United States. They have attacked this administration and its agricultural program because of those trade agreements and because of the reciprocal-tariff agreements. I want to tell you gentlemen that these Members were not warranted in making an attack upon the Democratic policy in respect to their great industry, because they have been probably the greatest beneficiaries of this administration and its agricultural program than any other industry in this country, and the records as to how the administration has dealt with them clearly prove this statement.

This administration loaned the dairy industry of this country millions and millions of dollars to handle their products and to take their surplus products off the market. This administration has bought from those dairy people millions of dollars worth of their stock and distributed it to the poor and needy people of this Nation. It ill becomes those gentlemen to criticize the action of this administration in respect to that agricultural industry.

Then, too, gentlemen, you have heard criticism of the measure under consideration from some of those Congressmen who represent the sugarcane and beet industry in the United States proper. They doubtless feel that these areas in the United States should grow all of the sugar we need. They should certainly not complain, for we have subsidized them through a protective tariff so high that it costs the consumers of sugar in this country $350,000,000 annually—tariff tax for the benefit of growers and refiners in these United States. Those farmers plant 1,000,000 acres in cane and sugar beets in this country. They average $75,000,000 for their crops. That is a greater average per acre than any other agricultural products in this country, except tobacco. They are beneficiaries of this Government because a protective tariff puts a subsidy of $350,000,000 in their and the refiners' pockets every year.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KERR. No; I cannot yield. This interest is subsidized by a tariff, $350,000,000 every year.

The farmers of this Nation paid one-third of that subsidy. The truth of the business is, Mr. Chairman, that these gentlemen who complain about these things belong to that industrial class of this country which has been nursing the tariff bottle for 70 years, and they do not like to be weaned from it. That is why they are protesting.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. KERR. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 2 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. KERR. Now, what is our duty to the American farmer? The last 6 years we have appropriated $19,000,000,000 for public relief. The farmers have received less than 10 percent of it, either directly or indirectly. I repeat, of this great appropriation of $19,000,000,000 only one-tenth of it has gone, directly or indirectly, back to the farmers' pockets. They are entitled to consideration before this House. They are entitled to any law that is fair that will put them on an equal basis with the other industries of this Nation. They are entitled to sympathetic and fair consideration when measures are proposed to give them a purchasing power equal to other industries, the truth is, say what you may, they constitute the backbone of American life; and I venture this prophecy, that if you take care of the farmers of the country they will take care of the Nation regardless of its many hazards. [Applause.]

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I will speak very briefly in behalf of the Expenditures Committee of the House. I have generally voted for the items in agricultural appropriation bills. I am perhaps the one Member from New England who can qualify as a farmer. I have done much of it. Seriously, where is the money coming from to meet this huge expenditure for parity payments, so-called? Shall I give my neighbor $10 because I may be highly profited by perhaps a return of $1 on the investment?

I wonder if there are not men in this Chamber of sufficient stature of influence and persuasive power to stop this raid on the Treasury. The papers stated that the President in his message this year sneeringly said to the Congress: "If you want economy, you can have it; if you desire it, you can do it."

Sneeringly, indeed, Governor Eccles on Saturday said: "If you want to balance the Budget, go ahead and do it; we realize that the public wants you to do it, but I dare you to do it."

We have dealt generously with the farmer. First and second mortgages, seed loans, production loans, and much other assistance by various other agencies of the Government has been granted. Not satisfied with enough of these, we contribute soil-conservation payments of about $500,000,000. Today you will add $250,000,000, and some of you would even vote for $500,000,000. Why do you not make it $1,000,000,000 and be perfectly happy?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield at that point?

Mr. GIFFORD. I yield.

Mr. O'CONNOR. The gentleman would not want to balance the Budget at the expense and interest of a class of people in this country who have been producing for 100 years or more at a cost that is less than production?

Mr. GIFFORD. I probably am just as sympathetic for the welfare of the people as the gentleman is. But we must stop somewhere. But I am not one of those orators who in a demagogic way proclaim, "I am for the plain people." am for them but I ought not to need to constantly assert it. But we must be watchful of the Treasury. I have studied with a great deal of care its financial condition. I realize that the banks and insurance companies have mopped up $17,000,000,000 of this debt we have piled up. I know the menace of that situation. I know that when a very large amount of bonds may be dumped on the market a financial crisis will result. We are living in a psychological atmosphere of security and we are unable to predict the length of time it may continue. We are on a dangerous road and we know it, and everyone of you in your quiet hours are squirming with your conscience at the huge and dangerous debt Congress has placed upon this Nation. Certainly you do not need to be told that it is the chief menace to our national security. If your reelection depends upon outright gifts to the farmers, you will indeed be deceived. A check of a few dollars of charity payments made to a farmer who knows that he himself will be taxed later to pay for it will not be persuasive. He wishes his Government to be that instrumentality which sees that he has fair play. He knows that if he, assisted by the Almighty, raises vast surplus crops, that parity payments will only encourage him to raise more. He surely knows that governments are not superior to great economic forces.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Chairman-

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 3 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Chairman, we were warned at the outset of this debate that the Republicans would make a political football out of the parity provision in this bill, a provision which is very vital to our farmers. We were told that the Republicans would kick the Ferguson amendment into the bill in committee, raising the amount for parity payments to $500,000,000 only for the purpose of loading the bill down in the hope that the entire provision would be defeated in the House.

We may find some consolation in a newspaper article which appeared in the Washington Post this morning. The article leads me to believe that there is still some hope that at least some of our Republican friends will vote for the Ferguson amendment in both the Committee of the Whole and in the House. The headline of the article to which I refer reads as follows: "Republicans Cut Party Line in Parity Vote." The subheadline reads as follows: "Conference Frees Members to Follow Their Consciences." article itself quotes the minority leader [Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts1 as having remarked after the conference of House Republicans last night that "Republican Members will vote their consciences on farm parity and the supplemental relief appropriation, since they are not partisan matters." I am delighted to know that the minority leader has finally released the enslaved consciences of the minority, which has during the entire session so well followed his leadership, and we may now expect the gentlemen on the left side of this aisle to follow their consciences, as no doubt they will. [Applause.]

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOLEY. I yield.

Mr. TARVER. The article went on to state further, however, that the consciences of 140 of them would prevent passage of the amendment.

Mr. COOLEY. I have no way of reading the consciences of the Members of the minority but I do call attention to the fact that it does not appear that the minority leader had any particular reference to the conscience of the gentleman from Massachusetts who has just spoken or to the very distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. Taber] whose names appear in the article as having predicted that 140 of the 169 Republican Members would vote against parity payments. We have never held out any hope for either of them anyway. [Laughter.] The minority leader, among other things, is a great philatelist. During the election of last year he made a great collection of rubber stamps. I congratulate him upon releasing the consciences of the rubber stamps of the minority so that they may feel free to vote for parity payments at this time. I do not believe that any sincere, honest, or courageous Congressman will hesitate for a moment to vote his convictions with regard to this amendment. I am sure that there is a great difference of opinion in this body with reference to this provision in the bill now under consideration.

I appreciate the fact that $500,000,000 is a stupendous sum of money but since parity is only justice I hope that the sum involved in the pending amendment will not cause us to shut our eyes to the principle involved and the pitiful situation in which the farmers of this Nation find themselves at the present time.

I agree with the statement which has been made on the floor during the course of this debate, that the farmers of the Nation have been patient quite long enough. I am unwilling to longer abuse that patience. I am sick and tired of so much talk about parity for the farmer and so little action to obtain it. I, for one, am happy to have the privilege of voting for the Ferguson amendment which will increase the income of the producers of the five major commodities to a point at least nearer to the parity figure. I am sure that all Members of this House from agricultural districts in appealing to the farmers for their votes, have stated that they believed that agriculture should be placed on parity with industry and that many Members of the House have been elected upon pledges to support farm legislation and to strive to obtain parity for agriculture. Here is your chance. Here is the opportunity for you to redeem your platform pledges. Here is an opportunity for you to say effectively whether or not you intended to carry out your platform pledges to the farmers of your districts. This is a test vote. Many of you have said that you are for the farmers, for farm legislation, and for parity payments, but many seem frightened with the magnitude of the promises you have made to put the farmer on parity with industry.

I shall not be frightened by the suggestion that by voting for the $500,000,000 for agriculture I will defeat the very purpose which is sought to be accomplished by this section of the bill. Such a suggestion is preposterous. I do not believe that Members who are against the $250,000,000 will vote for $500,000,000. Neither do I believe that there are many who are actually in favor of parity for the farmer who will vote against $500,000,000, since even that amount will only enable us to reach approximately 90 percent of parity. Of course, if we cannot get $500,000,000 I hope that we will certainly pass the Cannon amendment carrying $250,000,000.

The committee in the exercise of its wisdom, reported this bill to the House carrying $250,000,000 for parity payments, without Budget approval and, of course, without tax provisions providing the money but all of us know that the Appropriations Committee is not the proper committee to report a tax bill. We also know that the Ways and Means Committee, which is the proper committee, will not bring any tax bill raising money for parity payments until the amount is actually fixed and appropriated. If the money is appropriated then we have every reason to believe that the Ways and Means Committee will provide the necessary funds.

If the Appropriations Committee did not think that funds would be provided, why did they bring this bill in for even $250,000,000? Much has been said about the wishes of the President. The Appropriations Committee, in bringing in even $250,000,000 without Budget approval, has indicated its willingness to override the wishes of the Executive with regard to this very vital matter. If it is necessary for the Ways and Means Committee to bring in a bill and for Congress to vote for a tax bill raising additional revenue with which to pay parity payments, then why not provide $500,000,000, which will at least approach parity rather than $250,000,000, which is wholly inadequate?

Mr. FERGUSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOLEY. I yield to my friend, the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. FERGUSON. The $250,000,000 provides for 75-percent parity on the major commodities while $500,000,000 will provide 90 percent of parity.

Mr. COOLEY. Yes: that is my understanding.

Mr. Chairman, a distinguished Member of the House has asserted that a half a loaf is better than no bread at all. I am tired of the farmers of the Nation being given only a half loaf, and I urge that we do better than give to the farmer half a loaf and that we bring him nearer to parity by adopting the amendment which will provide $500,000,000 for this purpose.

These people from the city districts state that they cannot make up their minds to vote for this vast sum of money for the farmers of the Nation. They seem to forget that the farmer has profited little, if any, by the billions upon billions of dollars which have been appropriated for C. W. A., W. P. A., H. O. L. C., F. H. A., U. S. H. A., and other agencies which have been established, and that he does not profit by wage and hour legislation which increases the price of everything that he has to buy. How do these agencies help the farmer except as they may tend to help the general welfare of the Nation generally? Oh, yes; the Members of Congress from farm districts are supposed to vote for everything, but when they come here and ask for an appropriation which admittedly is insufficient to accomplish the full purpose sought, an appropriation which all political parties agree is fair and just, we are accused of asking for too much. Shall our plea for the farmers be stifled in our mouths?

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. STEFAN. Mr. Chairman, just to keep the record straight and to give some information to the distinguished gentleman from North Carolina who preceded me and who took occasion to chastise the Members of the minority side, I would advise him to consult with the chairman of the subcommittee in charge of this bill making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture. In that consultation he will learn that had it not been for a member of the minority party this particular item for parity payments to farmers would not have been in the bill at all.

Mr. COOLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEFAN. I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. COOLEY. I want to congratulate and commend the gentleman who is now addressing the House for the great interest he has had in this matter.

Mr. STEFAN. I merely wanted to inform the gentleman from North Carolina, for whom I have a great deal of respect, that sometimes it is wise to consult Members on the minority side before making certain statements which may unjustly chastise the entire membership on the minority side.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. STEFAN. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I may say that the gentleman from North Carolina was just as accurate in his description of the rest of the Republicans as he was in his statement with reference to the conduct of the members of the Committee on Appropriations. The gentleman has been here long enough to know, and he should know, that Republican conferences never bind any Member on any subject. [Applause.]

Mr. STEFAN. I thank the gentleman from Massachusetts. He has confirmed my stand that party politics has no place in my determination to serve my district.

Mr. Chairman, at this time I want to assume my responsibility as a member of the Committee on Appropriations and say that I am not only for fair and just help to farmers but I am for the principles of cost of production for farmers. This parity item under consideration is an admission that the principles involved in the cost-of-production bill are worthy.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEFAN. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky. Mr. MAY. I have felt from the debate that has been going on here during the afternoon that the country may misunderstand the situation as it actually is. As I understand, this $250,000,000 in issue here is in addition to what the Budget recommended, and there is over $900,000,000 appropriated for the Department of Agriculture in this bill without the $250,000,000.

Mr. STEFAN. I know the gentleman is right, but it is merely a brief approach to what industry should have approached a long time ago. Many Members who preceded me have admitted there will be no recovery in this country until the farmer receives purchasing power again.

Mr. Chairman, I opposed the compulsory features of the farm bill last year because the farmers in my district are opposed to compulsion. But the bill was passed and there being no other farm legislation I feel what legislation we have should be improved and everything be done to improve it until we secure some permanent legislation. I do not believe that the farm bill has worked out to the benefit of all farmers. Farm prices and conditions on the farms indicate this fact. I wanted a voluntary program. You will remember that during the debate on the farm bill I questioned leading members of the committee in charge of the measure regarding the loaning features. I was assured that the farmers would be allowed to borrow money on their corn whether the bill was passed or not. But I find that this idea was not carried out and only those who actually joined the program could secure these benefits. As a result I find today that there is one class of farmer who is not in the program being forced to sell his corn for around 38 cents a bushel while his neighbor, who is in the program, can sell his corn and get 57 cents a bushel. That makes for bad feeling and injustice. I want something done here so that all of the farmers in the corn-marketing area can get the same treatment. I hope the Committee on Agriculture and the Secretary of Agriculture can get together and make some helpful changes in the farm program so that all farmers are treated alike. Some changes which can be used as a stopgap until we can get some real permanent legislation which will actually bring the farming industry on a par with industry and labor.

Farmers who do not believe in coercion or compulsion are beginning to surrender because they are forced into programs they do not believe in because they want to participate in the loan features and benefits. Because of that I feel that the parity item in this bill should stay in. I admit that it is somewhat in the nature of a subsidy. But are we not subsidizing all other industry? Are we not spending billions for war munitions and armaments in the argument of national defense? Does not the farming industry rate the same treatment? The farming industry represents real national defense—those who raise the food we eat, the food the Army and Navy must have to become successful. Do we not argue daily here that we must do something for industry in order that we defeat this war on depression? We might as well admit that eastern factories and industry and even labor will never succeed, nor will the war on depression become successful until the farmer gets some purchasing power. He is your best customer. He is in the market for everything you have to sell, but he cannot buy now because his purchasing power has disappeared. No one denies that it is wrong to ask anyone to produce anything at a loss. Therefore we all agree to the principles in the cost of production for the farmer. Perhaps the bill suggested needs amending. That can be done if you give it some fair and impartial hearings on this floor. I feel that the parity item in this bill seeks to somewhat reach the principles in the proposed cost-of-production legislation. I agree that it is not in the Budget, but it is a step toward increasing the price of farm products. Here is a bill calling for over a billion dollars, and there is not a single item in it that will increase the farm prices except in the parity item. If it will help do that, plus adding encouragement toward better refinancing for the farmer, I can do nothing more than vote for it. I do this because I represent a purely farming district, and when the farmers in my district prosper the rest of the district prospers, and so does the entire Nation.

In the distribution of these funds I plead for the real farmer and demand that the money go to the actual producer and not to the absentee operator of gigantic acreage.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, it is now 4 o'clock, and we have had quite a bit of debate. I wonder how many more Members care to speak.

Mr. Chairman, I shall not make any request for limitation of debate at this time.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. Burdick].

Mr. BURDICK. Mr. Chairman, I have been in lots of places in my lifetime, but never in one like this. Here everybody has an idea and nobody thinks. The gentleman from Pennsylvania complains of huge appropriations. Most of them were made for war purposes, but he voted "aye" on every one of them. You are concerned about how you are going to get the money. If you will listen a minute, I will tell you how to get it, and it will not cost you anything.

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. BURDICK. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. DINGELL. Will the gentleman tell me how much we will get from North Dakota?

Mr. BURDICK. You will get as much from North Dakota as you will from any other State in the Union compared to its population.

Mr. DINGELL. We have not in the last 5 years.

Mr. BURDICK. If you will tell me how much you took away from us in the last 55 years, I will account for the last

5 years. [Applause.]

If you will add a provision to this bill that no bonds of the United States shall be issued to finance any provision of the act, but that the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to issue Treasury notes, not bonds, under the authority of the act of 1934 authorizing the issuance of $3,000,000,000 in Treasury notes without reference to any base of issue except the responsibility of the Government of the United States, you can get the money that way. In the history of this great Republic we have had only two Presidents with nerve enough to face the bankers of the country and stand up for the people. Andrew Jackson was one of them and Lincoln was the other. In 1863 Lincoln had issued in this country $450,000,000 of this kind of money, and $341,000,000 of it is circulating today. We have never paid a cent of interest on these millions, and if we were compelled today to pay the interest on the money that has circulated since 1863 at the same rate of interest the farmers are paying on their homes it would take $30,000,000,000 to settle the account. You can see what interest is doing to this

You can issue this money and pay the farmers their parity price, or approach it, and without that there can be no recovery.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURDICK. I yield to the gentleman from Idaho.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Is it not a fact that today there are £300,000,000 of British money circulating the same as our greenbacks without any gold coverage?

Mr. BURDICK. The gentleman is correct.

You have the authority. You do not need any law. It is on the statute books now. You put it there in 1934. Issue this money and let it circulate. If it is outstanding 50 years, that does not make any difference. It does not cost anything to do it, and you can put agriculture back on its feet and bring prosperity to this country.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURDICK. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi. Mr. RANKIN. We have an advantage over President Lincoln because we have about $15,000,000,000 in gold if we want to use it. On the $246,000,000 of Lincoln notes that are outstanding today we have saved $11,000,000,000 in interest since 1863.

Mr. BURDICK. The gentleman from Mississippi is right on this question, and I appreciate his worth to the people of the United States.

I am not in favor of what some have argued here, "Let us give the farmers a part of their price." That will not do any good. You will prolong the agony, that is all. Let us do the job now at this session of Congress and put buying power back at the grass roots.

Do you know that in normal times the farmers of this country buy two-thirds of all the steel output of the United States, and that they bought 40 percent of the output of all the textile mills of New England? Now the farmers of the country cannot buy anything. When the farmers' buying power is shut off, all the people who make the goods that the farmers buy have to shut down their mills, and there are millions out of employment because the farmer cannot buy.

You can put this whole program through this afternoon, $500,000,000 or $1,000,000,000, and then save money. You can do it without this interest charge. We are concerned about affairs in Europe more than we are about affairs in America, but just remember now that the economic forces in Europe are stronger than all the power of the armies and navies of the world. We sit here with our head under our wing and appropriate billions for defense and then hold up our hands in horror when some propose to put our own house in order. What right have we to criticize any country in Europe when we have more unemployment and more foreclosures on homes than all the countries in Europe? Before we get too busy weeping over distress in Europe let us see our own citizens who have been driven from their homes by the interest system, to become public charges. Strike a blow here for liberty and permit the people of this great Republic to use the credit of their own country for their own use. Drive the money changers out and let the people in. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Beckworth].

Mr. BECKWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I am quite happy to have this privilege of rising here for the first time to support the $500,000,000 amendment offered by Mr. Ferguson of my neighboring State of Oklahoma. It occurs to me that this is one of the most meritorious amendments which has been offered at this session of Congress.

It is true that $500,000,000 is a stupendous sum of money. It is a colossal sum of money. Standing alone figures are without significance; they are meaningless. Indeed, figures derive their meaning only as they pertain or relate to other figures. For the last 6 years the American Congress has either acceded to or actually sponsored budgets approximating $8,000,000,000 or $9,000,000,000, the Congress has been dealing in billions, not mere millions. Therefore, the sum of $500,000,000 is relatively small and insignificant compared with what the Congress has been concerning itself with. It actually is about one-eighteenth of what might be termed the annual Budget. In view of the fact that one-eighteenth of the money that is being appropriated or which will be appropriated in this instant would be expended to benefit approximately one-third of our population, I believe this amendment deserves the serious and deliberative consideration of the Members of Congress. In other words, we are getting a long way fast by appropriating $500,000,000 to benefit approximately one-third of our population.

It has been said that those in authority have not asked for the money; that no substantiating evidence has been submitted disclosing the need of the money, that, in short, it has not been included in the Budget. This perhaps is true, but I submit that if those in authority who are doing the asking, and you know who the big asker is, knew as much about the plight of the farmer in this country as they know about the plight of people living within the industrial areas, and the larger cities, the request would be for not $250,000,000, not $500,000,000, but for a billion dollars, for those who have been requesting have not been reluctant to ask for plenty. No, the time-worn custom is being demonstrated and the precise dramas relative to the American farmer are again shaping themselves.

Only recently in the possession of you Congressmen there was a publication entitled "The South Our Economic Problem No. 1." Would the South, largely composed of farmers, be our "economic problem No. 1" if the farmer was receiving his proper share of the national income or if his produced commodities were yielding him a profit? It is conceded that the financial and economic problems of the farmer are manifold and perplexing, but when it comes time to "go to bat" for him, so to speak, many of his purported friends silently and passively occupy the side lines.

Always the requests of the farmer, his needs and problems, are considered last. This Congress is a rather splendid example. For close to 3 months we have been in session—practically one-half of this session—some five or six billion dollars have thus far been appropriated, and countless speeches have been made. It is astounding to note the relatively small amount of time and attention which has been devoted to agriculture, the farmers, and problems related thereto.

In my opinion, the farmer has always received the little end of the deal insofar as legislation is concerned. Of course, we do know that this administration has tried to help the farmer in some ways, but it has not gone nearly far enough.

To this side of the aisle I may say, to the Republicans, if you please, I understand a number of you are in favor of the cost-of-production plan. I recognize that perhaps the plan has great merit; certainly its objectives are worthy; but I say to you that if you cannot get the cost-of-production plan now—and you have no assurance that you will get it—why not take less than the cost of production, which is nearer parity than that now received by the farmers, for it is considerably less, by supporting the Ferguson amendment. In other words, if you cannot get a ham, take a shoulder. Remember this clearly, by voting against the $500,000,000 you are not sniping the Democratic Party, the President, but the American farmer.

I was astounded and appalled the other day when listening to those who discussed the farmer question in connection with the W. P. A. and funds for this agency.

Some Members from industrial districts spoke recently expressing doubt as to what explanation they might offer to the people of their respective districts if the additional W. P. A. appropriation is not soon received. About 2 months ago I voted for $875,000,000 for the W. P. A. I did not ask myself the question whether or not I could justify my stand in the minds of the farmers who live in my district, in view of the fact they, the farmers, are not receiv-ing parity for their commodities. I voted for the sum because I thought it was right, fair, and just, and along the same lines and by the same token and by the same sign and the same symbol, why could not those of you who have injected this issue assume the same attitude and viewpoint in behalf of the American farmer? In other words, it is not a question provincial in nature, it is not a question of section against section, but it is a question of trying to give each person or each group of persons a fair deal, and if you want to answer the question quite simply, do so by the facts and say to your people that in the year 1938 more than $1,900,-000,000 was spent for the W. P. A. while the farmer received in the neighborhood of $700,000,000. In other words, some 3,000,000 W. P. A. clients, less than 3 percent of our population, received over $1,900,000,000, while some 30,000,000 American farmers, almost one-third of our population, received far less than half this amount of money. This, in my opinion, will constitute a very logical reason for your vote, but in addition to that, the main question is whether or not the farmer is actually receiving parity and from the information that has been given us, we all are positive he is not. Therefore, I sincerely say that we can justify and unquestionably condone our votes to give the American farmers this sum of money which would be provided by the adoption of the Ferguson amendment.

High tariffs, discriminatory freight rates, and many other factors have for years penalized, pauperized, and handicapped the American farmer. As someone has suggested, this is not equality. You favor it, I know. Manifest your belief in equality and your desire to deal equitably with the American farmer by adopting the Ferguson amendment. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. PIERCE of New York. Mr. Chairman, I presume there is not a Member of this Congress who did not at some time during the course of his campaign, be he a Republican or a Democrat, commit himself to the principle that there should be economy in government, and that the most important issue before the people of the United States today is reduction in taxation.

Permit me to say, as one Republican, to the gentleman from North Carolina who preceded me shortly that I am here this afternoon to keep that pledge. One gentleman in discussion of this bill on Friday afternoon referred to the fact that many Members arose and professed their love for the farmer and their affection for him and that their activities ended there. The fact of the matter is there is a simple, plain, convincing, and effective way to show whether or not we have the well-being of the farmer at heart and that is to vote to reduce the heavy burden of taxation which he bears, and if it happens to begin in this instance with the striking out of $250,000,000 in which he may have a selfish interest, he will support that vote just the same, and it will not be necessary for any who vote in that way to make long explanations or write involved letters to his farmer friends at home to convince them that he has voted in their interests, because they know it.

There is another reason why this bill should not pass and this amendment should not pass in its present form. It is unjust and unfair to the dairy industry, one of the vital branches of the industry of agriculture. I voice this protest in behalf of 75,000 dairy farmers in my State of New York alone, 8,000 of whom live in my district, who are faced today with one of the most serious crises in the history of agriculture. It is unfair and unjust in that it taxes them to encourage or help, perhaps, if the parity program be right, those engaged in other branches, but let me tell you something else with all the earnestness at my command. The farmers I know are alarmed over this New Deal venture into the realm of farm financing by this parity program. They have been taxed and taxed and taxed for New Deal spending, they have been taxed and taxed to the point of exhaustion for somebody else, and they do not welcome an opportunity to be taxed to pay themselves the money coming from the tax.

The farmers of this country today are interested most of all in the issue of economy. Cut down the farmers' cost of taxation, reduce the burden that he bears, and free his hands in that way and he will do the rest, for after all, right now, today, he is the most enterprising and substantial citizen there is in this country of ours. [Applause.]

Mr. POAGE. Mr. Chairman, we have discussed the ways and means of raising money. We have given rather little attention today to the absolute necessity of bringing into some degree of parity the income of the various industrial groups of this Nation if any or all of these groups are to prosper. I am thoroughly convinced that it is utterly impossible to secure prosperity for any group in America over any extended period of time until every large group in the Nation has a reasonable buying power, and until that buying power bears a reasonable relationship in proportion to the number within that group to the buying power of all other groups of the Nation. You cannot take one-third of your Nation, whether it be the third that the President has so graphically described in times past, or whether it be the third that tills the soil, which latter group includes a major portion of the first group, and say that that group shall have a buying power of less than 10 percent of that of the Nation and expect that group to be able to support its proportionate share of consumption in that Nation. [Applause.]

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. POAGE. Yes.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Does not the gentleman feel that in the kind of a world in which we live today, that one of the principal jobs of responsible people in government today is to see to it that that is done?

Mr. POAGE. Absolutely. I feel that that is basic; that regardless of how much money you put out, if it all goes to any one group of our people, you will never restore prosperity. We should bear in mind that we have complained for years that there was a small group in Wall Street that got all the money. You preached it and I did, and we believed it, and it has been true; and we cannot sit here idly now and say that this Government, in distributing purchasing power over the Nation, is going to fall into the same erroneous policy that has brought ruin on our economic system in the past.

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. POAGE. No; I have only 3 minutes more. If we cannot establish buying power for that third of our population, you can never expect employment in your factories. You may raise hourly wages, but you cannot keep those men employed in your factories unless you have buying power in that great basic third of your people, those engaged in agriculture. I know that when it comes to a proposition of simply saying that you are going to restore that buying power by granting subsidy that you cannot continue to grant subsidies year after year in any such large amounts as will provide that purchasing power.

Though it cannot be done over a long period of time, we know that it can be done immediately, and we are dealing today with an immediate problem, one which confronts our immediate purchasing power. Until we rewrite our basic agricultural legislation this problem can be dealt with in no other manner than to give direct assistance from the United States Government to a great group of underprivileged citizens. That is the only way that you can meet the situation for this year and probably for next year. It is too late to change our farm program this year. Planting has already begun. I hope that in the not-too-distant future we will be able to adopt a farm policy that will enable our farmers to produce freely and to sell at a reasonable price, for both price and volume are necessary to give our farmers a reasonable income. And right here let me call attention to this one thing before my time expires. You have been told that $500,000,000 would pay approximately 90 percent of parity to the farmer, but bear this in mind: Five hundred millions pay partial parity only on that portion of the farmers' crop that he is allowed to grow under the crop and acreage reduction programs. Thus it amounts to only about 90 percent of 60 percent of a normal crop, and even though you give the $500,000,000 you have only partially restored parity of purchasing power on no more than 60 percent of the farmers' normal production. This gives only approximately 54 percent of parity purchasing power. This means that even with the Ferguson amendment, for which I shall vote, that farm purchasing power will only be about one-half as great as from 1909 to 1914. Surely you cannot retore any great degree of prosperity on that, and yet this is all that is offered. It is not all that was promised to the farmers. It is not all that is needed, but it is all we can get, and it is more than many Members want to grant. I hope we will consider this $500,000,000 as a minimum, not as an adequate answer to farm needs. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last four words, and I ask unanimous consent to be permitted to proceed for 3 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is recognized for 8 minutes.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Chairman, no one is more concerned in securing parity income for the farmers of the country than I am, but I want them to secure parity income in the prices that they actually receive for their commodities on the American market rather than through a continuous, disastrous program which is now in effect in this country. Let us examine the picture for the past 3 years. The best prices that the farmers have had during the past 6 years were in 1936, when there was no subsidy program, when agriculture was operating under a voluntary soil-conservation program, with appropriations of around $300,000,000, with no parity payments.

The program operated very well during 1936 and 1937, and the farmers, including the cotton farmers and other farmers, received nearly parity income for their products. Then came the Agricultural Adjustment Administration of 1938, and soon as that was passed, with all of its compulsion and control, farm prices started to go down. Then a subsidy was necessary. First, in 1937 the cotton farmers secured $130,000,000 as subsidy payments, in addition to the soil-conservation benefit payments. Then in 1938 it was not $130,000,000, but it was $212,000,000. Now we are asked for a parity payment, or a subsidy payment, of $250,000,000. With the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma we are now asked for $500,000,000 as subsidy payments, 40 percent of which is to be used for cotton.

What has happened to the whole program? The prices that the farmers receive have been going down. An effort has been made through subsidy payments to give the farmer adequate income. The Members urging this additional subsidy are saying that they must have something for cotton. What has happened to the cotton situation? In 1933, the first year of the New Deal, we exported more than 8,000,000 bales of cotton into the world market. Then came the control over the American cotton farmer and our exports started to diminish. Prices went down, and through the curtailment program in the cotton sections nearly 3,000,000 persons were put on public relief, and they are still there, because they were given no opportunity to work on the cotton farms of this country.

This year it is estimated by the Department of Agriculture that our exports of cotton will not be 8,000,000 bales, but we have dwindled to an amount that will be a little in excess of three and one-half million bales instead of 8,000,000 bales.

In analyzing the effect of the control program for cotton we find that foreign production has increased in more than the amount we have decreased in this country, and we have lost our foreign market for one of the essential export crops produced in the United States.

Then it was found necessary to put a prop under cotton because with the reduced acreage we were still producing too much for domestic consumption and export, and they started the loan program and loaned more than the market price of cotton in addition to the subsidies. Today we have 11,400 000 bales of cotton upon which the Government has invested $600,000,000, with a carrying charge of more than $45,000.000 a year to hold the cotton. Now they are asking for a subsidy of $500,000,000 in order to temporarily give cotton another injection into the arm so as to carry this thing on for another year. What it will be next year no one can tell, and one of these days we will find that those props will be broken down; and then the cotton farmer, the dairy farmer, and the wheat farmer will be down in the depths of disaster, with the lowest prices this country has ever seen on all farm commodities.

We might as well be honest with ourselves. If we cannot be honest with ourselves, let us be honest with the American farmer and try to pass some constructive legislation that will restore to him his world market; that will restore to him his domestic market and guarantee him an American price level.

I served in Congress when the cotton farmers were receiving 22 cents a pound for cotton, when the wheat farmers were getting $1.35 to $1.65 a bushel for wheat. Those were back in the twenties—in the days to which some of our Democratic friends say they want to return for a price level, but they do not want to return to those days because the Republican Party was in power.

The farm question is not a political matter. It should not be a political matter here today. I was surprised when my good friend from North Carolina [Mr. Cooley] tried to inject politics into the debate, to the effect that our distinguished leader on the minority side had released some of the Republican Members. The truth is, we have never had any binding agreement since I have been here, for 12 years, tying up any Republican Congressman on his vote. I say to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. Cooley] we do not have to try to evade our convictions, but had it not been for the "rubber stamp" tactics of the Democratic majority, men who have deserted their own personal, honest convictions during the past 6 years, we would not be in the muddle we are in today. [Applause.]

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I am sorry; I cannot yield. One gentleman referred to the reciprocal-trade agreements. Well, what has happened to cotton under the reciprocal-trade agreements? Your exports dropped from 8,000,000 bales of cotton down to 3,500,000 bales today. You have destroyed your cotton market. You are giving away our export market to foreign farmers who are now producing cotton, where we should be doing it in this country for export, the same as we did for more than 100 years prior to the New Deal. [Ap-

Now, something was said also by the same gentleman about the wonderful aid given to the dairy industry. That is the largest industry in American agriculture. They have had a little aid. They used $17,000,000, as I understand it, to buy surplus butter. On March 6 they stopped buying surplus butter, and what happened?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. No; I am sorry.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. The gentleman ought to state

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I am very glad to accept the actual facts.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has expired.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 2 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. The exact amount spent for the purchase of surplus dairy products for the last year alone is in excess of $33,000,000.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I am very glad to have that figure.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. And when you add the loans it makes a total of $44,000,000 spent in the last year.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I thank the gentleman for the information. Forty-four million dollars for the greatest industry in American agriculture as compared with the hundreds of millions of dollars given to other branches of agriculture-cotton, wheat, tobacco and rice-which make up only one-third of the agricultural income of this country. Forty-four million dollars for dairy products! And what happened to the dairy products purchasing program? They stopped buying butter on March 6 of this year, and immediately the props went out from under the market price and butterfat dropped 4 cents a pound to the American farmers. What happened further? The price of dairy cows dropped around $20 a head because butterfat went down. The loss sustained by the American dairy farmer throughout this country cannot be reckoned in millions, it goes into the hundreds of millions of dollars in 3 weeks' time. This is the loss he has sustained in just the past 30 days, something from which he will never recover because we are now going into a flush season in the production of dairy products.

I am for giving the farmers parity payment. I want to do everything I can to restore the price level for the American farmer, because he is the main economic factor in this country. So do not misunderstand me when I bring out these things. Knowing that the program in operation has failed it is our duty to get down to business and enact sound and beneficial legislation that will be of real benefit in restoring income to the farmers of this country. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this amendment and all amendments thereto close in 25 minutes.

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Chairman, I ask recognition in opposition to the motion.

The CHAIRMAN. The motion is not debatable.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. Mott) there were—ayes 195, noes 31.

So the motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr.

NICHOLS] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Chairman, I presume I fall within that class pointed out by the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Rich], the class that does not know what $10,000 is. I am not, of course, a baron of industry. I have not for a number of years been engaged in running of the great woolen mills of this country. Probably by reason of that I have not learned the value of money. I do know, however, that $10,000 is the sum of money it costs me every year to pay for the privilege of being a Member of this body in the matter of campaign expenses and living expenses in Washington and Oklahoma. This is one way, at least, by which I can measure the amount of $10,000.

What is this terrible thing we are trying to do? How are we trying to wreck the Treasury of the United States? What is it we are about to do that is going to destroy the economics of this Nation? Why, we are asking you to place the farmer, who forms one-third of the population of this Nation, upon an equal footing with whom? Not on an equal footing with the privileged few, nor with bankers nor big business, but on an equal footing with industry, with the laboring man and small-business man of this country. A terrible state of affairs when men would have the intestinal fortitude to stand on the floor of this House and ask that the farmer be given as fair a deal as those employed by the industries of the United States!

I have no apology to offer for supporting the Ferguson amendment. Where are we going to get the money? I answer that by saying that we placed in the hands of our great President the other day power with which to save this amount of money under the reorganization bill. Let us reorganize the departments of the Government; let us write off some of these useless idle bureaus [applause] that infest this Government. Let us stop some of the overlapping duties. It is not only the salaries of the people who run those bureaus but it is the things they spend money for to keep the bureaus alive. If that were done, we would save more than this amount of money.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NICHOLS. No; I cannot yield. I am sorry.

We could raise the money very easily by a processing tax; and if that is all that my friends on the minority side are worried about, in the event that we do adopt any amount of money here to pay even an approach to parity, I know my friends over here, being interested simply in raising the money, will support a bill which will impose a processing tax for that purpose.

A distinguished friend of mine on the committee said in his remarks that if you want to be a friend of the farmer you could not vote for $500,000,000. The test of being a friend of the farmer, said my friend, is if you vote for $250,000,000. What strange philosophy. In Oklahoma, down in my country, we do not think that half a loaf is as good as a whole loaf; and, of course, $500,000,000 is not a whole loaf. that will not put the farmer on an equal footing with the industries of this country. It will approach it by only 90 percent. Another friend of mine a minute ago, the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, the gentleman from Kentucky, pointed out that this $250,000,000 is in addition to the $900,000,000 which has already been appropriated for the Department of Agriculture.

The gentleman from Kentucky does not think the farmers are getting that $900,000,000, does he? May I tell the gentleman where some of that $900,000,000 is going?

Mr. MAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NICHOLS. Just as soon as I straighten my friend out. Of the $900,000,000 which the Department of Agriculture gets, $191,000,000 goes for roads, $18,000,000 for forests, and $6,000,000 for the Weather Bureau, just three little items, and a majority of the balance of the amount goes to things from which the farmer receives no benefit whatever.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER].

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, farming is down, prices are low, industry is lagging, and the wheels of business have practically stopped. There is no turn-over. Wages are down, and employment is scarce. The only ones who are better off today than they were 6 years ago are those who never did work anyway.

Mr. Chairman, America must stop making appropriations unless they are absolutely necessary. We must come down to a point where we can more nearly balance our Budget. We must restore confidence, because the only way to attain parity is to restore confidence on the part of farmers and businessmen. Handing out money in a reckless way to the W. P. A., to agriculture, or any other outfit is not going to restore confidence, and it is not going to bring about parity. There is no sense in our appropriating large sums of money for this purpose.

This item is so large, as a matter of fact, that even the President of the United States would not submit a Budget estimate for it. Through his Secretary of Agriculture he gave out the word to the Appropriations Committee, when it had this item under consideration, that he did not favor it; that he felt there must be a special tax to pay it, if it was to be paid at all. By this amendment we are going beyond even the President's wildest estimates.

We are not restoring purchasing power by agreeing to this amendment, because we have to borrow the money, and we do not thereby restore purchasing power. Purchasing power can only be brought about by restoring confidence. Let us vote the amendment down and help restore confidence. Let us keep the expenses of the Government down, these huge expenditures of money that are staggering the people of America and preventing restoration of business confidence and farm confidence. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. LAMBERTSON] for 5 minutes.

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Mr. Chairman, one of the main arguments for parity payments today is that the Congress has been very liberal in appropriating for national defense. Men who talk economy have been very liberal and have not given a second thought to spending money for the war scare we had recently. The appropriations have been made and will be made. The Navy bill is yet to come up for consideration.

There is a feeling of resentment on the part of the farm sections; if we have money available for national defense, we should have it for agriculture. Of course, that is not a complete defense. It is simply an excuse.

I noticed in the morning paper the Administrator of the Wages and Hours Division states that they are going to raise wages in order to create purchasing power. That is just what I predicted when we considered the wage and hour bill. I thought they were about to increase wages generally, not the subnormal wages but all of them, that they were going to make this apply to all of industry and to all of labor, even down to the employees of the mutual telephone companies and the bank clerks. They are carrying out a jacking-up program. Agriculture thinks it should be jacked up with all the others in order to be equal. I would be in favor of all that if I thought we only had 3 or 4 years to live, then we were going to jump into the abyss. Agriculture then should have equality for 2 or 3 years, just to get even, then we could let everything go by the wayside. The fallacy of this long-time policy, which is sure to follow once started, prompts me in the interest of my country to vote "no."

Mr. Chairman, I am going to vote against this increase to $500,000,000. I am going to vote against the $250,000,000 provided in the bill, although it hurts me to do so because I know many of my people are in favor of it. The most dangerous thing facing the country today is waste. We should cut out spending. In order to be consistent you have to do some things that hurt. If you are going to be a spender on one thing, you will be a spender in all probability on everything. This is not sound. Agriculture is not going to come into its own through parity payments. We might as well face that proposition and be fair. Let us be impartial. Let us vote against all these things and hold ourselves down in order to save the country.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Cannon] for the remainder of the time.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, may I say in response to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. August H. ANDRESEN], for the year of 1938 the index price for dairy products was 109, while the index price for all other products

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I may say to the gentleman his figures are probably correct.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. They come from the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. One reason for the fact that the dairy situation has been as well off as it has been was due to the fact it was not controlled by Washington, while the other groups were. [Applause.]
Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Then why control them from Washington as in the proposal under consideration at the

Mr. Chairman, I should like to correct two or three misapprehensions on this proposition. In the first place, the statement has been made in the press and on the floor that the President opposes parity payments. I desire to read a letter addressed by him to the president of the American Farm Bureau Federation on June 8, 1938, which was submitted during the hearings on the bill:

The President said:

THE WHITE HOUSE,

Washington, D. C., June 8, 1938.

Dear Ed: I want to thank you for your kind letter of May 20 transmitting your statement to Senator Adams proposing that the pending relief bill be amended to provide funds for parity payments to farmers under the parity payment provision of the Soil Conservation and Domestic Allotment Act. You are undoubtedly right in controlling that provision for parity required to provide the provision for parity. in contending that provision for parity payment would do much to relieve the difficulties faced by farmers in the Corn, Cotton, and Wheat Belt, and in this way also help our general economic situation.

As to my attitude toward the proposal to appropriate Federal money for making parity payments under the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938, that was clearly set forth in the final paragraph of my statement of February 16 issued at the time that I signed the act.

"In order to make such payment it would be necessary to provide additional revenue needed to finance them."

additional revenue needed to finance them."

I am still firmly of the same opinion. As I said then, making these payments would increase the cost of the new farm program over the amount authorized under the Soil Conservation and Domestic Allotment Act. I feel that if Congress appropriates money now for parity payments, such an appropriation should be accompanied by revenue legislation, or at the very least by a definite pledge by the leaders of Congress that revenue legislation to finance the appropriation will be enacted before the end of the 1938 crop year. Such legislation might take a form similar to the proposal recently made in the Senate by Senator Pope for an amendment to the revenue bill to provide for tariff equalizing taxes on the farm commodities on which parity payments are made. While it is true that Federal spending to meet the present emergency is temporarily financed in part by borrowing, the Government, in the long run, must offset all its expenditures by tax revenues.

Very sincerely yours,

Very sincerely yours,

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT,

Another report which has gained currency in the press and has been referred to on the floor is to the effect that there is a trading or logrolling proposition between those who are interested in relief and those who favor parity payments. I should like to say that neither I nor any member of the subcommittee in charge of this bill have been approached by any such suggestion of any kind from anybody.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I yield to the gentleman from

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I have been trying all afternoon to say this to the Committee: When the W. P. A. appropriation comes up I do hope with all my heart that the $150,000,000 will be appropriated, because it means work to a lot of people who cannot have it unless this amount is appropriated. I also hope this provision for parity payments to farmers will pass, and I shall vote for it. In my opinion, we shall never solve our problems until we recognize that the real interests of farmers and the people of our cities are identical. Regardless of what others do on either bill, I believe we have got to do the right and just thing by both these groups of people, and until we attack more fundamentally the problem of their lack of buying power I think we must support this Cannon amendment.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. The surprising thing is that the members of the Committee on Appropriations who are opposed to appropriating $150,000,000 for relief are also opposed to a parity provision.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I regret that the Committee has only 5 minutes. We have been debating this proposition all

Mr. COFFEE of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman vield?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I yield to the gentleman from

Mr. COFFEE of Nebraska. Will the gentleman clear up for the RECORD the question of whether or not there is anything in the amendment that would restrict the parity payments to corn producers in the commercial area?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. There is no such language in the bill. That clause was in the legislation which went out on the point of order.

Mr. Chairman, what, briefly, is the effect of the adoption of this appropriation of $250,000,000? We have an example of it in the appropriation last year of $212,000,000 for the same purpose. Under that appropriation we are paying 11 cents additional for every bushel of wheat, 6 cents additional for every bushel of corn, and 1.6 cents additional for every pound of cotton put on the market. The result not only has been to raise the prices of agricultural products and a corresponding increase in the farm income, but there is coupled with it this remarkable circumstance that this increase is made without increasing the price of any of these products to the consumer. This can be said of no other measure proposed for increasing the farm income.

What is the purpose of the proposal of parity payments here? It is to give the farmers of the country not a fair price, not the price he has been promised by all political parties, not a price equal with labor and industry, but a mere three-fourths of a fair price. During the war the price of agricultural products was limited by law. The price of wheat was limited by law to $2.20 a bushel when it would have gone to $10 a bushel, while the price of every other commodity went to the skies. There was no restriction on the wages of labor. The price of manufactured commodities advanced to unprecedented levels. Yet from the close of the war down to the present time the price of every agricultural product has dropped to one-third of what it was at the close of the war and the price of everything the farmer has to buy has increased until today it is one-third higher than it was during the war.

Mr. Chairman, this bill carries appropriations in excess of a billion dollars. And yet out of this vast sum the only item directly and immediately affecting the price of farm products is this appropriation for parity payments. There is not another paragraph in the bill that will increase farm prices. But this provision will actually increase farm prices. It will not give the farmer full parity, but it will give him at least a closer approach to parity than any other, and all other, provisions of the bill. And yet it is the one item that the economists would eliminate. They want to apply economy to the lowest-paid industry in the Nation.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired. All time has expired.

Mr. DUNN. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DUNN. How can I get about 30 seconds to say I am in favor of the Ferguson amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. All time has expired.

Without objection, the Clerk will again report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. Fer-GUSON 1.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. FERGUSON to the amendment offered by Mr. CANNON of Missouri: Strike out "$250,000,000" and insert $500,000,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. Ferguson) there were-ayes 70, noes 226.

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

Tellers were refused.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. REES of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. REES of Kansas to the amendment offered by Mr. Cannon of Missouri: At the end of Mr. Cannon's amendment add the following: "Provided, That total payments to any person, firm, or corporation under soil conservation and parity payments shall not exceed $2,500."

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the amendment that it is legislation on an appropriation bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Kansas desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. REES of Kansas. No, I do not believe I do, Mr. Chairman, although I do not believe it is legislation.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, this is a pure limitation, as I understand it, limiting the amount that can be paid out under the bill to any one person and therefore is clearly in

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of the opinion that the amendment is entirely too broad in that it would not only include this appropriation but other appropriations as well and the point of order is therefore sustained.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. August H. Andresen to the amendment offered by Mr. Cannon of Missouri: At the end of the amendment strike out the period, insert a colon and the following: "Provided, further, That no total payment in excess of $2,500 shall be made to any person, firm, or corporation from the amounts herein appropriated for soil-conservation benefit and parity payments."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Chairman, I wish to be heard on the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. All time for debate has expired.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Chairman, I call attention to the fact that the motion that was made by the gentleman from Missouri was to the effect that all debate on his amendment and amendments thereto would close at the end of a stipulated time and did not take in any new paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. This is an amendment to the Cannon amendment and therefore is included in the motion.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the amendment that it is legislation on an appropriation bill.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Chairman, I wish to be heard on the point of order.

The Chair has just ruled out an amendment offered by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. REES] which did not tie the distribution of the funds specifically to the appropriation provided in the legislation, while this amendment refers specifically to the appropriations provided for soil conservation and parity payments provided in the measure. Furthermore, the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938 provided that not more than $10,000 in payments should be made to any individual, firm, or corporation, and this amendment simply seeks to limit the authorization already provided in the original act and is surely within the rule which provides for a limitation upon any appropriation provided in this legislation, and I therefore submit, Mr. Chairman, the amendment is in order.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I did not understand the amendment as read. I have since read the amendment and I withdraw the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is withdrawn.

The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. August H. Andresen) there were-ayes 194, noes 61.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GRISWOLD. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment. The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Griswold to the amendment offered by Mr. Cannon of Missouri: At the end of Mr. Cannon's amendment add the following: "Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be made available until the 1930 duty on dairy products has been restored."

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would call the gentleman's attention to the decisions cited on page 65 of Cannon's Precedents. [Laughter.]

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I have just noted them, and in view of the authorities cited, I withdraw the point of order. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is withdrawn.

The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. Griswold) there were—ayes 125, noes 165.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. BOLLES. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Bolles to the amendment offered by Mr. Cannon of Missouri: Page 91, lines 4 and 5, strike out "one-half of this sum" and insert in lieu thereof—

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair calls the attention of the gentleman to the fact that those lines have been stricken out of the bill.

Mr. BOLLES. I should have added wherever they appear in the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri.

The CHAIRMAN. There is no such line in the bill and the Chair cannot recognize the gentleman to offer the amendment. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Cannon], as amended.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. TABER) there were—ayes 167, noes 148.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chair appointed Mr. DIRKSEN and Mr. Cannon of Missouri to act as tellers.

The Committee again divided; and the tellers reportedayes 175, noes 171.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Jones of Texas: Page 91, at the end of the amendment offered by Mr. Cannon of Missouri, just adopted, insert a new paragraph, as follows:

"To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to further carry out the provisions of section 32, as amended, of the act entitled 'An act to amend the Agricultural Adjustment Act, and for other purposes,' approved August 24, 1935, and subject to all provisions of law relating to the expenditure of funds appropriated by such section, $60,000,000. Such sum shall be immediately available and shall be in addition to, and not in substitution for, other appropriations made by such section or for the purpose of such section: Provided, That not in excess of 25 percent of the funds herein made available may be devoted to any one agricultural commodity." may be devoted to any one agricultural commodity."

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I think this is an amendment that practically everyone can agree to. Section 32 is peculiarly a House provision. It was drafted in the Committee on Agriculture and reported unanimously. It was adopted in the House of Representatives unanimously and was agreed to in the Senate. It furnishes the funds for the Federal Surplus Commodities Corporation. It goes to all of the farm commodities and it makes provision for the natural gluts or temporary surpluses that may aggravate or depress the market. It provides for distribution through relief channels, and it provides also for widening the market at home and abroad. I feel that in the light of the experience we have had in connection with the handling of these funds, it is the most effective provision of the entire act, and I hope that the House of Representatives will adopt this amendment.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. JONES of Texas. Yes.

Mr. DIRKSEN. This merely enlarges the amount of money that would otherwise be available under section 32? Mr. JONES of Texas. Yes.

Mr. DIRKSEN. It increases the amount $60,000,000, so that with the $90,000,000 in 1940 for the purpose of exploiting commodities in finding markets, this will raise the

Mr. JONES of Texas. Yes; and it is so worded that this part of the fund is immediately available.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman vield?

Mr. JONES of Texas. Yes.

amount to $150,000,000.

Mr. MICHENER. This adds $60,000,000?

Mr. JONES of Texas. That is correct.

Mr. MICHENER. Above the Budget? It is not carried in the Budget?

Mr. JONES of Texas. This was not submitted to the Budget. This is a situation that arises by virtue of the handling of the dairy products, where the funds for this particular commodity have become exhausted, and also for other commodities that are or may be in trouble, and it is additional funds that are needed. I do not see why the House of Representatives should not exercise its own prerogative in this instance and make this money available for purposes beneficial, not only to the people in the country but also in the cities. It serves the double purpose of relieving gluts and affording relief.

Mr. MICHENER. But my question is this; just a simple question-

Mr. JONES of Texas. Very well.

Mr. MICHENER. The question I want to understand thoroughly is this: This amendment adds $60,000,000 to this bill, and the gentleman from Texas is asking the House to pass it at this time?

Mr. JONES of Texas. Is the gentleman asking that question for information or for the purpose of making an argument?

Mr. MICHENER. Why, for information.

The gentleman already had that Mr. JONES of Texas. information, did he not?

Mr. MICHENER. No; I did not have the information.

Mr. JONES of Texas. The gentleman suspected it, did he not?

Mr. MICHENER. Well, yes.

Mr. JONES of Texas. I like the gentleman from Michigan. He just likes to have a little fun. It has not been submitted to the Budget, but the need for this fund is immediate.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES of Texas. I yield.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. The reason for making this amount immediately available is to take care of gluts in the market right now?

Mr. JONES of Texas. That is right.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. It would apply to grapefruit, and it is not limited to any one crop?

Mr. JONES of Texas. No; it is not.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. This would be available for fruit crops and things like that?

Mr. JONES of Texas. Yes; it would.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment and all amendments thereto close in 5 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? Mr. MOTT. Mr. Chairman, I object.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this amendment and all amendments thereto close in 5 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Missouri.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. Cannon of Missouri) there were ayes 170 and noes 143.

So the motion was agreed to.
Mr. POWERS. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. POWERS. Do I understand the gentleman's motion was that debate close in 5 minutes?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. POWERS. And the amendment calls for the addition of $60,000,000?

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will again report the amendment.

There being no objection, the Clerk again reported the amendment offered by Mr. Jones of Texas.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, it is with a feeling of deep sorrow that I have to stand before the Committee opposing an amendment offered by my beloved friend from Texas [Mr. Jones]. There is no man in this Congress who has a more earnest desire to help agriculture. I know nothing whatever about the merits of the amendment. I am assuming, however, that it is meritorious because of its authorship, but if I should vote for it, it would be purely upon that assumption and not because of any intelligent understanding I have about it. I venture to say that outside of a small group of gentlemen especially familiar with agriculture and its problems, no Member in the House knows anything about it; and yet today, here by one fell swoop of the hand, debate limited by my beloved friend to 5 minutes by a vote of the Committee, we add an item carrying $60,000,000-more than the amount in controversy on the famous W. P. A. proposition. Sixty million dollars!

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will my friend yield? Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. JONES of Texas. I am sure that practically every Member of the House is familiar with the activities of the Federal Surplus Commodities Corporation, and that is what this is.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Sixty million dollars! Never presented to the subcommittee; never presented to the full committee; never presented to the Budget. In addition to that, we have just voted out $250,000,000 parity payments, over and above the Budget estimates. Gentlemen, if that is the way we are going to proceed, addressing my remarks to my colleagues on the Democratic side, who have from time to time made some rather definite promises to the American people about finances, we might as well repeal the Budget and Accounting Act and run it into pandemonium and chaos, and dump in everything we can get, under the old pork-barrel method. [Applause.]

Probably I am as one crying in the wilderness, but be that as it may, I appeal to you, if this matter has merit, then surely the President of the United States, surely the Bureau of the Budget would be interested in sending an item up here, and let the matter be considered in an orderly, logical fashion as should be done. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Chairman, I offer apreferential motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. August H. Andresen moves that the Committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House with the recommendation that the enacting clause be stricken out.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman desire to be heard? Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I do.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Chairman, the announcement has just come to the House that the President of the United States has demanded an additional subsidy of $90,000,000 for cotton. This amount is in addition to the $200,000,000 called for in this bill for cotton.

Mr. HOOK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. The distinguished chairman of our Committee on Agriculture, Mr. Jones, has offered an amendment carrying $60,000,000 for dairy and other non-basic agricultural products.

Mr. HOOK. I would like to know on whose authority that statement is made.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota may proceed.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. An amendment for $60,-000,000 to take care of the dairy industry, of fruits, vegetables, of beef cattle, and of all of agriculture outside of tobacco, cotton, wheat, rice, and corn. Sixty million dollars for twothirds of American agriculture!

I am for the amendment. Had I known that an additional $90,000,000 was being demanded by the President today as an addition to cotton, with only $60,000,000 for the other two-thirds of American agriculture, I should have voted differently on the last vote. So that there may be no misunderstanding, I voted for the Cannon subsidy amendment on the teller vote.

Mr. Chairman, I am simply rising at this time to ask all Members to support the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas. Were it in my power to ask for an increase for the majority of American agriculture under section 32, I would do so; but I hope the Members on both sides, in view of what has just transpired at the White House, will see that the rest of American agriculture gets a small morsel from the table as the crumbs fall to the floor.

This is serious business. What will it be next year? Will the subsidies be larger than the $500,000,000 that is demanded this year, or will the props have been pulled out from under agriculture because of inability to raise more tax money or sell more bonds, and everything gone down to rock bottom? We have a serious responsibility before us whether we like it or not, and that responsibility is to get back on the right road which will put cotton and the rest of American agriculture on the American price level so as to bring recovery to this country. I hope you will all support the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Jones].

Mr. Chairman, the dairy farmers of this country will not receive more than 25 percent of this $60,000,000. A very small amount when you consider that dairying is the largest branch of American agriculture. As a matter of right the dairy farmers are entitled to this consideration.

In conclusion, I only desire to do the fair and just thing for the cotton, wheat, and commercial corn farmers, but my final vote for a $250,000,000 subsidy for the growers of these basic commodities, will be largely determined by the consideration which you now give to the Jones amendment which provides a $60,000,000 program for American dairy farmers and for other domestic producers of nonbasic farm products.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I rise at this time only for the purpose of giving the House a little information with regard to section 32. The mere phrase "section 32" does not always mean something to all Members. May I clarify it by saying that in the act of August 24, 1935, there is a section known as section 32, and it provides that 30 percent of the customs receipts shall be put into a fund to be used for the purpose of subsidizing the export of surplus commodities. That goes back to the act of 1935. In 1936 that fund amounted to $92,000,000; in 1937 it amounted to $109,000,000; in 1938 it amounted to $125,000,000; and in 1940 it is estimated it will amount to $90,000,000. So the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas seeks only to implement that fund by $60,000,000, making available a total of $150,000,000 for the purposes set out in section 32 of the act of August 24, 1935.

I share with the gentleman from Virginia some feeling of trepidation about the way this thing has been handled. We went into the section 32 proposal rather carefully in subcommittee, and at that time no suggestion was made that the fund ought to be augmented by other funds. It has not been to the Budget. The gentleman from Texas was free to state to the committee that it had not cleared through the Budget Bureau.

It is very likely, therefore, it has not come to the attention of the President. I believe the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. Woodrum] is essentially right. If it does have merit, certainly a supplementary appropriation will be sent to the Appropriations Committee. Every day or every other day there comes to the Appropriations Committee from the Budget Bureau and the White House supplementary proposals, providing for this, that, and the other thing. It would only take a day or 2 or 3 days at the outside to secure clearance of the Budget Bureau and let it come up in regular form if it is meritorious and accords with the Budget program. If at the last minute you are going to write $60,000,000 into this bill, then all orderly procedure is thrown out of the window and we might just as well give this bill to the dogs. I sincerely hope that the Committee of the Whole will not write into the pending bill an amendment providing for an appropriation of $60,000,000 when there has been no hearings on the proposal and when there is no evidence that it is needed.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw my motion.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. August H. Andresen]?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Jones].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. Jones) there were—ayes 98, noes 195.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

THE SUGAR ACT OF 1937

To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to carry into effect the previsions, other than those specifically relating to the Philippine Islands, of the Sugar Act of 1937, approved September 1, 1937 (7 U. S. C. 1100–1183), and the employment of persons and means, in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, as authorized by said act, $31,975,000 together with $16,000,000 of the unobligated balance of the appropriation provided under this head by the joint resolu-tion approved February 4, 1938 (52 Stat. 27); in all, not to exceed

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I want to call attention to a situation that it might be well for those who are interested in agriculture to consider. This bill provides for payments, including soilconservation payments, in the sugarcane districts under the Sugar Act of 1937, and under that act large payments may be made to the owners, and properly so, of sugar plantations. The bill carries an appropriation under the Sugar Act of 1937 of approximately $48,000,000. I merely remind the Committee that corn growers, wheat growers, and cotton growers, where there are large interests and where the amounts that accrue to the owner of properties located in an entire cotton region or an entire wheat region or an entire corn region are involved, could not receive payments in excess of $2,500 under the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. August H. Andresen], and adopted by the Committee; whereas, in the case of sugar, payments may be made for hundreds of thousands of dollars to one owner. In the case of one domestic firm the payments aggregated more than a million dollars, as I recall.

I call attention to the language of the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. August H. Andresen], and adopted by the Committee, as follows:

Provided further, That no total payment in excess of $2,500 shall be made to any person, firm, or corporation from the amounts herein provided for soil-conservation benefit and parity payments.

Mr. Chairman, in the case of large landholdings that can only be operated by tenants and by sharecroppers, this means that those lands will not come into the program because it is voluntary. This Committee by its action has excluded hundreds of thousands of sharecroppers and renters from the benefits of this program because it is unthinkable that the owners of the land will permit their land to come under the program unless they are permitted to share part of the

Mr. CUMMINGS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I yield to the gentleman from Colorado.

Mr. CUMMINGS. The gentleman is entirely mistaken about sugar. The Sugar Act provides specifically that the payments starting at $2,500 are scaled down.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. If I am not correct, I would like to be corrected. I am not opposing the larger payments to the sugar growers, because I say they should be made in order to enable them to come into the program. I am offering no amendment. I am calling attention to the fact that there is a limitation of $2,500 to the cotton growers, but none on the sugar growers.

Mr. CUMMINGS. They pay it themselves as a tax of 50 cents a hundred.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I am aware that there is a processing tax in the Sugar Act, but after all, the consumer foots the bill. I think the payments should be made in the case of sugar, because if they were not the program would be hamstrung, or defeated.

Mr. CUMMINGS. We pay it ourselves.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. What you mean is that there is a processing tax under the Sugar Act, but if insufficient the Public Treasury pays the balance.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. WHITTINGTON. I yield to the gentleman from

Mr. JONES of Texas. The $10,000 limitation was inapplicable last year to any commodity. I want to ask for an interpretation of one provision of the amendment. The impression was created that the limitation only applied to parity payments. I have looked at the amendment and I think it is a little indefinite whether it is limited to the funds provided in that paragraph or not.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. It is indefinite, and was not germane, and those are among other reasons why it should not have been adopted. I have a copy of the amendment and I read it. It states "herein provided for soil conservation benefit and parity payments." That applies to both. At That applies to both. At least it could be so construed.

Mr. JONES of Texas. I understand it applies to both if they are covered by the term "herein." If the "herein" applies to the whole act, that is one thing. If it applies just to this paragraph, that is another.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I submit for the consideration of the Committee that inasmuch as the Cannon amendment has nothing to do with anything except parity payments, by the insertion of soil-conservation benefit payments in the Andresen amendment, the words "herein provided" might apply to the entire act. I submit I am interested in the sugar program as I am in the dairy program. I am not objecting to the large payments in the sugar program, but I am saying that the representatives of the cotton farmers, the wheat farmers, and the corn farmers are providing enormously large payments for the sugar growers and denying these benefits to the owners of large farms and these sharecroppers of the country. The Sugar Act of 1937 was passed by a substantial vote of the House of Representatives. It was supported by representatives from the Cotton Belt, the Wheat Belt, and Corn Belt. It was for the benefit of beet-sugar growers and of canesugar growers. I am aware that a processing tax is provided in the sugar act, but I also know that the consumers of the Nation pay this processing tax. It is rather immaterial whether the benefits to the sugar growers or the parities to cotton growers are paid out of the Public Treasury or by the consumers. I favor a processing tax or a sales tax under the agricultural-adjustment program, if a constitutional bill can be agreed upon, but whether the agricultural-adjustment program is supported by a processing tax or not, the consumers and the taxpayers of the Nation, as in the case of the Sugar Act, foot the bill. The processing tax in the Agricultural Adjustment Act was declared unconstitutional by the Supreme Court.

While I am not thoroughly familiar with the Sugar Act of 1937, I recall that it authorizes expenditures of $55,000,000 annually. I further recall that the expenditures necessary for implementing the sugar program are offset by tax receipts, but this does not change the situation nor alter the matter that I am bringing to the attention of the Committee. Sugar plantations are frequently in large holdings. I am speaking from memory. I have the recollection that five or six firms in Hawaii received something like five or six million dollars in benefits under the sugar acts. I have the further recollection that domestic sugarcane growers in many instances received, as I stated at the beginning of these remarks, hundreds of thousands of dollars. I emphasize that Representatives voted for these payments and now deny to the large growers of cotton, corn, and wheat comparable payments. It strikes me that the proponents of the Andresen amendment are straining at a gnat and swallowing a camel. It is unthinkable that Congress would provide large payments for sugar growers and deny them to the growers of cotton, corn, wheat, rice, and tobacco. The point I am making is that there is no limitation to the amount of benefits that may be paid to sugar growers. There may be a graduated scale of payments, but there is no ceiling.

Under the Agricultural Adjustment Act, beginning with the year 1939, as stated by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Jones], the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Agriculture, under section 102 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938, no total payment for any year to any person under subsection (b) shall exceed $10,000. In the event of ownership in more than one State or Territory, the $10,000 limitation applied only to the total payments in each State. Moreover, under the act of 1939, the maximum payment is applicable only to soil-conservation benefits.

The Andresen amendment makes the limitation $2,500, and it applies to both parity and soil-conservation payments; at least it raises a doubt as to whether it does apply to both classes of payments, but that is not all. Under existing law, the limitation applies to a given year. Under the Andresen amendment, there is no term mentioned. Moreover, the limitation is not confined to ownership in one State but the ownership would extend to another State.

There is an inclination to lean over backward to aid the small farmer. Under existing law, the tenants and share-croppers receive more than 50 percent of the soil-conservation payments. The small payments have been stepped up under the act of 1938. They come out of the total amount allocated to the State or county. After all, a large farm is nothing but an aggregation of small farms. Tenants and renters obtain on large farms. More sharecroppers are found in the areas where there are large cotton plantations than in any other areas of the Cotton Belt. It is unthinkable that the owners of the large plantations would come into the program, which is voluntary, if they are to be excluded from its benefits. If the owners are to be excluded from the benefits, the renters and sharecroppers would be the sufferers. In other words, the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. August H. Andresen] and adopted by the Committee would discriminate against hundreds of thousands of sharecroppers in the Cotton Belt, for they cultivate lands whose owners would not come into the program, and they could plant substantially all of their lands to cotton. While the owners would get no benefit, the sharecroppers, who are, after all, the small growers, would likewise get no benefit.

The limitation of $10,000 was adopted in the act of 1939. Personally, I think the Andresen amendment was subject to a point of order. It changed existing law under the guise of limitations. It not only reduced the amount of payments but it changed existing law as to the period when payments are to be made and as to the possession and ownership in one or more States. This is an important matter.

The Agricultural Adjustment Act is voluntary. If the owners of large bodies of land are prevented from entering the program, their tenants will receive no benefits. Probably the owners of large bodies of land would profit if the small growers come into the program. They will probably make more outside of the program than they would in it. The individual or the firm owning thousands of acres of land will not voluntarily agree to cultivate only 25 percent of their acreage when their benefits cannot exceed $2,500. They would stay out of the program, and the program would thus be defeated; because if all of the large landowners stay out of the program, it would be difficult for the program to succeed.

As has been suggested in the debate, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Jones] has proposed an amendment to limit the payment to $5,000, provided the large owners have sharecroppers, and in that event both the owners and sharecroppers will participate, even though the amount accruing to the owner be in excess of $5,000. I understand that an amendment to the Jones bill-H. R. 3800-has been proposed that will really increase the provisions for sharecroppers and renters. The matter of payments should be worked out by the Legislative Committee. The amendment was proposed by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. August H. Andresen], who has been a consistent opponent of the Agricultural adjustment program, after all debate had been concluded and when there was no opportunity for debate. Its adoption without analysis is proof of the folly of legislating on the floor without previous consideration and reports by committees on important legislation. I favor equal treatment for all growers, large and small.

Further, I repeat that I favor legislation in behalf of sugar as well as in behalf of all other agricultural commodities.

The gentlemen from Minnesota [Mr. August H. Andresen], who proposed the ill-considered and hastily adopted amendment which would really destroy the program, certainly insofar as cotton is concerned, has insisted that dairying is discriminated against. If he is the friend of agriculture, as was said by his colleague from Minnesota [Mr. H. CARL Andersen], the proper course to pursue is not to oppose legislation in behalf of cotton, corn, and wheat but to cooperate with the friends of such legislation and then to insist that adequate legislation be provided for the dairy industry. As his colleague says, to oppose parities for cotton, corn, and wheat because parities are not applicable to dairying, where butter and milk are protected by high tariff, soil-conservation payments, and by other legislation, would be, to use the language of his colleague, "to pursue the dog in the manger policy." I congratulate the colleague of Mr. Av-GUST H. ANDRESEN [Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN] upon his fair presentation of the agricultural problem, and for my part I believe that the spirit manifested by him will obtain more consideration from his colleagues than the "dog in the manger policy" which Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN opposes.

Further, permit me to say that the Cannon amendment provides $250,000,000 for parity. The payments are to be made as provided in section 303 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938. This section authorizes parity payments for the basic agricultural commodities. These payments are in addition to soil-conservation payments.

For the fiscal year 1939 there was appropriated for parity payments $212,000,000. For the current year the total amount available for payments to farmers is $697,000,000, including the $212,000,000 for parity. The Budget, as estimated by the President, provides a total of $485,000,000 for farm payments. The bill provides a total of $499,560,000 for payments under the Soil Conservation and Domestic Allotment Act. Five hundred million dollars is authorized by this act, while Congress provided in the Agricultural Adjustment Administration for the appropriation of such additional sums as Congress might determine. If the $250,000,000 for parity payments is appropriated, it will make a total of approximately $750,000,000 in payments to farmers for the fiscal year 1940, or an increase of around $50,000,000. This increase is justified. I speak respecting cotton. The price of cotton is exceedingly low; in fact, the cotton growers during the year 1938 made substantially no profit.

The purpose of the Agricultural Adjustment Act was to insure the farmers a larger share of the national income. Parity payments were authorized in order that the farmers might receive more nearly a parity price. Two hundred and fifty million dollars will not provide for a parity price, but it will provide for an increase in the returns to the farmer under the program for 1939. Congress has declared repeatedly for a parity price for agriculture. The parity payments are for the purpose of securing as nearly as possible parity payments for farmers.

COTTON

The 5-year average value, 1909-14, of the American cotton crop was $782,800,000. The 5-year average value of the cottonseed crop for the same period was $84,900,000. The average value of the cotton and cottonseed crops for the period 1909-14 aggregated $867,800,000.

The program has been in effect for the past 6 years. Since the program has been in effect the average value of the cotton crop for the 6-year period is $651,400,000. The average value of the cottonseed crop for the same period is $103,000,000. The average value of the cotton and cottonseed crops is $755,000,000 for the period 1933 to 1938, inclusive. In other words, the farmer received the difference between $867,800,000 and $755,000,000 on the average for the cotton crop of the last 6 years. This is $112,000,000 less than the average price received during the period 1909–14.

The parity payments during the 6-year period 1933–38 aggregated $864,000,000, with an average of $144,000,000 annually in payments. Including the payments, the cotton crop averaged during the 6-year period $899,900,000. However, the farmer was able to buy less with $899,900,000 during the program of the past 6 years than he was able to buy with $867,000,000 during the parity period from 1909 to 1914. The cost of purchases to the farmer was 29 percent higher from 1933 to 1938, so that the average purchasing power of the cotton crop, including the payments, for the 6-year period 1933–38 is $697,000,000. This is compared with $867,000,000 for the parity period 1909–14, or approximately $170,000,000 less in purchasing power.

The parity payments are made to cotton, corn, wheat, rice, and tobacco. Around 40 percent of the parity payments would be made to cotton; about 28 percent each would be paid to corn and wheat; and the remaining payments would be made to rice and tobacco.

SUBSIDY

The cotton, wheat, and corn growers of the Nation are entitled to the equivalent of the benefits accorded to manufacturers under the tariff. Parity or subsidy for agriculture is nothing more nor less than the tariff in reverse. I am not disturbed by the use of the term "parity" or "subsidy." It is nothing more nor less than a tariff for the farmer.

Subsidies or bounties for agriculture were urged by Alexander Hamilton at the time tariffs were adopted to protect industry. He recognized that the farmer would not get the benefit of the tariff, and he reported to Congress—and I quote:

There should be an offset to the tariff in the form of bounty to the farmer.

PURCHASING POWER

The manufacturing and industrial sections of the United States will greatly benefit from increasing the purchasing power of farmers. Cotton farmers are liberal spenders. They will buy whenever their income justifies; they spend substantially all they make. If the manufacturers of the East and other industrial areas are to sell to southern cotton growers, it is essential that these growers have an increased purchasing power.

LOGROLLING

I think it is unfortunate that logrolling has been injected into the discussion of farm payments. Farmers are not selfish; they are willing to accord to urban centers the relief to which they are entitled. The representatives of the agricultural areas have supported legislation to aid the home owners in the city, to provide emergency housing, to remove slums, and to afford relief. Congress has appropriated vastly more to aid the 3,000,000 who will receive the benefits of relief than Congress has appropriated for parity and soil-conservation payments to agriculture.

TARIFF

The prices of industrial products have been increased to the American people around $4,000,000,000 annually by the tariff. At present rates the farm incomes of America are around $8,000,000,000; 30,000,000 people are directly affected and every citizen of the United States is indirectly affected. There are 3,850,000 farmers who have received about $712,000,000 in payments during the fiscal year 1939, but at the same time the Congress of the United States has appropriated $2,000,000,000 for the 3,000,000 people on relief. Farmers are only asking for a square deal. If comparisons were not odious, it would be fair to say that Congress has appropriated vastly more for the relief of 3,000,000 Americans than it has appropriated to promote the interest of 30,000,000 directly and indirectly engaged in agriculture.

DAIRYING

I call attention to the benefits that have been accorded to the dairying sections of the United States. Millions of dollars in soil-conservation payments have been made. It is the only industry where direct appropriations are made for enabling the dairy farmers to plant crops at the expense of the Government. Not only have appropriations been made for seed and for soil conservation in behalf of the dairy growers, but like industry, the dairying industry is protected by the tariff. We have a tariff of 14 cents a pound on butter—the highest tariff in history. Other dairy products are protected by the tariff. Dairying, therefore, is receiving benefits comparable to the benefits accorded to industry under the tariff.

In addition to direct benefits, the Surplus Commodities Corporation has bought large quantities of dairy products. In other words, dairying is receiving benefits comparable to those accorded to cotton, wheat, and corn.

Dairying has probably received more benefits under the present administration than other agricultural commodities. I mention a few: The farm mortgage debt in the dairying States has been materially reduced; liberal payments under the Agricultural Conservation Act have been made to the dairying sections. In 1936 these payments amounted to $36,000,000 in seven States where dairying is the major farm enterprise. In 1937 the amount was $29,000,000 and in 1938 the amount was $34,000,000. As I have indicated, the Government, through the Surplus Commodities Corporation, bought in the open market in 1933-34, $14,000,000 worth of dairy products, and in 1934-35 large amounts were bought. In 1937-38 the amount aggregated $15,000,000. For the current fiscal year the Government has purchased around $4,-000,000 worth of fluid milk, $2,225,300 worth of dry skimmed milk, and $27,000,000 worth of butter. In addition, the dairy farmers have received valuable loans, which with the above amounts, aggregate $44,000,000 that have been made available by the Federal Surplus Commodities Corporation.

In 1933 butter was worth 20 cents a pound, in 1939 it is worth 26 cents; in 1933 butterfat was worth 18 cents, in 1939 it is worth 25 cents.

The index price received by farmers for dairy products in 1932 was 83; for all other commodities it was 65. In 1938 the index price for dairy products was 109, while for other products it was 95. In 1937 it was 124 for dairy products, and for other farm commodities 121. In addition to all of these services to the dairy farmer, this administration, through the marketing agreements and the Dairy Products Marketing Association, has stabilized the marketing of milk, both in terms and in prices. Those who maintain that the dairy farmers have not been benefited remind me of the words of Josh Billings, when he said, as the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Cannon] stated last Friday, "It is better not to know so much than to know so much that 'ain't' so."

WORLD MARKETS

It is asserted that the reduction program in the United States is responsible for the loss of world markets for American cotton. It is true that exports of cotton have materially declined. Germany and Italy formerly used large amounts of American cotton, but the reduction in acreage in the United States is not by any manner of means responsible for the loss of foreign markets. Large crops were always followed by small crops before the program was adopted in 1933. Tariff walls, trade barriers, and currency are largely responsible for the loss of foreign markets. Again, other countries have ascertained that they can grow cotton. The reduction program in the United States had nothing to do with the increase in the production of cotton in Russia, but the fact remains that the price of American cotton is slightly higher than the world price of cotton. Foreign cottons are being sold more cheaply today. Foreign trade agreements are not directly helping cotton. While there is little satisfaction in growing cotton in the United States to sell abroad, if Americans are enslaved in the process, foreign markets should be preserved. If the manufacturer obtains the benefit of the American tariff, he should pay to the grower an American price that would give to the grower the equivalent of the benefits of the tariff. Foreign cotton trade is a problem that remains to be solved. I believe that the solution of the problem lies in provisions that will enable the United States to compete in foreign markets with foreign cottons. It may involve the sale of American cottons at a cheaper price in foreign markets than in domestic markets, but the manufacturer should not complain. If typewriters and sewing machines are sold more cheaply abroad than at home, cotton can be sold for less in foreign countries, and the manufacturers should not complain.

SURPLUS

There is a surplus of American cotton. This surplus must be definitely retired from the channels of trade or there is no hope for the American cotton grower. Many methods have been proposed. All involve final and definite retirement of substantially half of the surplus of 13,000,000 bales of cotton. New uses of cotton, as well as new markets, must be discovered. Cotton is an American product and should be used by the departments of the Government. Cotton needed by the War and Navy Departments can be stored, as it is already owned by the Government.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto close in 5 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Cannon]?

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Chairman, I object.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto close in 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Cannon]?

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Chairman, I object.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto close in 5 minutes

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment.

Mr. Chairman, the gentleman is entirely wrong about two things: First, as far as soil conservation payments are concerned, the growers of sugarcane and sugar beets comply with every provision of the Soil Conservation Act and do not receive one penny for doing so, not a penny. We receive no soilconservation payments. Where does the money come from to pay it? There is a processing tax levied of 50 cents per 100 pounds, and then the growers receive a 60-cent payment. Cuba pays but receives no benefits. The money is left in the Government Treasury and this year is more than $10,000,000. The large plantations are in Hawaii. The benefit payments are made out of their own payments. A man may pay $10,000 or $50,000 to the Government. There is 50 cents tax, but he can receive only $2,500 until his tax is cut, and it is graduated down until he gets, I think, about $30,000 or $40,000. That applies to Hawaii, not to continental United States, and he does not get half what he pays in.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman

Mr. CUMMINGS. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi. Mr. WHITTINGTON. I was not referring to the source of the funds. I know about the processing tax under the Sugar Act. My understanding is that the owners of the sugar plantations receive benefits largely in excess of $2,500, no matter what the source, whether it comes from the consumers of the Nation by way of a processing tax or the Public Treasury. I think they are entitled to it. I understand domestic sugarcane growers receive soil-conservation payments.

Mr. CUMMINGS. When he gets $2,500 he has put in more than $2,500. Then he keeps on, and if he puts in $50,000, he might only get $25,000.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. But the fact is the benefits to sugar growers amount to a great deal more than $2,500, the maximum under the Andresen amendment, adopted by the committee, that could be paid to cotton growers.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CUMMINGS. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. RICH. Does not the gentleman believe that, in order to help the beet-sugar industry, if we put a tariff on sugar so we could give the sugar market of this country to the Louisiana sugar growers and the Michigan and Colorado beet-sugar growers, we would be doing a good thing for them?

Mr. CUMMINGS. No, for the reason that if you take away the quota you turn Hawaii, Puerto Rico, and the Philippine Islands loose, and they will grow practically all the sugar we consume. The Philippine Islands can grow 3,000,000 or 4,000,000 pounds of sugar.

Mr. RICH. Put a tariff on so that we give the market to the sugar growers of the United States.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Yes, but you cannot put a tariff against Hawaii and Puerto Rico, and you cannot put a tariff against Hawaii as long as the American flag flies over those islands, because you fellows would not vote for it. The sugar program is paying for its own expense plus some $10,000,000 or $15,000,000, and we do not receive a penny out of soil conservation, but we must comply with that act.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman

Mr. CUMMINGS. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. MICHENER. This matter is very important to the sugar industry of the country.

Mr. CUMMINGS. It means the life of it.
Mr. MICHENER. Does not the gentleman believe we ought to have more than 5 minutes to debate it? We have been shut off from debate, with debate limited to 5 minutes now by main force, yet this is a provision covering $47,975,000 and affecting the life of one of our agricultural industries.

Mr. CUMMINGS. I am just relying on the good sense of this group not to adopt the amendment. I do not believe the gentleman realized the purport of the amendment when he offered it.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. The gentleman wholly misunderstands. I proposed no amendment at all. I offered a proforma amendment merely to call attention to the fact that some sugar growers are getting hundreds of thousands of dollars, and in Hawaii millions of dollars, whereas cotton and wheat and corn growers are limited under the amendment adopted to $2,500. I believe this limitation unfair, if not unconstitutional.

[Here the gavel fell.]
The Clerk read as follows:

INTERNATIONAL PRODUCTION CONTROL COMMITTEES

During the fiscal year 1940 the Secretary of Agriculture may expend not to exceed $17,500 from the funds available to the Agricultural Adjustment Administration for the share of the United States as a member of the International Wheat Advisory Committee, the International Sugar Council, or like events or bodies concerned with the reduction of agricultural surpluses or with other objectives of the Agricultural Adjustment Administration, together with traveling and other necessary expenses relating thereto.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Schafer of Wisconsin: Page 92, strike out all of lines 12 to 22, inclusive.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, this amendment is offered for the purpose of assisting to a small degree in getting America out of international conferences. The record clearly indicates that the present New Deal international-minded administration is entering into negotiations with foreign countries and Uncle Sam is playing Santa Claus and having his pockets picked, as he did under the Democratic World War administration. It is ridiculous to spend the money of the American taxpayers to subsidize an international sugar council in the name of taking care of the surplus sugar in America, when the facts indicate we produce in America only about 24 percent of the sugar which we consume. The American sugar growers have been sold down the river by the new dealers.

The New Deal sugar policy, formulated by a self-styled and a self-anointed "brain trust" sugar expert, Mr. Charles W. Taussig, is one of the blackest pages of American history. Mr. Taussig poses as a "brain trust" professor having at heart the interest of the sugar producers of America, when in fact he is a multimillionaire importer of foreign sugar. His address is 111 Wall Street, New York City, N. Y.

Mr. Taussig serves the Cuban Sugar Trust and not our American people.

I hope that the Members of Congress who represent farm districts will wake up and oppose the New Deal sell-out of our American farmers. Stop being rubber stamps for these soviet-minded "brain trust" professors who work under the direction of Mordecai Ezekiel, the power behind the throne in the Agricultural Department. Mr. Henry Wallace is the Secretary of Agriculture in name but not in fact. He is only the Charley McCarthy of "brain-truster" Mordecai Ezekiel. If we chase Mordecai away from the Public Treasury trough and remove him from the Government service we will not have to be passing agriculture appropriation bills carrying more than a billion dollars to repair the damage resulting from the half-baked soviet agricultural schemes which Mordecai Ezekiel has foisted upon the American people.

I hope, in the interest of the farmer, you will vote against all pork-barrel appropriations in this bill. We are fast approaching the precipice of inflation, over which we shall plunge unless we stop the New Deal spending spree. The farmers will go over this precipice with the rest of us. I am going to vote and vote to cut indefensible appropriations from this bill. I call upon you Democrats, particularly you Jeffersonian Democrats who preach economy, to also vote to cut, and not confine your economy efforts to talking about the necessity of reducing the cost of government. Now is the time to act as well as to talk. [Applause.]

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 5 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment. Mr. Chairman, it happens that Dr. Ezekiel, who has just been referred to, came to Washington first under the Hoover administration and has been here ever since as one of the ablest students of our governmental problems. [Applause.]

The things that I principally want to say in these brief 5 minutes are things I have been trying all the afternoon to say. Here they are:

I voted in favor of the parity payment provision. I shall do so again, of course, on roll call. I did it because I believe those payments are justified as a measure to increase the buying power of the farmers of the country and to compensate in some degree for the payment they constantly make to industry, which is able to control its output and its price. I do not subscribe to the idea that the interests of the farmers of America and the W. P. A. workers of America are in conflict in the least degree. Indeed, I am convinced, on the other hand, that if we do things which will raise the standards and the income of the low-income farm groups in this country, it will be of benefit to the people in our cities who so desperately need work. I shall do all I can when that W. P. A. appropriation comes in to try to see that the $150,-000,000 figure is adopted, but I also favor the parity payments to farmers on their own merits and because I believe it is the most just thing we can do under the circumstances.

Now, you cannot expect to standardize or regiment the United States of America and its people on a poverty standard, and people who talk about a deflationary policy at this time are in effect proposing exactly that-proposing to solve this problem by additional bankruptcy. We have got to balance our Budget, of course, but we have got to balance it by better distribution of consuming power, by a more courageous tax policy, by taking back into the hands of this Government its constitutional right to be the source of new money and credit. We have got to do this in a constructive manner, and we cannot do it in a destructive manner, and we cannot do it either by attempting to vote against a provision which is on its merits, perhaps, for the benefit of one group of people, hoping thereby we will get more votes to assist another group of people who are in equal or even greater need.

The real problem in connection with agriculture is certainly not that the wages of wage earners are too high. The trouble is that the farmer works in a competitive industry. He competes with every other farmer in the production of crops and in the sale of crops. On the day he sells his crop he is at the mercy of the man who buys it. He can control neither his output nor his price. On the other hand, industry is in a position where it can control both output and price, and you have got to do something to equalize those two situations.

To my mind the most direct and straightforward thing to do is to put a floor under farm prices, a minimum cost-ofproduction price, and say that that will be the way we will prevent the discrimination between industry and agriculture that now exists. Thus, Treasury payments would be avoided. But those who criticize the program of this administration must remember it was confronted with the choice of either, on the one hand, compelling industry to produce abundance at a fair price, or, on the other hand, enabling agriculture to protect itself in some manner against a tremendous production at ruinously low prices. Which of these alternatives, I wonder, would the sharpest critics of the administration have chosen? We have not taken a more fundamental step, as I believe we should have done, and, therefore, as a matter of simple justice in the existing emergency for the farm people, I have felt all along that we should support these parity payments, and, therefore, I am voting in favor of them. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Schafer].

The amendment was rejected. The Clerk read as follows:

FARM TENANT ACT

To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to carry out the provisions of title I of the Bankhead-Jones Farm Tenant Act, approved July 22, 1937 (7 U. S. C. 1000-1006), including the employment of persons and means in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, exclusive of printing and binding, as authorized by said act, $24,984,500, together with the unexpended balance of the appropriation made under said act for the fiscal year 1939.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Johnson of Oklahoma: Page 93, line 22, after the word "Act", strike "$24,584,500" and insert in lieu thereof "$50.000,000."

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the $50,000,000 is not authorized by law.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Oklahoma desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Yes, Mr. Chairman; of course, I desire to discuss the point of order. I am surprised that the gentleman from New York raised a point of order against the pending amendment. But, more than that am I surprised that he should make a statement to the Committee that the amount set forth in the amendment is not authorized by law. I am sure that no Member of this body is better informed with reference to legislation that has been enacted by Congress in recent years than is the gentleman from New York. Certainly the gentleman from New York has not forgotten that he bitterly opposed and voted against the farmtenant bill passed by Congress and now a part of the organic law authorizing $50,000,000 this year. Surely he is not serious in his contention. I assume it is a part of his tactics to force me to argue a point of order at this time rather than to permit me to discuss the merits of my pending amendment. If so, it may become necessary to review briefly the history of this legislation in order to convince the gentleman from New York that there is authorization for the amendment offered. The gentleman will recall that after years of argument and empty promises by Congress concerning the problem of farm tenancy a compromise measure was finally enacted and signed by President Roosevelt. Some of us contended then that if we were going to do anything seriously and worth while in an effort to solve this perplexing problem that the Congress should begin with a $50,000,000 program, and step up the sum until at least $100,000,000 per year would be expended.

Few were satisfied then with what we got. But for the benefit of the gentleman from New York, I will say that over his stubborn opposition Congress actually tackled this gigantic and tragic situation of aiding landless farmers actually to own their own farms. Others said they favored farm-tenant legislation but wanted to start even more modestly. Of course, the gentleman from New York did not want to start at all. That was his privilege. In that he was joined by many of his Republican colleagues and, I am sorry to say, also by several on the Democratic side of this aisle. You see I am saying all this to educate my good friend from New York, whose memory apparently has failed him and who maintains that there is no law authorizing the amount set out in the pending amendment. [Laughter.]

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Not just now, but in a minute I will yield. The gentleman from New York may possibly remember that finally the Congress passed a compromise measure, and that for the first year $10,000,000 was authorized, which was expended; and that for the second year $25,000,000 was authorized, and I am glad to say to this Committee that practically every dollar of the $25,000,000 will have been expended by July 1. I have for my authority a statement from the Farm Security Administration. Then for the third year Congress authorized $50,000,000, and the question today is, Were we merely joking with the tenant-farmers and the sharecroppers throughout this country; were we just kidding them when we voted for that authorization, or is this Congress going to keep faith with the tenant-farmers of the country today?

At this time the Farm Security Administration has gone into practically half the counties of the United States, and in a very limited way have really just begun to get under way in carrying out the provisions of the Farm Tenant Act. In my State, with their limited funds, they are doing an excellent job. Of course, the program thus far is really only a drop in the bucket so far as needs are concerned. I do not pretend to say that the present farm-tenant program is going to solve the problem. But up to this good hour Congress has appropriated every dollar authorized under the Bankhead-Jones Farm Tenant Act. Can you now find it in your hearts to break faith with the tenant farmers?

Members will remember that last year the committee brought here an appropriation of $15,000,000 instead of $25,000,000, as authorized, and gave then as a reason, or, rather, as an excuse, that the Farm Security Administration had not expended all of the $10,000,000 appropriated the first year. You recall that the contention was made then that the Farm Security Administration could not expend all of the $25,000,000. But this House, by a vote of more than 2 to 1, by a vote of 103 to 219, as I recall, said a year ago that we were going to keep faith with the tenant farmers of America. Again I ask, Were you sincere then or only kidding the farm tenants, who are looking to you to make good your promises? The gentleman from New York knows, or, I submit, ought to know, that the substantive law does authorize $50,000,000. You see, I am still arguing the point of order. [Applause.] I now yield to the gentleman from South Dakota.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, can the gentleman tell us whether these purchases made under this appropriation are made in the name of the Government or made in the name of the Farmers Home Corporation?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I will say to the gentleman I am not certain in whose name the farms under this program are purchased, but assume they are made in the name of the Government for the farmers. But, after all, that is not of any great importance. The fact is that the farmer has 40 years with which to pay for his farm. Many no doubt will pay off long before that. Please bear in mind also that this appropriation is not a drain on the Treasury of the United States. Remember that every dollar of this money is to be paid back to the Treasury with interest. This item does not affect the Budget or the Treasury of the United States. This is a modest attempt to do something for the farmer, to help the farmer help himself.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Yes.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Does not the gentleman think we should also do something for the hundreds of thousands of farmers who are losing their farms, so that they can keep them?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Oh, yes; and I have introduced a bill in this Congress for that purpose. I would be glad to have the gentleman read that bill. It will help the farmers reclaim the lands that they have lost as well as give assistance to those other landless farmers who pray for an opportunity to own their own farms. There are no more patriotic citizens in America than our farmers. They are feeding the Nation at farm prices so low that they are really appalling. Thousands of hard-working, honest farmers have had their farms foreclosed through no fault of theirs. Many others have longed for the day they might sit by their own firesides, live under their own roofs, and have the opportunity to educate their children and enjoy "a more abundant life" to which all are entitled. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma has consumed 5 minutes. Does the gentleman from New York desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. TABER. I am only giving my own recollection that there was not authorization for such an amount.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. PATMAN). The amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma provides that the figures, $24,984,500, be stricken out and $50,000,000 inserted in lieu thereof.

This bill is making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture, and for the Farm Credit Administration, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940. The Chair has examined the law, and the law provides, on the question of farm tenancy, that not to exceed $10,000,000 shall be appropriated for the year ending June 30, 1938; not to exceed $25,000,000 for the year ending June 30, 1939; and not to exceed $50,-000,000 for each fiscal year thereafter.

Therefore the point of order is overruled.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 20 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

waste and should be defeated.

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

As I said in my opening remarks on the bill, the thing we must face here is raises in this bill. Here is a typical example of a proposed raise. Some Members who were pledged to economy and who have responsibilities on the Appropriations Committee have no temerity at all in offering amendments, no blush in the world for plunging the Government deeper in debt.

The gentleman says this is a loan. This is a direct appropriation from the Treasury at first, in the hope that it will be paid back some day. This whole program is not very satisfactory. We must do something bigger and wider for agriculture, if we are going to save agriculture, than picking out individual people and giving them a little candy. We have to do something different from that. This is typical of the attitude in the last few years in Washington. This amendment fits in perfectly with the idea of the old story that the village debated whether they would maintain an ambulance at the foot of the hill or whether they would build a fence at the top. This administration and its policies and this amendment are identical and typical of those in favor of maintaining the ambulance at the bottom of the hill without doing anything constructive to save lives. It is only a big

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Hook] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. HOOK. Mr. Chairman, it was with great interest that I listened to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. Johnson] when he offered his amendment to the pending bill, at which time he said that certain departments had developed into a body that were rather arrogant to Members of Congress. I do not know of any bureau or any department that is more arrogant to the Members of Congress than the Farm Security Administration.

I have had a little experience with the Farm Security Administration. I do not want it understood that I am opposed to the tenant provision of that bill, but the Farm Security Administration took over the old Resettlement Administration. They have throughout the country homestead projects. They are still administering and managing those homestead projects. I understand these homestead projects were for the purpose of bringing low-cost housing to the people in rural areas. The money spent by the Resettlement Administration was staggering. It was in most instances a glaring example of waste. Now, in order to cover up the amount of money they have wasted they are bringing into those projects people of high income, people who can pay the high There is such a project in Ironwood, Mich. I referred to this project the other day on the floor of this House. To give you an illustration of what they are doing, the promise they made was that they were going to allow people in industry to be sent into those homes, allow them a few acres of ground in order that they might raise their vegetables and help themselves to become self-sustaining by part-time agriculture and part-time industrial employment. The object was to help the laborers to properly clothe and feed themselves and their families. I hoped that such would be the result. But what happened? They brought in the managers of big corporations, men and families that are earning in the neighborhood of from $3,000 to $7,000 and $8,000 a year, instead of bringing in the men and women in industry who are earning from $900 to $1,800. Oh, yes; of 119 homes in the project, they have rented 28 to miners, and most of the rest who are still occupying these homes are the high-income people. I expected that after my complaint that the low-income group, the laboring class, if you please, especially miners, would be placed instead of those that can afford to rent homes in the city.

I will not vote for one penny more to build up the Farm Security Administration. [Applause,] I think that what we should do is to wipe off of the books the Farm Security Administration as far as the old Resettlement Administration is concerned. [Applause.] I hope we will make arrangements to liquidate this Administration and make these homes available to those who need them. I hope we can stop this expensive management of the projects now completed.

I hope you vote down this amendment to increase this appropriation.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Dirksen] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. HENNINGS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Not yet, please.

Mr. Chairman, I approach this hour of the day with considerable misgiving. The noise and confusion in the Chamber that is the result of the natural restless spirit at this hour of the day certainly is not conducive to the best legislation. While I have not sought to prevail upon the chairman of the subcommittee to have the Committee rise at this time, yet I think in the interest of the country it might be well.

There is pending before us right now a proposal to add $25,000,000 to the Farm Security Administration. Gentlemen, $25,000,000 does not grow on gooseberry bushes; it is still a lot of money out where I come from, and yet here at 6:30 in the evening in the welter of confusion we seek to pass intelligently upon whether or not we ought to add $25,000,000 to the Farm Security appropriation. I hope this will not be done.

In the first place, this item has had very mature and deliberate consideration on the part of the subcommittee, and I approach the whole thing with misgivings, whether at this hour or any other hour for many reasons. There are nearly 7,000,000 farmers, owners, and tenants in the country and nearly 3,000,000 of those are tenants. Mr. Alexander, of the Farm Security Administration, came before the subcommittee and told us that in the fiscal year 1938 he spent $25,000,000 with which he purchased 1,869 farms; yet in the justification that came before the committee he said that the number of tenants in the country in that year had increased by 40,000. You increase the number by 40,000 and you alleviate 1,869. So you could wash the entire Federal Treasury through this item in the appropriation bill and still make no impression upon this colossal problem of farm tenancy.

We have been at this problem only a short time. My opinion is that if something good and desirable can be done, let us do it slowly, with assurance that a good foundation will be laid, but let us not throw an additional $25,000,000 into this, for we do not know what the result is going to be.

In addition thereto you cannot have too much confidence in the Administrator, in view of the testimony that was offered.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?
Mr. DIRKSEN. If the gentleman will let me proceed, I will try to yield later. I have a story photostated from the Saturday Evening Post because it deals with farm tenancy.
We asked Mr. Alexander before the subcommittee whether he read it. He said, "No; I have not." I said, "Was it brought to your attention? Because it is in derogation of the work that you are doing." "No," he said, "I do not get my education from the Saturday Evening Post any more." I said, "You might with profit read it, because here is something that goes to the very heart of your administration, and you come in here and tell the members of the subcommittee that you are too big, and too bold, and too smart to read Garet Garrett in the Saturday Evening Post, who takes the hide off of your administration." You should read this some time. It is available in my office to anybody who wants to read it.

When the Administrator of Farm Security talks like that it is time we paused and asked him how about the tenant down in Alabama who was getting money he did not want, who got $657 for odds and ends, and did not know what it was for, and who got $800 for a new house and did not know what it was for. It is about time we called a halt and took stock. We should deliberately explore in greater detail the operations of the Farm Security Administration to see whether or not this money is being wisely expended.

I charge you now at half past six in the evening that $25,000,000 does not grow on gooseberry bushes.

Mr. PATRICK. I want the address of the man in Alabama who got the money and did not want it.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I now yield to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Cox].

Mr. COX. Does the gentleman entertain any serious doubt about this House voting $25,000,000 more to the Farm Security Administration to be largely wasted under the supervision of that off-color politician, Dr. Alexander?

Mr. DIRKSEN. The gentleman who now stands in the Well of the House does entertain some misgivings as to what this House will do under present circumstances. I hope the amendment seeking an extra $25,000,000 for this purpose will not be approved.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Cannon] for 5 minutes.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, due to a miscalculation, we omitted to ask sufficient time to include the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Pace], who asked to be heard on this item. I therefore ask unanimous consent that the time be extended 5 minutes to be yielded to the gentleman from Georgia.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. Chairman, I object.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman-

Mr. HENNINGS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Yes; I yield.

Mr. HENNINGS. Mr. Chairman, I present a privileged motion, that the Committee do now rise.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is out of order. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Cannon] is recognized.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I think it is generally recognized that while the farm-tenancy program is a very appealing one from a theoretical point of view, it is in actual practice largely a sentimental gesture. It cannot cure the evil of farm tenancy. It does not even alleviate it. According to the testimony evinced before the committee, it has not materially affected the farm-tenant situation, much less remedied it. Last year we spent $10,000,000 on this item and $25,000,000 this year, and during the 2 years tenancy increased at an accelerated rate. Those in charge of the work estimated that, carried out to its ultimate conclusion, it would require $14,000,000,000 to complete the program outlined in the act authorizing the expenditure. So on the face of it, Mr. Chairman, it is at best merely a demonstrational activity, and, as we already have established projects of this nature in every State of the Union, it follows that any advantage which might accrue from the demonstrational features of this work can now be studied in every representative section of the country and that further expenditures for the purpose are in that respect largely a matter of duplication. However, in deference to those who approve the plan, we allowed the full Budget estimate to continue and enlarge the program, and the bill provides more for the item, or certainly as much, as the situation seems to warrant.

I think we must realize, Mr. Chairman, that the only practical and permanent cure for tenancy is in increasing the price of farm products to a point where they will pay a fair wage for the farmer's labor and a fair return on his investment. Until we do farm tenancy will continue to increase, and no such microscopic contributions as this—affecting at most an infinitesimal percentage of tenants—can have any practical or effective influence on the situation.

Mr. Chairman, I trust the Committee will vote down this proposal to spend an additional $25,000,000 beyond the more than generous provision already made for this purpose.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. Johnson].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. TABER: On page 93, strike out lines 15 to 24, inclusive.

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

LIQUIDATION AND MANAGEMENT OF RESETTLEMENT PROJECTS

To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to carry out the provisions of section 43 of title IV of the Bankhead-Jones Farm Tenant Act, approved July 22, 1937 (7 U. S. C. 1014-1029), including the employment of persons and means, in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, exclusive of printing and binding, as authorized by said act, $1,987,400.

Mr. HENNINGS. Mr. Chairman, I offer a preferential motion.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HENNINGS. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise.

The motion was rejected.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

ACTIVITIES SHOULD NOT BE INCREASED UNTIL FULL MEANING OF TAX DECISION IS KNOWN

Mr. Chairman, any amendments that would increase operations under the Bankhead-Jones Farm Tenancy Act should be considered with more deliberation than any amendment will receive tonight. None should be adopted now.

I call the attention of the Members of the House to the effect of the tax decision by the United States Supreme Court yesterday upon the operations of Federal instrumentalities, such as that for which we are now appropriating. The paragraph before us appropriates for title IV of the Bankhead-Jones Farm Tenant Act. That means the Farmers' Home Corporation, a Federal instrumentality in the same class as that directly involved in the Supreme Court decision vesterday.

The paragraph just passed appropriates for title I of the Farm Tenancy Act, and that is the title which sets forth operations for the Farmers' Home Corporation. Clearly the income of that corporation now becomes subject to State taxation.

I have in my hand a copy of the Bankhead-Jones Farm Tenant Act. Title IV provides for setting up of the Farmers' Home Corporation and provides that the Secretary of Agriculture may delegate to the Farmers' Home Corporation such activities authorized under title I and title IV as he may desire. And so, Mr. Chairman, before we increase or extend operations under the Farm Tenancy Act, we should know better than we do today, just how much is to be involved in State taxation for its operation.

DECISION NULLIFIES TAX-EXEMPT SECTIONS

It is true that paragraph (i) of section 40, title IV, and paragraph (b), section 50, of the Bankhead-Jones Farm Tenant Act of 1937 states that the instrumentality created shall be exempt from taxation; but that is no longer valid law.

The decision handed down by the Supreme Court yester-day repealed all that. The Court held that the income of an employee of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation may be taxed by a State and further held that the instrumentality itself is not immune from taxation. This means that the Farmers' Home Corporation, for which we are here appropriating, is no longer exempt from State taxation.

What that will do to its operations is too early yet to say, but at least it seems wise that we do not accept any amendments to broaden its activities, or to increase the funds for expanding its purchases and operations.

ARE RETIRED LANDS TAXABLE?

The next paragraph in the appropriation bill before us appropriates another $5,000,000 for land utilization and retirement of submarginal land. Yesterday's Court decision raises the interesting possibility that all of the land so purchased, and including the land already purchased, will be subject to State taxation.

Certainly it becomes a question that will be tested in the courts. The question is a matter of life and death in many counties. Hundreds of thousands of acres have been taken from the tax rolls. This throws the burden of outstanding bond and warrant indebtedness on to the remaining tax-payers. Towns that have been established and communities that have been built up to serve a territory in private ownership are finding their values destroyed. And, as I say, it has become a life-and-death matter for some of these communities and the people who have invested their life's efforts and sayings therein.

But clearly, before these land-buying activities are expanded, and before these problems are increased, Congress should know the full meaning of yesterday's tax decision by the Supreme Court.

At a later date I shall place in the RECORD a summary of protests that I have received from some of the communities involved, together with portions of correspondence with the Soil Conservation Service on the subject.

The pro forma amendment was withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

Total, Farm Tenant Act, $31,950,230.

Mr. MOSER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Moser: Page 4, strike out all of line 19.

Mr. MOSER. Mr. Chairman, my amendment would save a substantial amount of money to the taxpayers of the United States, and in terms of money, as necessity has taught its value, this means money to the district I have the honor to represent.

I voted for the Bankhead-Jones Farm Tenant Act in this House now approaching 2 years ago, and at that time those of you who were colleagues of mine then will remember that it was intended that the benefits of rehabilitation were to be extended to a limited number of about five people to a congressional district under its original appropriation of $10,-000,000. When I became a Member of the Seventy-fifth Congress, the question was rife in the Capital City, What is going to become of Resettlement? The Secretary of Agriculture has said to me it was dropped as a waif on his doorstep and he would appreciate the introduction of a bill that would take it away from his Department; also that he restricted their construction operations to uncompleted buildings and prohibited the launching of any new undertakings.

But the Resettlement Administration, the waif on the Secretary's doorstep, was available to the bureaucrats to pounce upon the Bankhead-Jones Farm Tenancy Act. The Bankhead-Jones Act was a prey to those ubiquitous vultures. Those are the people who rechristened the waif on the Secretary's doorstep, "Resettlement," giving it the dignified title "Farm Security Administration," which title becomes the more opprobrious as the roamings of their wandering minstrels and scavengers seeking case load infest the farming communities with their home-service department, undertaking to teach our farmer's wives to keep house and care for children—gratuitous advice by childless women who never kept house themselves. Their roving minstrels, with entire freedom, seek to induce farmers to buy steers to fatten, offering to transport them free to the stockyards to make the purchases they select. The purpose of such actions are instantly obvious to the initiated.

In the appropriation act for relief in 1938 they came in and went on relief for $175,000,000. That group, having gone on relief for $175,000,000, conceived the idea of paternalism to the degree they thought it would be well and wise to enter into the hosiery-manufacturing business, which has been the subject of controversy for some time.

I do not see how anyone can conceive by any stretch of the imagination why a Farm Security Administration should engage in the manufacture of full-fashioned hosiery—undertaking to manufacture 54-gage hose of the sheer type for exclusive evening dress in different homestead areas.

To one of the posts of an assistant administrator Milo Perkins was appointed over the protest, according to the most reliable sources of information, of our beloved chairman of the Agricultural Committee, Marvin Jones, and our Speaker. Milo Perkins said to me, "We have a bear by the tail, and we cannot let go. It looks like hades to keep these people on relief after building homes for them." Admitting these homes were erected on the self-help conceived idea and in consequence of inexperience they had become too costly.

Mr. Perkins further stated the idea as conceived was to provide them with a piece of land to cultivate that industry might be attracted to these homestead localities and provide supplemental work for cash incomes. As industry was not attracted "farm security" set out to find it and on his statement selected the hosiery industry. They negotiated a contract with the Dexdale Hosiery Mills to furnish the management and take the unfinished product, 300,000 dozen pairs annually. Dexdale to take this product and finish the dyeing and marketing from Lansdale, Pa. The industry producing 50,000,000 dozen pairs annually, of which only 40,000,000 dozen were consumed by the market, was already beyond the saturation point. Perkins argued this proposal represented less than 1 percent of the industry's output. His own release of August 31, 1938, indicated only about 800 families available for this work in the homesteads. The Oakbrook Mill, of my district, produces 80 percent of the industry's consumption of this 54-gage hosiery and has operated at 25 percent of capacity, employing 800 people in one mill. Perkins' proposal involved the advancement of $3,050,000 to Dexdale for construction of plants.

Dexdale to install the machinery on a 5-year-contract basis at a stated cost of $320,000, which capital investment nets a 24-cents-per-dozen cost to Dexdale. Consider this being done in the interest of "farm security" and shudder at your farmer constituent's reaction if you vote to continue this sort of paternalism in legislating to assist the farmer under the name and disguise of "farm security." Among the protests registered was one to Colonel McIntyre, who advised me that Mr. Perkins is no longer with Farm Security. But lo, Secretary Wallace informed me the same day he had been transferred to Surplus Commodities. There our genial colleague from Florida [Mr. Peterson] has had his differences in effecting the sale of oranges at 32 cents per box of approximately 150. Perkins wants to buy them at auction to distribute as surplus commodities. Better watch him, boys, he will build canneries next-having learned so much of the hosiery business.

I cannot reconcile myself to that kind of philosophy. It is not the kind of teachings I had in my early childhood and that I carried with me to manhood, and it is not in accord with the character of investigations I was charged with making during all my career as investigator for the Federal Government. I believe the time has arrived that we should take steps to stop all paternalism.

It was I at the importunity of the hosiery manufacturers in my district who went to the Comptroller General after I could not reason with the Farm Security Administration, and it was the Comptroller General who, on the 6th of December, held that, not under the deficiency relief appropriation bill we passed in January of this year but under the old act of 1938 providing for relief for the year ending June 30, because this hosiery proposition wants to compete with cotton and other manufacturing industries. This was unlawful, yet Perkins went ahead in defiance of the ruling. The very 13th day of September 1938 that I went to the Comptroller General is the date the contracts were let by Milo Perkins when he knew I was going there, and these contracts can be seen in the hands of the Comptroller today and the stop that he placed against them.

In addition, the Farm Security Administration, as a facelifting proposition, or I should say a face-saving proposition instead of a face-lifting proposition—this being the cheaper, it would have been more economical—they undertook to make the Greenbelt area more attractive; and because the people would not travel in there in view of the facilities of transportation that were open to them, they proceeded to enter into a secret contract with the Capital City Traction Co. to operate a direct bus line at a cost of slightly less than $1,000 per month solely to make travel and residence between Greenbelt and the metropolitan area of Washington more attractive. This the Comptroller General also held to be unlawful. Two nights ago I heard announced over the radio that the proposal was being abandoned and a shuttle bus would be operated between Greenbelt and the Washington metropolitan area.

If you will vote to strike out this appropriation, we can stand squarely on our feet and take care of the Bankhead-Jones Act as it was intended in the original appropriation and enactment. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. Moser) there were-ayes 118, noes 107.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I may say that this amendment simply strikes out the total and does not affect the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

BELTSVILLE RESEARCH CENTER

For general administrative purposes, including maintenance, operation, repairs, and other expenses, $85,000; and, in addition thereto, this appropriation may be augmented, by transfer of funds or by reimbursement, from applicable appropriations, to cover the cost, including handling and other related charges, of services and supplies, equipment, and materials furnished, stores of which may be maintained at the center, and to cover the cost of building construction, alteration, and repair performed by the center in carrying out the purposes of such applicable appropriations and the applicable appropriations may also be charged their proportionate share of the necessary general expenses of the center not covered by this appropriation. not covered by this appropriation.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, would it be agreeable to the chairman of the subcommittee if a unanimous-consent request was submitted at this time to return to pages 54 and 56 to reinsert the items that were stricken out on points of order?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. The hour is so late and the differences are so inconsequential that I will have to object at this time.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, just to call attention to the Beltsville research center. I have visited that locality. I advise all Members to do the same. This is the project that cost $16,000,000, yet, on their own admission, it ought not to have cost more than $8,000,000. This is what was known as Tugwelltown, but, in order for us to forget it, they call it Beltsville. They are trying an experiment there. This is a cooperative matter. They fight there to see whether or not dogs will be allowed in Beltsville, and other similar foolish things.

You notice this project is not even self-supporting. Eighty-five thousand dollars is added simply to run it. They do not sell any houses, and the houses are allowed to stay there and decay. It is a peculiar proposition. The Saturday Evening Post told us all about it 2 years ago, but they do not read, as you were told, the Saturday Evening Post. Of all the failures you ought to read about, read about Beltsville.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. Nothing we can say will change the bill. It is included somewhere else.

The Clerk read as follows:

FOREST ROADS AND TRAILS

For carrying out the provisions of section 23 of the Federal Highway Act approved November 9, 1921 (23 U. S. C. 23), including not to exceed $59,500 for departmental personal services in the District of Columbia, $10,000,000, which sum consists of the balance of the amount authorized to be appropriated for the fiscal year 1939 by the act approved June 16, 1936 (Stat. 1520), and $3,000,000 of the amount authorized to be appropriated for the fiscal year 1940 by the act approved June 8, 1938 (52 Stat. 635), to be immediately available and to remain available until expended: Provided, That this appropriation shall be available for the rental, purchase, or construction of buildings necessary for the storage of equipment and supplies used for road and trail construction and maintenance, but the total cost of any such building purchased or constructed under this authorization shall not exceed $7,500.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the paragraph that this is legislation on an appropriation bill providing for the construction of a building at a limit beyond that authorized by law.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman make the point of order against the proviso or against the entire paragraph?

Mr. TABER. Against the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Missouri desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I may say, Mr. Chairman, that this provision in the bill is the only limiting authority. the gentleman can cite us to some other authority establishing the limitation, I should be pleased to have the citation. There is no other limitation, Mr. Chairman, and the point of order is not well taken.

Mr. TABER. There is no authorization for it at all. The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Cannon of Missouri: On page 97, insert a new paragraph, as follows:

"FOREST ROADS AND TRAILS

"Forest Roads and Trails
"For carrying out the provisions of section 23 of the Federal Highway Act approved November 9, 1921 (23 U. S. C. 23), including not to exceed $59,500 for departmental personal services in the District of Columbia, $10,000,000, which sum consists of the balance of the amount authorized to be appropriated for the fiscal year 1939 by the act approved June 16, 1936 (Stat. 1520), and $3,000,000 of the amount authorized to be appropriated for the fiscal year 1940 by the act approved June 8, 1938 (52 Stat. 635), to be immediately available and to remain available until expended: Provided, That this appropriation shall be available for the rental of buildings necessary for the storage of equipment and supplies used for road and trail construction and maintenance."

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, this strikes out the two words that are objectionable, and I ask for a vote on the amendment.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I think the amendment is still subject to a point of order, and I make the point of order against the amendment that it is legislation and provides for construction and purchase of buildings which is entirely unauthorized by law.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment provides for the rental of buildings.

Mr. TABER. I thought it said construction.

The CHAIRMAN. The language is that the appropriation shall be available for the rental of buildings, and so forth.

The Chair overrules the point of order.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

INTERCHANGE OF APPROPRIATIONS

Not to exceed 5 percent of the foregoing amounts for the miscellaneous expenses of the work of any bureau, division, or office herein provided for shall be available interchangeably for expenditures on the objects included within the general expenses of such bureau, division, or office, but no more than 5 percent shall be added to any one item of appropriation except in cases of extraordinary emergency.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the paragraph that it is legislation on an appropriation bill and delegates authority and requires the performance of further duties on the part of the Secretary of Agriculture.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, the Chair ruled on that point of order when a similar provision was before the Committee Friday.

The CHARMAN. On a number of occasions a similar point of order has been overruled. The Chair overrules the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

This title may be cited as the "Farm Credit Administration Appropriation Act of 1940."

Mr. BURDICK. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment. The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Burdick: At the end of line 15, on page 104, add a new paragraph, as follows:
"No bonds of the United States shall be issued to finance any provision of this act, but the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to issue Treasury notes (in lieu of bonds) therefor under authority of the act of 1934 authorizing the issuance of $3,000,000,000 in Treasury notes without reference to any base of issue except the responsibility of the Government itself."

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, of course, the amendment is subject to a point of order, and I make the point of order that the amendment constitutes legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from North Dakota desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. BURDICK. The objection is that it is not a limitation; but I submit that when you are going to raise this money not by the issuance of bonds-

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is that it is legislation on an appropriation bill.

Mr. BURDICK. No; it limits the manner in which this money is going to be raised. It may not raise it at all, and you had better adopt this amendment or leave it out.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule.

The point of order is sustained.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. Parman, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 5269) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture and for the Farm Credit Administration for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, and for other purposes, had directed him to report the same back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and all amendments thereto to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment?

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I demand a separate vote on the Cannon amendment of $250,000,000 for parity payments.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any other amendment? If not, the Chair will put them in gross. The amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the Cannon amend-

The Clerk reported the Cannon amendment.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the Cannon amendment.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were-yeas 191, nays 204, not voting 37, as follows:

W. P. A. INVESTIGATION

Mr. SHAFER of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD at this

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SHAFER of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, the record of Monday's vote on the resolution offered by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Cox] providing for an investigation of the Works Progress Administration shows that I changed my vote from "nay" to "yea." That is incorrect. I did not vote on the first roll call, having been in conference when my name was called. When I returned to the floor I was informed by my colleagues that someone on the Democratic side had voted "nay" when my name was called. I then went into the Well of the House to make certain that my name would be called on the second roll call. The reading clerk, Mr. Chaffee, did not call my name at the proper place, and I immediately checked him and asked the reason why. He advised me to wait until the roll call was completed and to correct the record at that time. This was done, and I cast a "yea" vote. I at no time cast a "nay" vote in connection with the Cox resolution.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 29, 1939

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Heavenly Father of mankind, we thank Thee that we cannot fall out of the hands of the living God. The hands that sparkle the darkness with floods of light, that take up the morning stars and make them chime their melodies, that hold the seas in their hollow are the same hands that nestle His children in their palms. We rejoice that the tabernacle of God is with men and that He shall dwell with them and they shall be His people, and God Himself shall be with them and be their God. Forgive, blessed Lord, forgive when our souls go blind toward Thee, when covetousness closes the doors of our hearts, when indifference pauperizes and outrages the finer feelings, and when we neglect the way of life made warm by the blood and tears gone before. O God, in this strange and varied life, quivering with veiled tragedies, trembling with unsolved mysteries, help us to build the house of our soul of deep foundational purity and thus stand related to the precious gifts of life. In the name of our holy Redeemer. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. FADDIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. EATON of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD, and to include therein a letter from a constituent.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. SCHIFFLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD, and to include therein an editorial from the Wheeling Intelligencer.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered. There was no objection.

ANNOUNCEMENT

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for one-half minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Speaker, on yesterday I received a telegram from my colleague the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Crawford], dated the 26th of March at Saginaw, asking to be paired against the agricultural appropriation bill. Through inadvertence a live pair was not obtained and he was paired generally. Had he been present in the Chamber he would have voted against the entire bill.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns today it adjourn to meet at 11 a. m. tomorrow.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, this is the first intimation I have had that such a request was to be made by the majority leader. I do not feel that I can agree to it at the present time.

Mr. RAYBURN. I am making the request at the instance of the gentleman from Colorado and the gentleman from Virginia. They told me they had discussed it with the minority members on the Appropriations Committee, giving the clear indication that it was agreeable to them. This is the reason I am submitting the request.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I would, of course, like to know something about what is going on before we reach an agreement

Mr. RAYBURN. Had I known I was going to submit this request I would have communicated with the gentleman. I was just asked to make it a moment ago and was advised that the members of the Committee on Appropriations had

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. That is all right, but at the same time I would like to know about such requests

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. The gentleman from Massachusetts just came into the Chamber 3 minutes ago.

Mr. RAYBURN. I think the gentleman from Massachusetts cannot complain about the way I handle these matters, for I usually communicate with him when I know of these things beforehand.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. The gentleman is entirely correct in his statement, and I will not object.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, what will be the program today and Friday? It would seem day tomorrow, we ought not to be crowded too hard today and Friday.

Mr. RAYBURN. I may say to the gentleman from New York that all we have to do this week, with the exception of the bill that will be called up tomorrow, will be consideration of the Labor Department appropriation bill.

Mr. TABER. And this conference report.

Mr. RAYBURN. That will be called up this morning. Mr. TABER. There will not be anything else of importance today and Friday except these two things?

Mr. RAYBURN. Not that I know of.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. There will be no rules called up?

Mr. RAYBURN. No.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to objectand I shall not-I said in the meeting of the Committee on Rules that I would not object to this request, but I would like to ask the majority leader if it is the intention to try to finish consideration of the relief bill tomorrow?

Mr. RAYBURN. That is the hope.

Mr. MAPES. Let me say that I have an idea that a good many Members of the House will want to discuss the relief bill as they wanted to discuss the agricultural appropriation bill, which was disposed of last night, and that to attempt to dispose of the bill tomorrow will result in another duplication of what happened last week; we just will not be able to do it.

Mr. RAYBURN. That is a matter, of course, that I cannot control.

Mr. MAPES. It would seem to me it would be much better to have an understanding that we shall have 2 days for the consideration of the relief bill.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Texas yield?

Mr. RAYBURN. I yield. Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I may say to the gentleman from Michigan that the only purpose in trying to complete consideration of the relief bill tomorrow was to accommodate our colleagues from Illinois who are anxious to return tomorrow on account of an approaching election.

Mr. MAPES. As I understand it, the election is not until Tuesday. The trains will get them there after Friday in plenty of time before the election.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. But there always have to be a few conversations and preliminaries to an election.

Mr. PARSONS. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.
Mr. PARSONS. What is the request pending before the

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent that when the House adjourns today it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock tomorrow.

Mr. PARSONS. I object, Mr. Speaker.

COMMITTEE ON RULES

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Rules may have until midnight tonight to file a report on a resolution making in order for consideration the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 246) making a further additional appropriation for work relief and relief for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1939.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. GILLIE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein an article on the sugar problem by my colleague the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAWFORD].

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the statement.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

On amendment No. 1: The Senate amendment inserts a congressional declaration to the effect that by reason of continued national deficits since 1931 it is desirable to reduce Government expenditures substantially and that such reduction may be accomplished in some measure by proceeding immediately under the act. The House recedes with an amendment the effect of which is to retain the declaration and to rebut any implication that the sole objective of the bill is to reduce expenditures.

JOHN J. COCHRAN,
LINDSAY C. WARREN,
J. W. ROBINSON,
HARRY P. BEAM,
E. E. COX,
WM. T. SCHULTE,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 3 minutes.

Mr. Cochran. Mr. Speaker, I yield inyself 3 minutes.

Mr. Speaker, this conference report was agreed to by the Senate yesterday in less than 1 minute. The report was signed by the Republican leader, Senator McNary, as well as by his Republican colleagues on the Reorganization Committee in the Senate.

There is no use rehashing what has occurred in the past. It is sufficient to say briefly, the purpose of this bill is to give the President the power to put his house, that which he is held responsible for, in order. It is not a partisan question and should never have been a partisan question. We voted to give Republican Presidents far more power than is contained in this bill, and I would not hesitate to do so again; in fact, I would not hesitate to make this permanent legislation rather than place a limit on the time within which orders must be sent to the Congress, so that future Presidents would have the same power.

In the final analysis we are saying to the President, who is about the fifth President that has urged the Congress of the United States to delegate power to reorganize the executive branch of the Government, "Here is your opportunity." The President says he wants to do it, and I want him to do it. We all know how inefficient the executive branch of the Government is. In a way, we are putting the President on the spot. If he does not do what he says he wants to do, what the Congress wants him to do, and what the country wants him to do, he is responsible, and then you will be justified in criticizing him. All I ask here is to give the President an opportunity to do his job.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 6 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. Taber].

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, the conference report is before the House. There are some things in it, particularly amendments Nos. 15, 16, and 17, and the changes that have been made in section 6 on page 7 as a result of the House amendment to the Senate amendment striking out the item, that rather improve the bill. However, there is an amendment to Senate amendment No. 22 which leaves the situation as to the right of the President to abolish any function entirely up in the air. Frankly, there is an implied power as a result of the language that the majority have agreed upon but no positive, definite power on the part of the President to abolish any agency. Therefore, it is practically impossible, except insofar as the President may remove duplication by consolidation of functions, for any saving to be effected.

The worst trouble with the whole thing is that there can be consolidation with an increase in overhead and a decrease in efficiency. The only protection Congress has against such operations on the part of the Executive, if Congress does not favor any reorganization that may be submitted by the President, is the passage of a resolution through both Houses. If the President does not approve it, we are faced with the necessity of making it effective over a veto by a two-thirds vote. This is the only protection Congress has against the abuse of this power of reorganization that is given to the President. With this situation existing, I cannot vote to approve any step of that kind in view of the question involved of the impossibility of abolishing functions because the power does not seem to be given clearly and the difficulty the House will have in vetoing an abuse of the power by the Executive.

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? Mr. TABER. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania. Mr. WALTER. Would not the combination of several agencies necessarily result in the abolition of at least one agency?

Mr. TABER. That is permitted and it is possible. However, the combination of agencies might result, as it has in so many cases I have seen in connection with State governments—I have observed New York and Massachusetts—in an increase in expense and an increase in overhead, and no increase in efficiency.

Mr. WALTER. The gentleman says very definitely that under this bill there would be no agencies abolished.

Mr. TABER. No; I did not say that. I said there is no power to abolish functions. There is power to abolish agencies, but no power to abolish functions is given absolutely and definitely. This power was given in the House bill, but if the gentleman will read the conference report and the proposal in the amendment to the Senate amendment on page 4, amendment No. 22, he will see there is not a bit of real authority to abolish any function.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania. Mr. RICH. In connection with a reorganization, would it not be a wise thing for the President to make his recommendations regarding changes before he makes the changes, so we may find out whether or not they will be satisfactory?

Mr. TABER. That is what he does under the bill. After a recommendation is made by the President, 60 calendar days must elapse before it becomes effective. During these 60 calendar days the Congress would have the power to indicate that it did not approve of the changes. If the Congress did so indicate and the President approved the resolution it would stop the changes.

Mr. BURDICK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield to the gentleman from North Dakota.
Mr. BURDICK. If this conference report were adopted, would not the House be putting itself in a position where a two-thirds vote would be required to prevent anything the President might do?

Mr. TABER. It would; there is no question about that. [Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Gifford].

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Speaker, the finale is about to be written on a matter that has been of great interest to the Nation for the past 2 years.

I want to take a moment to recall to you that in 1936 the President's proposal to pack the Supreme Court was immediately followed by a demand to reorganize the Government, granting to him most extraordinary powers. I congratulate the majority in having finally presented bill that gives him very little power in comparison with those for which he had asked. The sacrifice made in another body to defeat the Wheeler amendment, so-called, has shorn the bill of much of its real danger. Therefore, you may ask why do I further oppose it? I dislike to say it, but when I consider the enormous grants of power demanded by the Executive, I hesitate to entrust him with even the power given under this bill to accomplish his desires.

Some of us feel that we know the Indian traits sometimes exhibited. We recall the impressive exercises held here recently at the anniversary exercises. After 150 years of procedure, will you now vote that a legislative measure shall take effect when one body may be opposed and the other body in favor? Shall we allow a proposal to become a law in such manner? This is too violent a change in procedure for me to approve. Therefore, although the act itself may be a mild measure, the principle involved is of the highest importance. Shall the precedent be established that any legislative matter may become law despite a violent disagreement between the two Houses of the legislative branch of the Government? Many seem to take this lightly, but it was regarded as of the greatest concern in the other body and many resisted it in a most spectacular debate.

For this particular reason the lack of affirmative action by both Houses as demanded in the Wheeler amendment, which was so earnestly fought for and only finally defeated by extraordinary means which is now recent history, and about which you are fully informed, I must vote in protest. So great were the sacrifices made in order to defeat the Wheeler amendment that no actual function can be abolished. However, if an agency is abolished and no provision made for transfer of its functions, the activity itself would be made ineffectual.

Many bureaus and boards have been established in these recent years by so-called emergency measures. What will be the effect with respect to these which should be repealed as soon as possible? It now seems that none will be abolished during this session, and we fear that they will be largely frozen into the regular departments as a result of this reorganization bill. If the President presents an omnibus bill, these agencies may be perpetuated.

Mr. ROUTZOHN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? Mr. GIFFORD. I yield.

Mr. ROUTZOHN. Is it possible for a filibuster in the Senate to defeat that?

Mr. GIFFORD. It seems not, because the bill formulates a peculiar rule binding the other body to a certain procedure. I doubt the effectiveness of that rule. It is hard to imagine that we can bind another body or that they themselves can bind another Congress to such a rule. It may be effective. I do not pretend to know more than the parliamentarians who drew it.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman 1 additional minute. With his permission, I would like to call the gentleman's attention to the fact that the legislation specifically provides in reference to emergency agencies that their functions cannot be continued beyond the time specifically provided by law.

Mr. GIFFORD. Hoover asked for a reorganization, but one branch could, and did, refuse it. That is orderly procedure, because, as always, unless both branches agree, legislation fails.

Again I say I cannot, I will not, vote for any measure, after my long service here and my limited knowledge of constitutional procedure, which provides that legislation shall take effect with one branch in absolute disagreement with the other. It is a new and dangerous procedure, and should be recognized as such. [Applause.]

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN].

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, I believe it was in 1863 that Mr. Lincoln convened a meeting of his Cabinet, and from his drawer took a little volume of the funny stories of Artemus Ward. He read one of those stories to the Cabinet, and just split his sides laughing. Of course, a dignified gentleman like Secretary Seward did not appreciate that, but shortly thereafter he took from that same drawer the Emancipation Proclamation. So he could mingle that which was humorous with that which was serious at one and the same time. I am glad that I have preserved a sense of humor, particularly about this reorganization bill. I think it is a paradox, if a paradox is something that is a contradiction within itself. We start out with a preamble, which was written in by the Senate, in order to make the country conscious, I assume, that there had to be some drastic revision of expenditures, and then we follow that with the word "accordingly" and say that accordingly the President shall be given this power to reorganize. All very fine. After we have given him the power, ostensibly, in the interest of efficiency, economy, and simplicity, then we promptly tell him where he cannot place his hand, and in what respect he cannot effect the basic objectives or the alleged objectives of this act. We have exempted 20 agencies. The Senate wrote in two more for exemption after we got through. Those 20 agencies embrace 60,000 people, and we say to the President, those you must not touch. There is not much left for him. Consequently there was a peculiar compromise in order to get around the Wheeler amendment in the other body, and that was an amendment that was written in at the instance of still another Member of that distinguished body, which would prohibit and does prohibit the President from abolishing any functions. So there is your paradox. We insist that there ought to be some drastic retrenchment in expenditure, there ought to be efficiency, there ought to be economy, and then we promptly set up the barricade beyond which the President cannot go.

There is a delicious bit of language in the report, and it will be found in the statement of the managers under amendment numbered 1. It states that the House recedes with an amendment, the effect of which is to retain the declaration that the Senate put in and to rebut any implication that the sole objective of the bill is to reduce expenditure. That always tickles me a great deal, but do not expect too much from this bill. If he cannot abolish any functions, it simply means that all functions that exist at the present time must be kept in some way or other. He may transfer, he may send them from one agency to another, but they cannot be abolished; so that this bill could more properly be styled the regrouping act of 1939 rather than the Reorganization Act of 1939. Of course, it still has what, in my judgment, is the basic vice alluded to by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GIFFORD]. It still requires disavowal by both Houses. That is a weakness, I think. Secondly, it proceeds with a negative rather than an affirmative philosophy, such as we pointed out when the bill was before this body.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Yes.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. I am interested in the statement of the gentleman that it is provided here that the President cannot do away with any function. Can he do away with any functionaries who perform those functions?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, if I were a Houdini and the great magician Thurston combined in one, I probably would have an answer to that question, but under present circumstances I doubt very much whether I can find the answer. That is the reason I say that this bill can be more accurately styled the regrouping act of 1939 rather than the Reorganization Act of 1939. I yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WARREN], after which I shall move the previous question.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Speaker, as already stated by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Cochran] this is a unanimous report upon the part of the Senate conferees and was unanimously adopted in that body yesterday. Our colleagues of the minority in the House saw fit not to sign the report. I call the attention of the House to the fact that this bill after a rather strenuous debate passed this body by a vote of 246 to 153. The passage of that bill was due to the splendid cooperation of practically the entire membership on the Democratic side of the House, who sat here all day long and fought to preserve the integrity of the bill. It received the largest percentage of Democratic votes that has been obtained on any controversial measure in the House during the last 8 years, and we think that it was quite an achievement that on the final roll call it received the approval and the blessing of such veterans in the House as the gentleman from New York [Mr. Wadsworth], the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Mapes], the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Reece], the gentleman from California [Mr. Welch], the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. Wolverton], and a new Member, the gentleman from California [Mr. EATON]. In addition to that, it received the solid support of the membership of the three other parties represented in the House. The gentleman from New York [Mr. Taber] stated that we had nothing to protect us from the veto of the President. I call the attention of the House to the fact that since the bill left us there has been no change whatever in the power of the Congress to stop one of these recommendations. Of course, it will be by concurrent resolution, a majority vote of each House of Congress.

Something has been said about the Wheeler amendment. Of course, that is water over the dam. I stated on a previous occasion that had the Wheeler amendment been included in this bill the authors of the measure would have promptly moved to table it. As far as I am concerned, I would not have been guilty of trying to perpetrate such a hoax both on the Congress, the President, and the American people as to stand here and vote for any measure along this line that contained the Wheeler amendment.

I regret, as the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Cochran] has said, that this has been made a partisan question in the House. It is the last thing that should have happened in connection with this bill.

There is another thing I wish to say that has been mentioned by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GIFFORD]. The gentleman calls attention to the first amendment which was put in by the Senator from Virginia [Mr. Byrd]. That means absolutely nothing whatever. It is a mere speech and has no effect whatever on the bill.

In closing, I wish to reiterate one thing that has been said on many occasions before. I have never contended, I have never in any way stated that this bill would effect such great economies as to balance the Budget. It is far from that. We have contended that there are obliged to be economies under this measure, and there will be, and we have contended that there will be far greater efficiency in the bureaus of the Government than now exist. That is the only claim that has been made for it. The standards on page 2 are what we are seeking to obtain.

It now goes on, in a few moments, I hope, to the President for his signature; and we are all prepared now, after this becomes law, to look under the beds at night and find certain ghosts and impossible things to be contained in these orders. We are simply conjuring up a mountain out of a molehill. I know we all have pet bureaus down here to which we feel attached on account of our contacts with them and services rendered to us at certain times; but, speaking for myself, a plan of reorganization sent here by the President must be absolutely extraordinary in nature and so contrary to everything that the House as a whole may have believed in, that would tempt me to vote against it; because, frankly, I think there is bureau after bureau that ought to be wiped out, that ought to be abolished, that ought to be consolidated, and some of them ought to be transferred. This gives the President that right.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WARREN. I yield. Mr. GIFFORD. I want to congratulate the gentleman from North Carolina from the bottom of my heart for this measure, which is so mild and so less dangerous, and to say to the gentleman that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN] recited the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia, and not myself. But I do want to leave this thought: The gentleman called the Wheeler amendment a hoax or something of that sort.

Mr. WARREN. That is correct.

Mr. GIFFORD. But the majority of another body voted

Mr. WARREN. But the majority of another body decided on the next day not to put it in this bill.

This bill, Mr. Speaker, has all the proper and necessary and reasonable safeguards. I believe, and I earnestly hope, the President will do a thoroughgoing job under it. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question. The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

LABOR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATION BILL, 1940

Mr. TARVER, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported the bill (H. R. 5427) making appropriations for the Labor Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, T.XXXIV-219 and for other purposes, which was read a first and second time, and, with the accompanying report, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. PLUMLEY reserved all points of order on the bill.

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 5427) making appropriations for the Labor Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, and for other purposes; and pending that motion I would like to ascertain whether it is possible to arrive at an agreement with the gentleman on the other side as to the limitation of time for general debate.

Mr. PLUMLEY. I think, Mr. Speaker, that we will make haste by permitting the debate to run along this afternoon.

Mr. TARVER. May I say to the gentleman that on this side I have only one request for time. Heretofore this bill has been included in the four-department appropriation bill, which has never taken over 2 days for general debate and passage, and it does seem that we ought to be able to pass this bill, which involves only $30,000,000, a comparatively small sum, in the course of 1 day. Would the gentleman be willing to limit debate to the bill? It certainly appears there is no reason why the time should be devoted to political or partisan discussions.

Mr. PLUMLEY. Under the circumstances, Mr. Speaker, I find myself unable to agree.

Mr. TARVER. I regret that I am unable to agree with the gentleman that debate should proceed throughout the afternoon. I hope the gentleman will find that he can accommodate all Members who have requested time before the afternoon has passed and that it may be possible to complete this appropriation bill, since I have only one request on this side.

Mr. Speaker, I therefore ask unanimous consent that general debate proceed without limitation for the present, to be equally divided, and to be controlled by the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. PLUMLEY] and myself.

Mr. PLUMLEY. That is all right for the present, Mr.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent that general debate on the bill proceed for the present to be equally divided and to be controlled by himself and the gentleman from Vermont. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

By unanimous consent, Mr. BARTON and Mr. REED of New York were given permission to extend their own remarks in the RECORD.

LABOR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATION BILL, 1940

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Georgia.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 5427) making appropriations for the Labor Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, and for other purposes, with Mr. WALTER in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

By unanimous consent, the first reading of the bill was dispensed with.

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 20 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, this bill, as doubtless you know, is the work of a new subcommittee which began to function for the first time during the present session of Congress, the subcommittee having jurisdiction of appropriations for the Department of Labor and for the Social Security Board. Prior to the creation of this subcommittee, however, the Subcommittee on Appropriations for the independent offices had completed consideration of estimates for the next fiscal year for the Social Security Board, and appropriations for that agency were included in the independent offices appropriation bill. They will be included in the bill reported by this subcommittee for the fiscal year 1941.

The membership of the House is doubtless apprised of the fact that the subcommittee had as one of its members when it was first created our beloved colleague from Pennsylvania, Mr. Daly, who has since died. It is sincerely deplored that on account of the state of his health during all of our deliberations it was not possible for him to take part in any of the meetings of the committee, but the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. RABAUT], who has heretofore assisted in the preparation of bills for this Department as a member of the subcommittee on the four department appropriation bills, was designated by the chairman of the full committee to sit in with us and help in the formulation of this bill. I wish at this time to express my very deep appreciation for the extraordinary spirit of cooperation which was demonstrated by every member of this subcommittee: The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. Houston], the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. RABAUT], the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. PLUMLEY], and the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. ENGEL]. I think this subcommittee has perhaps established a record which is unique in the history of appropriation bills in this Congress and I think you will agree with me when I say that the membership of the subcommittee is not in disagreement regarding one single item in this bill however important or however small and insignificant. I am glad to be able to say to you also that although differences of opinion existed among members of the subcommittee when the discussion of some items in the bill was begun, yet after talking out these matters around the table it was not necessary even to take a vote on any item contained in the bill. The subcommittee was able, after discussion, to reach a unanimous conclusion. It is unnecessary to add that the efficiency of our clerk, Mr. McFall, has contributed more than any other one factor to the success of the committee's work.

The amount contained in the bill is not extraordinary, in fact it is comparatively small when we take into consideration the huge appropriations which are made for other departments of the Government.

After deducting in this bill the amounts aggregating something in excess of $11,500,000 which go as grants to the States under the provisions of the Wagner-Peyser Act and for aid to maternal and child health, aid to crippled children, and for child welfare under the Social Security Act, there are left in the bill strictly for the administrative activities of the Department of Labor only about $19,000,000; and when you take into consideration the fact that this Department deals with the welfare of so large a percentage of the American people, the industrial workers, and is the only Department of Government which is engaged primarily in an effort to contribute to their welfare and their well-being and prosperity, it certainly appears that appropriations aggregating only $19,000,000 are minor in character; in fact, I think the committee feels—I know I feel—that if it could have been shown that we could have placed additional money in the bill for any item with the prospect of that money being useful to the American workingman the committee would probably have taken action to that end.

The bill carries an appropriation of $30,552,470, which represents an increase over the appropriation made for the Department for the current fiscal year of $2,730,920. I may say, however, that this increase is more than accounted for by reason of the appropriations which have been made necessary for the administrative expenses of the Wage-Hour Division in the Department of Labor and for the Children's Bureau in the enforcement of the provisions of the Fair Labor Standards Act, the administration of which was delegated by the act to these two agencies. Notwithstanding the creation of this new activity by legislative act and the necessity for appropriating funds therefor, the subcommittee has found it possible to bring about a reduction in the Budget estimate submitted for the Department of Labor of $377,810. This is perhaps a comparatively small reduction below the Budget estimate, but it is as far as our subcommittee felt that we were justified in going without the possibility of inflicting injury upon some activity of the Department, which, of course, it was not our purpose to do.

WAGE AND HOUR DIVISION

When you examine the appropriation for the Wage and Hour Division of the Department of Labor, which I shall undertake to discuss first because it is a new activity, and also because it represents a very substantial part of the appropriation carried in this bill, you may perhaps come to the conclusion that the committee has substantially reduced the Budget estimate for this Division. If, however, you will examine the committee report, you will find that no very drastic reduction has been made, but that there has been a transfer of certain funds which have been allocated in the Budget estimate from the Wage and Hour Division of the Department of Labor to the general fund for the Department for traveling expenses, contingent expenses, and expenses of printing and binding. The transfer that has thus been brought about by committee action is in pursuance of a policy adopted some years ago by a subcommittee of which the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. McMillan] is chairman, under which it was determined to transfer all items for traveling, contingent expenses, and printing and binding to the funds under general control of the Department so that allocations may be made upon the order of the Secretary to the various bureaus and divisions in accordance with their needs. I think I may say that the carrying out of that policy has resulted in considerable economy in the Department. The committee, therefore, did not feel that any reason existed for treating one bureau or division of the Department of Labor in a different manner, with regard to these items, from the treatment accorded other bureaus in the Department. It, therefore, made provision for transferring these three items from the estimates for the Wage and Hour Division to the general appropriations for these purposes under direction and control of the Secretary, as are other bureaus and divisions of that Department. As a matter of fact, the estimate for the Wage and Hour Division of the Department of Labor as approved by the Budget amounted to $3,350,000, and the total amount the committee allowed, including the items of transfer to which I have made reference, is $3,123,630. The subcommittee, therefore, brought about a reduction of approximately 5 percent in the amount of the Budget estimate and, in addition to that, provided for the transfer of two other funds, one of $50,000 and the other of approximately $17,000, to other bureaus or divisions of the Department for purposes which I shall hereinafter detail.

Our reason for providing a cut of approximately 5 percent in the amount of the estimate of the Bureau of the Budget was that we might be in accord with the policy adopted by the deficiency subcommittee and approved by the Congress in connection with the deficiency appropriation made for the Wage and Hour Division during the present Congress. You will recall that the Budget estimate in the deficiency bill for the Wage and Hour Division was $950,000, and that the deficiency subcommittee cut the item by $100,000, reducing the amount to $850,000, and that their action in so doing was approved by the Congress. This represented substantially a 10-percent reduction in the amount of their estimates. It was based on the opinion of the deficiency subcommittee that the activity of this creature of the Congress was expanding too rapidly, so far as acquisition of additional personnel was concerned, and that it would be better if the personnel of the organization should be more slowly developed. We have not made a cut in the same proportion as that made by the deficiency subcommittee. As I said, the reduction made by the deficiency committee was about 10 percent; but we have cut the amount of the estimate by approximately 5 percent in the belief it would be in accord with the policy approved by the Congress.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TARVER. I would prefer to conclude my statement before yielding. I will yield at present if the gentleman insists.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I want to know what is the difference between the appropriation of last year and this year? Is there much of a difference in the appropriation?

Mr. TARVER. For the Wage and Hour Division?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. The Wage and Hour Division and the Department of Labor.

Mr. TARVER. I have already given the figures with reference to the entire Department.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I thought the gentleman meant off-

Mr. TARVER. May I say to the gentleman the Wage and Hour Division only had $350,000 for its initial appropriation. Its activities, of course, did not begin until October 24, 1938. Fifty thousand dollars of the four hundred thousand dollars first appropriated for the Fair Labor Standards Act administration was transferred to the Children's Bureau for performance of its duty under the Fair Labor Standards Act. The Wage and Hour Division received an additional appropriation of $850,000 in the deficiency bill enacted during the present session of Congress, making a total of $1,200,000 which it has for the present fiscal year, whereas we are appropriating in this bill $3,123,630 for the next fiscal year, which would be an increase of almost 3 to 1 except for the fact, as I have pointed out, that its activities for the present fiscal year will cover only a period of 8 months. It does represent a very substantial increase, and the committee is satisfied that the Wage and Hour Division will not be hampered in its activities by reason of the small decrease which has been brought about.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Will the gentleman give me the appropriation for the enforcement of the law in the Department of Labor, whether it was reduced or increased, according to the Budget estimate?

Mr. TARVER. To what law does the gentleman have reference?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. The appropriation for the Department of Labor, aside from the Wage and Hour Division.

Mr. TARVER. I have stated that once. We have brought about a decrease below the Budget estimate of $377,810 for the ventire Department. We have at the same time appropriated $2,730,920 more than the Department will have for the present fiscal year.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TARVER. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. With reference to the Wage and Hour Division, the gentleman knows that many of us are aware that certain necessary amendment should be adopted with reference to the wage and hour law in order to clear up some of the things that have been brought out with reference to agriculture and many small businesses.

Mr. TARVER. I am heartily in accord with the gentleman's statement on that point.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Does the gentleman believe there might be a possibility of offering amendments to this section of the bill in order to clear up those points without having a point of order raised against them?

Mr. TARVER. May I say to the gentleman I do not believe that is a subject matter which ought to be handled in this bill? I believe I am as much interested as any Member of this House in having amendments adopted to the wage and hour law which would bring about the correction of some of the injustices which have resulted and at the same time preserve whatever benefits may have come about by reason of its enactment. At the same time, I believe it is a matter that ought to be handled by the appropriate legislative committee, and in the usual way, and not by attempted action on an appropriation bill.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I agree with the gentleman, but I just wanted to get his opinion, because sometimes it is difficult to get action out of a particular legislative committee.

Mr. TARVER. I understand that; but, at the same time, I do not believe the handiwork of the Committee on Appropriations should be made the vehicle for the enactment of legislation. We have tried studiously to refrain from placing in the bill any language which might be construed to be of a legislative character.

CONCILIATION SERVICE

Now, if I may pass along, the committee has been very greatly impressed and feels that the American people, employers as well as employees, have been very greatly impressed with the extremely satisfactory character of the work which is being performed by the Conciliation Service in the Department of Labor. The committee has received expressions of approval of this Service from both employers and employees. It may interest you to read the hearings as it relates to the work of the Conciliation Service. You will find its work succeeded in averting 339 threatened strikes during the fiscal year 1938. However, this is only a part of its work. Its activities in trying to bring about peace in labor difficulties extend also to what are designated as disputes which have not reached the stage of threatened strikes, and, of course, to trying to bring about the settlement of strikes which have already arisen. You will find in the hearings an estimate, and I believe it is a very reasonable estimate, that as a result of the activities of this Service in preventing 339 threatened strikes during the fiscal year 1938 there was a saving to the men who would have gone out on those strikes if they had occurred, estimating that each man would have lost 20 working days because of the strike, which is considered a reasonable estimate, of approximately $10,000,000.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 10 additional minutes.

The committee felt that this Service ought to be provided with sufficient funds to carry on its functions properly, and as a result of hearings we added a comparatively small amount above the Budget, $25,000, for the purpose of bringing about the necessary employment of some additional conciliation commissioners.

DIVISION OF PUBLIC CONTRACTS

The Division of Public Contracts, which has to do with the enforcement of the Walsh-Healey Act, is far behind in its work. It has had to undertake, since its inception, the examination of Government contracts aggregating in amount $735,000,000 and in number over 12,000. It has not been able to examine more than approximately 4,000 of these contracts. We felt that necessary personnel ought to be provided to enable this division to proceed with a greater degree of speed in transacting the work which lies before it. We have, therefore, granted an increase to this particular service of $22,120, which, while it may not be sufficient to enable it to get its work in current form, will at least be helpful in bringing to an earlier conclusion the large volume of investigatory work which is unfinished.

In that connection I wish to point out that the committee has felt there ought to be an investigation to determine just what benefits have been derived by the American laborer and what injuries may have been sustained by the Government, if any, by reason of the enactment and enforcement of the Walsh-Healey Act; in other words, we have felt that the American people ought to be fully advised regarding the controversies which from time to time have arisen with regard to whether the act has in fact been beneficial to the man engaged in working in industry; and if so, whether or not it has added so greatly to the expenses of the Government as to counteract or nullify, to some extent, at least, the benefits which may have been derived by the worker in industry from its operation. We felt that the Bureau of Labor Statistics is the proper facility of the Government to conduct that investigation.

I wish to point out also that the estimates for the Wage and Hour Division contained an estimate of $50,000 which the Wage and Hour Division was going to use in preparing and sending out questionnaires to determine the effects of the Fair Labor Standards Act. However, our committee was of the opinion that the proper agency of the Government to conduct that sort of investigation is the Bureau of Labor Statistics, which has been established by Congress for such character of inquiry. We were further of the opinion that an agency ought not to investigate itself and the result of its own work. We also found that if the Bureau of Labor Statistics should conduct both of these investigations it would be able to do so at a substantial reduction in cost below what the investigations would cost if one were conducted by the Wage and Hour Division and the other by the Bureau of Labor Statistics, so we transferred $50,000 which the Wage and Hour Division had for this investigatory work to the Bureau of Labor Statistics and added $15,000 above the Budget to the appropriation for that Bureau in order to enable it to conduct both of these investigations.

BUREAU OF LABOR STATISTICS

We gave to the Bureau of Labor Statistics approximately $200,000 more than was appropriated for the present fiscal year for the activities of that Bureau. I wish to call your particular attention to the fact that $71,000 of this increase is intended to provide for an occupational outlook study. You are familiar with the fact, of course, that young men and women who are arriving at manhood and womanhood today are finding it exceedingly difficult to determine just what opportunities may lie in different occupations or in different employments they may be able to secure. Furthermore, young people who are going off to college oftentimes find it difficult to decide just what line of study they ought to undertake in order to be sure they are fitting themselves for occupations where reasonable assurance of employment will exist.

The purpose of this study, in the main, is to furnish information in cases of that sort, to study the occupational trends, the possibility of expansion of employment in certain industries and of contraction of employment in others. It is felt by Dr. Lubin, whom I regard as one of the ablest men connected with the Department or with the Government itself, that he will be able to develop, by the use of this appropriation, information which will be exceedingly useful along this line.

CHILDREN'S BUREAU

The Children's Bureau, for its work under the social-security program as distinguished from its activities under the Fair Labor Standards Act, has had its appropriation increased under this bill by $14,000, this increase being made necessary for the administration of work incident to grants for maternal and child health, crippled children, and child welfare.

There has been made a decrease of $100,000 in the appropriation approved by the Bureau of the Budget for the Children's Bureau for its activities in connection with the enforcement of the Fair Labor Standards Act. I want to explain to you the reasons which actuated the committee in providing for this decrease. The Children's Bureau had for the present fiscal year $129,000 for carrying on this activity. Of course, it was only operating under the Fair Labor Standards Act for approximately 8 months of the present fiscal year. We took that into consideration and then we approximately doubled for the next fiscal year the money which it had had available for a comparative period of the present fiscal year, thus giving it an appropriation of $400,000, or $100,000 below the Budget. If you will examine the hearings, you will find that the officials of the Children's Bureau testified before our subcommittee that they have received only 30 complaints as to violations of the Fair Labor Standards Act in the matter of child labor, involving 11 employers, and, certainly, it seemed to the committee in view of the fact that these are new duties devolving on the Bureau under a recently enacted law, and in view of the fact that the number of violations of the law do not appear to be considerable, that we ought not to provide here for setting up any larger organization to begin with than appears to be absolutely necessary. We can expand it later if we find that expansion is desirable, but if we start out on too large a scale, then we will find it, indeed, a matter of very great difficulty to contract the organization which we may authorize.

WOMEN'S BUREAU

We have provided for an increase of $8,000 for the work of the Women's Bureau, in order to enable it to take care of new and additional activities in connection with cooperating with and furnishing information to the States in the enactment of legislation for the protection of women in industry.

UNITED STATES EMPLOYMENT SERVICE

The Employment Service item, which represents an increase over last year of $360,000, but at the same time a decrease below the Budget of $93,000, will be discussed by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. Houstow]. I may say here that I have not undertaken to cover in detail the appropriations for the Wage and Hour Division. That is a subject matter which has received the careful study of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. RABAUT].

The appropriations which have been made to carry out the provisions of the Wagner-Peyser Act with regard to grants to the States by the Employment Service and of the Social Security Act with regard to grants to the States for maternal and child health, crippled children, and child welfare are in the amounts provided by law and with regard to which the subcommittee did not feel it had any discretion. As I have previously stated, however, these items account for $11,630,000 of the pending bill.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 5 additional minutes.

DIVISION OF LABOR STANDARDS

The estimates for the Bureau of Labor Standards have been diminished by only $2,600, and this was felt justified by reason of the fact that this Bureau had lapses in 1938 aggregating approximately $21,000 and estimated lapses for the next fiscal year of only $6,600. We felt it might reasonably expect greater lapses in the amounts estimated and the slight reduction which has been made would not affect its activities in any material way.

IMMIGRATION AND NATURALIZATION SERVICE

In the Immigration and Naturalization Service we have added $153,900 to the appropriation for the present fiscal year, which still leaves the amount a little more than $7,000 below the Budget. The increase provides for five additional immigration inspectors, seven additional naturalization examiners, and six additional border patrol officers. It also provides for the custodial staff of the new immigration station at San Pedro, Calif., and for the acceleration of the program for deportation of aliens either subject to removal by law or who desire themselves to be repatriated.

ADMINISTRATIVE PROMOTIONS

I wish to point out also that in the bill the committee has taken the Budget estimate of approximately $37,000 for administrative promotions and have distributed it throughout the various Bureaus so as to bring about a one-step promotion of all employees paid less than $1,800 per year who have been in the service of the Labor Department 3 years or more without promotion, and to bring about the same result as to employees drawing salaries between $1,800 and $3,000 per year who have been without a promotion for 5 years or more.

I have taken more of the time of the Committee than I was justified in doing, although I regret I have not been able to fully discuss all the items of the bill. However, in view of the fact that some of my colleagues on the committee are going to talk to you, I am sure you will be fully advised regarding its provisions by the time their observations shall have been concluded. [Applause.]

Mr. PLUMLEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. ENGEL].

Mr. ENGEL. Mr. Chairman, by the end of the present session Congress will have appropriated for the 7 fiscal years from June 30, 1933, to June 30, 1940, the enormous sum of $65,346,482,906. It will have increased the gross national debt from $20,934,729,209, where it stood on February $1,933, to an all-time high of $44,457,845,210 by June 30, 1940, or nearly $20,000,000,000 more than the wartime peak. The wartime peak was $25,482,034,419.

Col. F. C. Harrington, the W. P. A. Director, in testifying before the Appropriations Committee recently, placed into the record a table showing the number of persons and households receiving various kinds of relief, month by month from January 1933 to November 1938. This table shows that in February 1933 there were 4,976,000 households and 19,565,000 persons receiving various kinds of relief. His latest record shows that in February 1939 there were 7,278,000 households and 22,781,000 persons receiving various kinds of relief—an increase of 2,302,000 households and 3,216,000 individuals over 1933.

The American Federation of Labor unemployment figures show that in 1933 the average number of employed persons was 36,959,000, while the average number of unemployed for the same year was 13,723,000. The same figures for 1938 show that the average number of gainful workers was 52,-879,211, of which 41,942,945 were employed and 10,936,265 were unemployed. The March American Federationist preliminary figures show that in January 1939 there were 53,-191,932 gainful workers, of whom 41,668,901 were employed, and 11,523,031 were unemployed. Volume 4 of the Census of Unemployment, table No. 6, shows that in November 1937 there were 54,474,000 persons, 15 years old and over, seeking gainful occupation. Department economists say that this figure increases at the rate of about 400,000 a year and that in November 1938 there were 54,874,000 persons, 15 years old and over, seeking gainful occupations. If we accept these figures, there was an average of 12,931,000 unemployed for the year and 13,185,000 unemployed for the month of Jannary 1939

I have no desire to enter upon a political discussion at this time. However, the above figures ought to convince any fair-minded person that the course we have taken during the past 6 years has made no material reduction in either the number of unemployed or the number on relief. I want to discuss the problem affecting the number of unemployed; where they will probably have to find employment in the future; the industrial production and the income produced required to put these unemployed back at work and take these individuals off relief rolls.

In the course of my studies I have compiled two tables. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to include in my remarks table No. I on occupational distribution, compiled by myself.

Source: Figures on the total number of persons seeking employment for 1938 were then from the Department of Commerce figures based upon the unemployment

Table I shows the occupational distribution of the gainful workers of the United States, according to the Department of Commerce census figures as of April 1930, and which actually reflect the 1929 condition. The last column shows the occupational distribution which would have existed in 1938 if the 54,874,000 gainful workers had been able to find employment, using the same ratio of employment as actually existed in 1930.

It shows that out of every 1,000 persons employed in April 1930, during that peak employment and production period, 214 were employed in agricuture and animal husbandry, 5 in forestry and fishing, 20 in extraction of minerals, 289 in the manufacturing and mechanical industry, 79 in transportation and communication, 125 in trade or merchandising, 18 in miscellaneous classifications, 67 in professional service, 101 in domestic and personal service, and 82 in clerical occupations. While 289 persons were engaged in the manufacturing and mechanical industry, this included the building industry, and only 180 were actually employed in purely manufacturing.

The Labor Department records show that in 1929 there was an average of 8,767,000 persons engaged in purely manufacturing, while in 1938 there were 6,666,000 persons engaged in manufacturing; so if we went back to the 1929 basis we would only be furnishing employment in manufacturing to 2,101,000 persons. I mention this because we keep looking to the manufacturing interests to put the entire 11,000,000 unemployed back at work when, as a matter of fact, we I never had more than 9,000,000 on the factory pay rolls. However, manufacturing and agriculture are the two hubs of the wheel that make the industrial cart go, and they are interdependent each upon the other. A one-wheeled cart will not go. Approximately 400 persons out of every thousand who can be employed in agriculture and manufacturing will incidentally furnish employment to 600 men who are engaged in other occupations such as merchandising, transportation, communication, and so forth.

I want to discuss today the manufacturing hub of this so-called wheel. I believe if we can put industry in a prosperous state, barring competitive imports, agricultural prosperity will follow. If for every 180 men we employ in purely manufacturing we can put 820 men at work in agriculture and supplementary work, then if we could put 1,800,000 people back on the factory pay roll, we would be able to put back to work a total of 10,000,000 persons, 6,200,000 of whom, according to the census figures, would be employed in supplementary occupations in transporting the goods to and from the factory, in mining the minerals, and so forth, and 2,000,000 more in agriculture.

Of course, this 1938 occupational production distribution based upon the 1930 averages would vary somewhat. The number of men employed in mining has probably decreased, while the number engaged in electric power, gas, and oil fields has increased. Transportation has probably increased despite a reduction in railroad employment because of the development of the automobile in transportation. However, there are no new figures on this phase of the question that I could find. This bill carries money which will enable Dr. Lubin, of the Department of Labor to make a study along the line. which ought to prove extremely interesting and helpful.

The next question I want to discuss is the question of the amount of industrial production and income produced required to put these unemployed back at work.

INDUSTRIAL PRODUCTION

We hear people continuously refer to the Federal Reserve Board's industrial production figures of 1923-25. We are too prone to use that 1923-25 average of 100 percent as an objective rather than as a point of beginning. We forget that the 1923-25 industrial production furnished employment to the number of gainful workers in 1923-25 and that it could not have furnished employment to the increased number of gainful workers in 1938. However, I have used the Federal Reserve Board figures as a base from which to work.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to place into the RECORD table No. II.

¹ Preliminary.

^{1.} The average number of gainful workers employed and unemployed was taken from the American Federation of Labor figures. 2. The average industrial production percentage was taken from the Federal Reserve Board's figures based upon the 1923-25 average. 3. Income produced figures are taken from the Department of Commerce reports. 4. Reports show that it required $1,800 income produced to to keep 1 person employed. Column 8 shows the amount of income produced to twill be required to keep the total number of gainful workers occupied on this basis. 5. Department of Commerce figures show that there were 54,874,000 gainful workers in 1938. If we take these figures instead of the American Federation of Labor figures, it would require 137.2 percent of the 1923-25 average of industrial production and an income of $98,773,000,000 to keep the total number of gainful workers employed.

This table shows the following information, year by year, from 1929 to 1938:

(1) The average number of gainful workers.

(2) The average number of employed.

(3) The average number of unemployed.

(4) The average percentages of industrial production based on the Federal Reserve Board's 1923–25 average as 100 percent.

(5) The average number of employed for each percent of industrial production.

(6) The income produced.

(7) The income produced required to put the total number of gainful workers back to work.

It will be noted that the lower the industrial production, the more men were employed for each point or percent; the higher the industrial production, the smaller number of men employed for each percent. Thus we find that in 1932 when the industrial production dropped to 64 percent of the 1923-25 average, we had 576,000 men employed for each percent of industrial production. In 1935 we had an industrial production of 90 percent of the 1923-25 average with 450,000 persons employed for each percent. It will also be noted that the number of persons employed for each percent of industrial production did not vary much after we had reached 105 percent of the 1923-25 average. As soon as it dropped below that point, the number of employed men was increased. For instance, in 1936 the average industrial production was 105 percent of the 1923-25 average, and the average number of persons employed for each percent was 400,374. In 1937 the percent was 110 and the average number of employed for each percent was 400,220. In 1929 we had 119 percent of the 1923-25 average with the average number of men employed for each percent being 394,890. On the other hand, in 1938 when industrial production dropped to 86 percent of the 1923-25 average, the number of persons employed for each percent was 486,000. This is undoubtedly due to the fact that the administrative and supervising force such as bookkeepers, foremen, and so forth, were not being reduced proportionately with the average number of workers as production fell off.

It is fair to assume from the chart that once we reach a point in industrial production which equals 105 percent of the 1923–25 average, we will add approximately 400,000 persons to the pay rolls for every point that we can increase that production over and above that percent. On this basis, it will require 137.2 percent of the 1923–25 average to keep these 54,874,000 at work, who according to the Department of Commerce records are employed or seeking employment. Records further show that we are adding 400,000 persons a year to the total number seeking employment or gainfully occupied. If this is true, then we would have to increase industrial production one point each year over the preceding year to keep this ever-increasing number of persons employed.

INCOME PRODUCED

In 1929 the national income produced was $81,000,000,000, while the average industrial production was about 123 percent of the 1923-25 average. We were able to furnish jobs to 46,192,000 people, leaving 1,864,000 people unemployed, if we take the American Federation of Labor figures as to the number of gainful workers, and 2,637,920 unemployed if we take the Department of Commerce figures as to the number of gainful workers.

The President in his message of January 3 said: "This country need not always be a $60,000,000,000 country. We are going to make it an $80,000,000,000 country." An $81,-000,000,000 income produced with an industrial production average of 123 percent, which we had in 1929 during our most prosperous year, furnished jobs to 46,192,000. That same amount of industrial production and the same income produced would have left us in 1938 with 6,687,211 persons unemployed if we take the American Federation of Labor figures on the number of gainful workers that year, or with 8,682,000 persons unemployed if we take the Department of Commerce figures.

On a 1929 basis, we find that it requires approximately an $1,800 income produced a year to furnish employment to one person a year. If this is true, then it would require an income produced of $98,773,200,000 per year to keep these 54,874,000 persons employed. If we add 400,000 persons a year to the number who are gainfully occupied or who are seeking gainful occupation, we would have to add $720,000,000 income produced each year to keep these ever-increasing unemployed at work. It is obvious that the difference between the 1938 income produced of $60,000,000,000 and the required income produced of ninety-eight to one hundred billion dollars a year necessary to put these unemployed at work cannot be bridged by any public spending program. If bridged, it must be bridged by private employment brought about primarily through industrial production.

SUMMARIZING

In summarizing, we are forced to the following conclusions:

(1) That 6 years of spending has not brought about permanent recovery.

(2) That there are still from eleven to thirteen millions of unemployed and some twenty-two to twenty-three million persons receiving Government relief today.

(3) That an $80,000,000,000 income produced would leave us with from 6,500,000 to 8,700,000 persons unemployed, with from fourteen to sixteen million persons receiving various kinds of Government aid.

(4) That it will require an income produced of from ninety-five to one hundred billions of dollars a year to put all the unemployed back to work.

(5) That the Federal Reserve Board's 1923–25 average industrial production will only provide employment on a 1928–25 basis and can only be used as a base from which to beging

(6) That it will require approximately 137 percent to 140 percent of the 1923-25 average production to put all the unemployed back to work.

(7) That industrial production will have to increase progressively 1 percent and income produced $720,000,000 each year to take care of the 400,000 additional gainful workers added to the total each year.

(8) That if we assumed that we always have 2,000,000 unemployed because of shifting employment, we can reduce the industrial production one point for each 400,000 workers, or 5 percent, and the income produced approximately by $3,600,-000,000, or $1,800 for each worker.

(9) That our objective should be an income produced of $100,000,000,000 instead of $80,000,000,000, and an industrial production of at least 135 percent of the 1923-25 average.

(10) That for every 18 men we can put at work in the factory, we can expect 82 men to be employed in other auxiliary private employment lines and in agriculture.

(11) That the difference between a $60,000,000,000 income produced and a ninety-eight to one hundred billion-dollar income produced required to put the unemployed at work cannot be bridged by any public spending program; that such public spending program must be ultimately paid for by the taxpayer and is a burden on and retards industrial production.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. ENGEL. Yes.

Mr. TABER. What about the manufacturing and mechanical industry item that appears there?

Mr. ENGEL. That takes in the building and construction industry. The manufacturing item is included in the manufacturing and mechanical industry item.

Mr. HOLMES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ENGEL. Yes.

Mr. HOLMES. I notice in 1930, in the beginning of the manufacturing item, you had employed about 8,740,000 people.

Mr. ENGEL. Yes.

Mr. HOLMES. And in the break-down the ratio in 1938 ought to be 9,822,000.

Mr. ENGEL. Yes.

Mr. HOLMES. How in the world can we expect that manufacturing can assume the 14,000,000 unemployed today?

Mr. ENGEL. That is what I am pointing out. Manufacturing cannot assume that. For every 18 men that we put back on the factory's pay roll, assuming that agriculture can go along, we put back at work 82 men in agriculture and auxiliary employments.

Mr. HOLMES. And industry is being blamed for all this unemployment.

Mr. ENGEL. Yes; that is the reason I am bringing these figures to your attention.

Mr. GEYER of California. Does not the gentleman think that taking in the fact of technological changes that perhaps the manufacturing and agriculture have been hit the worst, and does not that almost destroy the value of the carry-over in 1938?

Mr. ENGEL. No. I do not entirely agree with the gentleman. I am not one of those who believes that the technological or machine age is responsible for all unemployment. The machine age has brought into being millions of automobiles, radios, and so forth, all of which have furnished employment in spite of mass production.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. PLUMLEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 additional minutes to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ENGEL. I yield.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. On the basis of a 1929 income of $81,000,000,000 during that year there were 1,864,000 people unemployed; yet now on the same income, $81,000.000,000, the gentleman shows between eight and nine million people unemployed. Is this occasioned by population increase between these dates?

Mr. ENGEL. It is caused by two things: Increase in the population and increase in the number of people seeking gainful occupation. In 1929, 48,829,920 persons were looking for jobs whereas in 1939 according to statistics of the Department of Commerce 54,874,000 people were looking for jobs.

Another thing to be borne in mind is that while the population increase was 5.7 percent from 1930 to 1938, the total number of people seeking gainful occupation increased more than 8 percent. These tables will appear in the Record.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. I presume the reason for the larger number seeking employment in 1939 over 1929 is due to the population increase.

Mr. ENGEL. Only partly. As I said, the population increase was 5.7 percent. The increase in the number of people seeking gainful occupation was not 5.7 percent but was 8 percent. One reason accounting for this, I think, is that we have in the labor market today people 60 and 65 years of age looking for work who back in 1929 had some savings and some independent income or means to support themselves. In the bank crash that followed their savings and accumulations were wiped out and they are back in the labor market. Another factor bearing on this increase of people seeking employment is the fact that people have reached the age of 65 and have not been able to save sufficient money to make themselves independent and take themselves off the labor market.

Mr. RABAUT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. ENGEL. I yield.

Mr. RABAUT. Is it not the gentleman's opinion that because of the instability of a great number of labor positions much of this increase has come about? For instance, the gentleman mentioned the case of the father of a family who was not certain of his position, for which reason his wife tries to obtain a position and some of the children of the family try to obtain positions. This greatly increases the number. Another factor is that we have more women applying for employment than ever before. Has the gentleman considered that?

Mr. ENGEL. That is the statement I made a moment ago. The question is aggravated by those conditions. The father is out of work; the son, the daughter, and perhaps the mother is looking for a job—placing four on the unemployed list instead of one.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ENGEL. I yield.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. The gentleman has made a very interesting and exhaustive study of this subject. Has he been able to figure out the number of people who have been displaced from gainful employment as the result of the installation of machinery and the speed-up system?

Mr. ENGEL. Not a thorough study. That is a rather difficult field of investigation. There is no question in my mind but that the solution of the problem lies in various things. I do not, however, stress this factor as much as some people do. It certainly is responsible for part of the existing conditions and must be taken into consideration.

Mr. ALLEN of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ENGEL. I yield.

Mr. ALLEN of Pennsylvania. According to the most accurate figures I have been able to find, mechanical productivity has increased about 25 percent since 1930 in a shrinking economy since 1929. I believe this seriously aggravates the situation the gentleman has described. The gentleman has made such a fine study of this particular field that I would like to see him take up this one, too.

Mr. ENGEL. Yes; consumption has been shrinking while production has been increasing. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. PLUMLEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Hoffman].

THE NATIONAL LABOR RELATIONS ACT IS A FRAUD UPON THE EMPLOYEE

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Chairman, an editorial in this morning's Washington Post makes the same error that was made a week ago by the writer of the editorial in Collier's Weekly. The writer of the Post article evidently believes that delay in calling hearings on the proposed amendment of the Wagner law has been a good thing in that it has given the A. F. of L. and the C. I. O. an opportunity to get together.

Naturally, everyone would like to see peace between these two labor organizations. Striving, as they are, for the principle of collective bargaining, there would appear to be no reason why they should not compose their differences by mediation and, if necessary, arbitration.

Unfortunately, many of us who are realists can see no reason why, because two great labor organizations are at odds, employers and employees and the general public should continue to suffer from the unjust provisions and the biased interpretation of the Wagner Act.

After all, giving credence to these organizations' most extravagant claims, the A. F. of L. and the C. I. O. represent no more than 8,000,000 workers, while there are 30,000,000 employees who are unrepresented and who do not belong to either organization. After all, the public has a greater stake in the issue than either or both of these organizations. Hence the widespread demand heard on every hand, and evidenced by the Gallup poll, which shows an overwhelming preponderance of public opinion to favor the amendment of this law.

The act was passed to lessen the causes of industrial disputes affecting commerce, on the assumption that by giving the employee the right to bargain collectively with industry through representatives of his own choosing its purpose would be accomplished.

Unfortunately, the act, as interpreted and administered, does not give workers the right to bargain collectively through representatives of their own choosing. This proposition cannot be successfully disputed.

It is my purpose to prove by the record not only that workers are deprived of the right to bargain collectively through representatives of their own choosing but that the law has been used to advance the cause of some unions by injuring and destroying others.

An examination of the record will show that in practice, instead of the employee receiving the benefits of a Magna Carta, which this law was hailed as being, the National Labor Relations Board has established a dictatorship over labor and wields the power of life or death among the organizations of labor.

Disregarding for the moment the questions of taxation, reduction in expenditures, and cessation of attacks on business, there is one way in which the President and his advisers can forthwith show by their acts, rather than by their words, that they are in favor of industrial peace. There is one way that we here in Congress can show that we are responsive to that ever-increasing protest which rolls up to us from the people against the activities of a Federal agency, the application of a Federal law, which is retarding reemployment, which is creating industrial strife within the ranks of labor itself, which has deprived workingmen of their rights under the Federal Constitution—that is by the amendment of the National Labor Relations Act.

However, to amend the act is not sufficient, for the reason that an amendment would not remove from their places of power those who have maladministered it. If we repeal the act, all those who now hold and exercise authority under it will be severed from their power, and if we then reenact those provisions which have proven their merit, and add provisions which will protect the employer and the employee from the arbitrary acts of another board and its employees, from unjust practices on the part of employer, from exploitation on the part of labor organizers, the purpose of the original act will have been served.

Republicans have been accused of failing to offer constructive suggestions to meet and overcome some of the acknowledged wrongs perpetrated by the present administration. This charge in the main has not been justified. It certainly has not been justified when we have criticized the Wagner Act, for many amendments have been offered. All have been disregarded.

In offering H. R. 4990 it was my purpose to introduce a bill which, if it became law, would not only protect the employee from the employer, but would protect him from professional organizers, who no more have his true interest at heart, who would exploit him as quickly as would the most greedy, selfish sweatshop employer.

It was my purpose to secure, not only to the man who furnishes the jobs and meets the pay roll, but to the man who performs the work, the protection to which every American citizen is entitled—all of the rights guaranteed under the Federal Constitution.

It was the announced purpose of the National Labor Relations Act to "diminish the causes of labor disputes burdening or obstructing interstate and foreign commerce."

Those who framed the act and sponsored it unfortunately overlooked several necessary factors which must be taken into consideration if we are to have industrial peace. Whatever organized labor may have had in mind, the act was not so drawn as to promote either the right of self-organization among employees or the right of employees to bargain collectively through representatives of their own choosing.

The terms of the act give reason for the belief that labor was seeking to establish one great, powerful, Nation-wide organization, which could and would act through the Board which was created by the act.

At the time the act was in course of preparation there was but one great labor union. That was the A. F. of L. In a circular letter sent out within the last few days the president of that organization made this statement:

The American Federation of Labor is the friend of the National Labor Relations Act. We sponsored it in the beginning. We helped draft it. We contributed largely toward its enactment into law. It was really an American Federation of Labor measure, a primary part of our legislative program.

At that time the A. F. of L. did not anticipate that the Board created by the act and given arbitrary and absolute authority over workers would one day be used to the prejudice of the A. F. of L. and those employees who were its members. It did not know, it could not know, that the day would come when this Board, through the power given it, would be able to make or to break the A. F. of L. unless restrained by the courts.

Many times on the floor of this House and elsewhere have I charged that, by its acts, the N. L. R. B. was unfair, biased, and in effect, an ally in the C. I. O. organizing campaigns. My statements were at times ridiculed and some cited my criticism of the C. I. O., my criticism of the N. L. R. B., as evidence that I was not a friend of labor.

Let me call your attention to the fact that, when I assailed the C. I. O. as having within its membership Communists who were directing its policies and carrying out the methods of the Communists; when I condemned the sit-down strikes; when I charged that the C. I. O. and the Labor Board were engaged in an effort to destroy the A. F. of L., Members of this body who boasted, and rightfully so, of the fact that they hold membership cards in the A. F. of L., remained silent, and outside of this body, because I spoke of the injustices of this law, of the partisanship and the bias and the unfair conduct of the N. L. R. B., I was charged with being opposed to labor.

Let me tell you that the true friend of labor is the man who favors that legislation which is in the interest of the worker, rather than the legislation which will destroy jobs and enable labor organizers to levy and collect tribute.

But enough of that. No longer can we argue about the purpose or the effect of the decisions of this Board.

Let me again quote from this letter of the President of the American Federation of Labor. He said that the Board:

Through decisions clearly in favor of the C. I. O. and against the American Federation of Labor, is working out the destruction of the American Federation of Labor. We do not ask the Board to favor the American Federation of Labor in any decisions rendered. All we have asked is that it be fair and just in its administration of the act and that it apply the act in a judicious way.

Continuing, he wrote:

Naturally, the C. I. O. is violently opposed to any change. Its opposition is based upon the fact that it has been favored while the Board has struck blow after blow at the American Federation of Labor.

He then called attention to the fact that his letter is in furtherance of the action of the A. F. of L. at its Houston convention and wrote:

Let the Members of Congress know you are standing with the American Federation of Labor; that you are supporting your officers who are endeavoring to carry out orders and instructions.

Section 7 of the act expressly provides that employees shall have certain rights. Section 8 defines unfair labor practices. To make it possible for employees to exercise the rights guaranteed to them by section 7, section 9 provides for the choosing of representatives of the employees to bargain with the employer.

By section 10 the Board is given authority to prevent employers from engaging in the unfair labor practices which are defined in section 8.

Those who drew the act evidently assumed that, by creating a Board and giving it absolute authority, as set forth in section 9, to act for employees, the Board would at all times act in favor of employees, or, perhaps more accurately speaking, in favor of the organization which sponsored it. They were mistaken in this belief.

By section 9, which provides for representatives and elections, the Board was given the absolute right to determine for itself the unit, or, more correctly speaking, the "election precinct" or "district," either employer, craft, plant, or subdivision thereof, in which the vote should be taken for the election of representatives who were charged with the duty of bargaining collectively with the employer.

EMPLOYERS GIVEN DAY IN COURT BUT ONLY IN COMPLAINT CASES

Those who framed the act realized, when they gave authority to the Board to prevent unfair labor practices, that they must, if the law was to be held constitutional, provide for a judicial review of final orders of the Board requiring action by employers. This they did in complaint cases in section 10, subdivisions (e) and (f).

In complaint cases where employers have been charged with unfair labor practices and where the Board has made a final order which has not been withdrawn by it, where a transcript has been filed in the appellate court, the employer has his day in court when the Board seeks an order of court enforcing its final order; or where the employer appeals to the court for the modification or vacation of that order and the Board is not permitted to withdraw it.

But in those cases which are known as representation cases, where the Board does not make what the courts have been pleased to define as a "final order", as, for example, where the Board has determined the unit in which the election shall be held, has certified one group of representatives for collective bargaining, has denied a certificate to another group for the same purpose, in all of those cases where there is a conflict of jurisdiction between the unions, the employer, under the Wagner Act, can never successfully invoke the aid of the courts.

Because two unions representing two different groups of employees have for months been waging a jurisdictional fight, General Motors, although it agreed to the principle of collective bargaining in February of 1937, has now refused to bargain collectively with either group for the very evident reason that it has no way of determining which is the proper group of representatives for collective bargaining.

After the long sit-down strikes which cost millions of dollars, the Board has not yet determined the representatives to speak for labor in collective-bargaining negotiaions. This failure of the Board of itself is sufficient to justify its abolition and the appointment of a new board.

Even when the Board certifies bargaining agents, the employer is still at the mercy of those who would interfere with interstate commerce.

Let me cite you to another case decided day before yesterday, March 27, in the circuit court of appeals here in the District of Columbia. It is entitled "Fur Workers' Union, Local No. 72, et al., against Fur Workers' Union, No. 21238, affiliated with the American Federation of Labor, and H. Zirkin & Sons, Inc., a corporation."

In this plant there were 11 fur workers:

On several occasions prior to August 15, 1937, the appellant (C. I. O. union) had requested Zirkin's to acknowledge it as the sole representative of the fur workers for the purpose of collective bargaining, and to require the fur workers to join it and to negotiate a contract with it upon the subject of wages, hours, and conditions of employment. During this period prior to August 15, 1937, the appellant (C. I. O.) also tried, but without success except in respect to one of the employees—to wit, the appellant Schwartz—to persuade the fur workers at Zirkin's to join it.

Finally Schwartz did join, and thereafter Zirkin recognized the C. I. O. organization as the sole representative for Schwartz for collective bargaining, but refused to recognize it as the representative of the other fur workers, and also refused to encourage or require their membership in it.

It should be noted that, had Zirkin's required the other fur workers to join Schwartz's organization, it would have been guilty of an unfair labor practice.

On August 15, 1937, Schwartz went on strike and, with other C. I. O. members who were not employed at Zirkin's, picketed the plant. On the 27th another employee, Haley, joined the C. I. O.

On September 21, 1937, upon the application of 7 of the 9 fur workers, they received a certificate of affiliation from the A. F. of L., and shortly thereafter the 2 remaining workers joined the A. F. of L. unit. This unit, which numbered 9 of the 11 workers and which was an A. F. of L. affiliate, was then recognized by Zirkin's as the bargaining agent for its members, and a written agreement was entered into upon the subject of wages, hours, and conditions of employment, and the union was then recognized as the exclusive representative for collective bargaining of all the fur workers then in Zirkin's actual employment.

Among other things, the court said:

The picketing was in mass formation • • •. The purpose of the picketing was to coerce Zirkin's and its fur-worker employees to violate the agreement entered into with the appellee union and to cause Zirkin's to rescind its recognition of that union. The persons picketing Zirkin's place of business were disorderly in their conduct, made assaults and attempted assaults upon the fur-worker employees at Zirkin's, intimidated and coerced them by threats of bodily harm, and interfered with customers of Zirkin's while they were entering or leaving the business establishment.

The court held that a labor dispute was involved and that, therefore, in view of the provisions of the Norris-LaGuardia Act, it was without jurisdiction to issue an injunction preventing the mass picketing, the violence, the intimidation, and the coercion.

There is no question but that, after the formation of the A. F. of L. union, it was the duty of Zirkin's, under the Wagner Act, to bargain collectively with the A. F. of L. union for its members. It would have been guilty under the act of an unfair labor practice had it refused so to do. Nevertheless, the court held that having complied with this law it could not protect Zirkin's from mass picketing, from violence, from a course of conduct that was injuring, and which might destroy, its business.

The court made these further statements:

The appellee Zirkin's separately urges upon the court the hardship to an employer who, indifferent to the choice of a collective bargaining agency by his employees, is caught between the upper and nether millstones of disputing groups or unions. The argument is that unless injunction can issue in such a situation the employer may well, for lack of other remedy, see his business destroyed, because neither union may be interested in applying to the National Labor Relations Board for an election and certification, and the employer is not, under the present terms of the National Labor Relations Act, given a right to invoke the jurisdiction of the Board to investigate and determine by election proceedings the appropriate bargaining unit and the agency reflective of the will of the majority of the employees.

And it is clear also that in the absence of a remedy for the employer the dispute may proceed indefinitely for lack of an invocation of jurisdiction of the Board by the competing unions.

It is clear further that in such a situation there is no remedy for the employer under the National Labor Relations Act. That act makes no provision for invocation of the election and certification powers of the Board by an employer. The result is an inequality before the law as between an employer and employees in this particular, namely, that while the employer has a substantive right to carry on his business, he lacks a legal remedy for protecting the same against injury through the struggle of competing unions, even though he be indifferent as to the choice of his employees between them; whereas the employees, in respect of their substantive rights of self-organization and collective bargaining, are afforded a protective remedy under the election and certification powers of the Board.

Such argument of hardship must be addressed to Congress in respect of the possibility of an amendment of the National Labor Relations Act in such manner as will give to employers a right to invoke the jurisdiction of the Board for a settlement of disputes concerning rights of representation.

The Supreme Court has held in Labor Board v. Jones & McLaughlin that the one-sidedness of the act is a matter of congressional policy which does not invade constitutional limitations.

There is nothing new in this latest decision except the statement of the Court pointing out to Congress that the remedy for the employer whose business is being destroyed by a jurisdictional dispute, by the failure of the N. L. R. B. to act, is by congressional action.

REPRESENTATION CASES

Complaint cases are those in which the employer has been charged with an unfair labor practice and arise under sections 8 and 10.

Representation cases grow out of the actions of the Board when section 7, which gives the employees certain rights, is involved, or the Board acts under section 9, which provides for the selection of representatives and elections.

In representation cases the Board makes findings, orders, and certificates, but not a "final order."

By section 9 the Board was, as stated, given authority to designate the proper unit, that is, the election precinct, or district, for the holding of an election for the choosing of representatives for collective bargaining.

The act, however, fails to provide for any judicial review of the orders, findings, or certificates of the Board made in, representation cases, which affect employees as vitally as doorders made in complaint cases, and, for that reason, employees are contesting the constitutionality of the act, on the ground that it is contrary to the fifth amendment, which provides in substance that no person shall be deprived of life, liberty, or property without due process of law.

It is the contention of some unions and of some employees that the contracts which exist between unions and their employees involve property rights; that the right to collect dues, that the right to enter into a contract, is a property right which cannot be taken from them without their day in court.

Those drawing the act apparently assumed that the acts of the Board in representation cases were similar to certain proceedings before the Interstate Commerce Commission providing for its procedure in valuation cases, and so indulged in the further presumption that the Board might be given power to do whatever it saw fit in representation cases.

It should not be forgotten that there are two distinct classes of cases which arise when the act is put in operation.

COMPLAINT CASES

In cases where it is alleged that an employer has been guilty of unfair labor practices the Board may on its own initiative, or at the request of a union or of workers, institute an investigation, and then, if it finds ground therefor, it may make a complaint for unfair labor practices against the employer. When this complaint has been made, a hearing may be had, testimony taken, and the issue may be decided, and that decision may be embodied in a final order. These cases are known as complaint cases.

From this order the employer may appeal, or it may acquiesce. If it acquiesces, and if it complies with the order, that is the end of the proceeding, and neither a rival union nor a worker, unless he has intervened in these proceedings, can appeal

If the Board desires to enforce the order against an employer who objects, it may then petition the circuit court of appeals for the enforcement of the order which it has made; and, again, the employer or a party who has been permitted to intervene may have his day in court.

EMPLOYEES DENIED DAY IN COURT

The other class of cases which arise under the operation of the act are the representation cases. These grow out of either voluntary proceedings taken by the Board itself or a request on the part of some person interested, by which the Board is asked to designate the appropriate unit for the election of representatives to carry on collective bargaining, or out of some finding, order, or certificate of the Board.

The Board may refuse to entertain such a request and from that refusal to call an election, or from the designation of a bargaining unit, or from the certification of representatives, neither the employer, the union, nor the individual who made the request can appeal.

If the Board grants the request, makes an investigation, and determines that the proper unit for the election of representatives is one plant, two plants, or all the employees of that particular company, or all the employees of all the employers in a designated locality, as, in the longshoremen's case, all the longshoremen on the Pacific coast, there is no way by which those aggrieved by such finding can appeal, for such finding is not a "final order."

WORKERS DENIED FAIR OPPORTUNITY TO SELECT THEIR REPRESENTATIVES

If the Board, after the investigation which it has made, determines that Union A has a majority of the employees in the bargaining unit, either plant, employer, craft, or subdivision thereof, neither the rival organization nor the independent employee has any right to appeal, for again a "final order" has not been made; there has been merely a certification.

About this rule there is no longer any doubt. It has been held by the circuit court of appeals that, even in complaint cases, where an unfair labor practice has been charged, if a final order has not been made by the Board, workers cannot claim to be aggrieved and have no standing in court.

If a final order be made in a complaint case and the Board appeals to the court for an enforcement of that order, or if the employer or a person intervening appeals to the court for the modification or the vacation of such final order, the Board may then withdraw its final order and proceed anew, and employer and any intervening parties may again be subjected to another hearing (In re National Labor Relations Board, 304 U. S., 486; Ford Motor Co. v. National Labor Relations Board, Nos. 182, 183, present term, decided January 3, 1939).

Nor has the court as yet decided how many times the Board may vacate its final order when the validity of that order is challenged in court. It will be interesting to learn just how long this procedure of vacating final orders after a long period of time, during which employer, employees, and union have been at the mercy of the Board, can be continued.

The practice of permitting the Board to make a final order, to ask for its enforcement in the circuit court of appeals, and then to permit the vacation of that order which it had made, permit the Board to proceed anew and, for all that we know at this time, make another final order, again ask for its enforcement, and again, when challenged in the court, once more ask that the order be vacated, will eventually tax the patience of the people, if not of the courts.

The courts are not responsible for that provision of the law which permits such practice; we here in Congress are.

As the Board makes only orders, findings, and certificates in representation cases, no person, however greatly he may be "aggrieved," can appeal to the courts for a review of those orders, even though such order may in effect destroy his right to bargain collectively through representatives of his own choosing; even though such finding, order, or certification may destroy the union of which he is a member (Combustion Engineering Co., Inc., v. National Labor Relations Board, 95 Fed. (2d), 996; United Employees Association v. National Labor Relations Board, 96 Fed. (2d), 875; New York Handkerchief Co. v. National Labor Relations Board, 97 Fed. (2d), 1010; Unlicensed Employees Collective Bargaining Agency of the Marine Department of Sabine Transportation Co. of Dover, Del., Inc., v. National Labor Relations Board, decided November 12, 1937, by Circuit Court of Appeals, Fifth Circuit (unreported); Commercial Telegraphers Union v. J. Warren Madden et al., decided November 18, 1937, by Circuit Court of Appeals for District of Columbia (unreported); Supreme Court decision on December 6, 1937, 302 U. S. 654; American Federation of Labor, International Longshoremen's Association and Pacific Coast District International Longshoremen's Association, No. 38, v. National Labor Relations Board, decided February 27, 1939, by Circuit Court of Appeals for District of Columbia; Harris v. National Labor Relations Board, 100 Fed. (2d), 197; certiorari denied, United States Supreme Court, February 27, 1939).

The result of this interpretation and application of the law is that the Board may on occasion become, and, as charged by the American Federation of Labor, has become, a valuable ally of the C. I. O.

In the United Employees Association case, the United Electrical and Radio Workers was, on petition, certified by the Board as "the exclusive representative of all such employees for the purpose of collective bargaining in respect to rates of pay, wages, hours of employment, and other conditions of employment."

The Circuit Court of Appeals was asked by the rival union and by five employees as individuals to review the proceedings certifying the U. E. and R. W. as the agent for collective bargaining. On objection made by the Board, the Court said:

This is not a final order. It is in fact not an order at all. • • • Until the Board makes a final order by which some person is aggreeved, the proceedings of the Board may not be judicially reviewed or enjoined.

The effect of this is to deprive one union and all its members and all independent workers of their day in court.

Another case which shows how the Board can and does make a plaything of an employees' organization, defeat the purpose of the act, destroy a union, and deprive employees of the right to bargain collectively through representatives of their own choosing is that of Harris v. National Labor Relations Board (100 Fed. (2d) 197; U. S. Sup. Ct. No. 620, October term, 1938; decided February 27, 1939).

This decision was handed down by the Supreme Court on the same day the Court decided the Fansteel, the Sands Manufacturing Co., and the Columbian Enameling & Stamping Co. cases, and it attracted little, if any, attention.

It demonstrates as no argument could that the Board so far has been able to and has intentionally deprived employees of the right given them by section 7 of the act, to bargain collectively through representatives of their own choosing.

Let me repeat that charge: The National Labor Relations Board has knowingly and deliberately deprived employees of the right to bargain collectively through representatives of their own choosing. A charge of this kind is a serious one, but it cannot be successfully denied.

The facts are found in the records filed in the Harris case in the Supreme Court and in the Circuit Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit. An examination of the record and of the brief filed in the Supreme Court in behalf of the Board will disclose the following facts:

On July 13, 1937, a majority of the employees of the Calco Chemical Co., Inc., of Bound Brook, N. J., were members of an independent union—the Calcocraft—which was by the company recognized as the bargaining agent for its members.

A rival union, Chemical Workers' Local No. 20923, representing a minority of the employees, was recognized as the bargaining agent for its members.

The Calco Chemical Co. was owned by the American Cyanamid Co., which also owned and operated at Bound Brook another plant engaged in business somewhat similar to that of the Calco Chemical Co., and which was known as the Beetle plant.

the Beetle plant.

None of the employees in the Beetle plant were members of the Calcocraft union, but belonged to Chemical Workers' Local No. 20923, hereinafter referred to as chemical workers' local.

On the 13th of July 1937, the Calcocraft applied to the proper regional director of the Board, asking that it be designated as the bargaining agent for all of the employees in the Calco Chemical Co. plant.

On September 2, 1937, on charges filed by the chemical workers' local, the Board issued a complaint charging the Calco Chemical Co. and the American Cyanamid Co., which operated the Beetle plant, with unfair labor practices.

The Board on the next day consolidated the representation case wherein the Calcocraft had petitioned for a certificate of representation as the bargaining agent for all of the employees of the Calco Chemical Co, with the complaint case filed against the two companies.

Hearings were held, and on April 28, 1938, the Board decided the complaint case.

In the meantime, however, and I quote from pages 3 and 4 of the Board's brief filed in the Supreme Court in this case:

of the Board's brief filed in the Supreme Court in this case:

On March 28, 1938, the companies, the union, and counsel for the Board entered into an agreement of settlement, subject to the approval of the Board, with respect to the unfair labor practice charges alleged in the complaint as amended. Under the terms of the agreement the Calco Chemical Co., Inc., agreed to cease and desist from engaging in unfair labor practices and to take certain affirmative action, including the withdrawal of recognition from Calcocraft as collective bargaining representative of its employees and the "disestablishment of all relations to said organization." The agreement further provided that "On the basis of the record, the trial examiner's intermediate report, and this agreement, an order may be entered by the Board, and, if necessary, upon application by the Board, by the circuit court of appeals for the appropriate circuit" embodying the terms set out in the agreement. Accordingly, on April 28, 1938, the Board issued a decision and order setting forth its findings as to the jurisdiction of the Board and its order based on the agreement of settlement referred to above.

Vou will note by this agreement to which the Calcocraft

You will note by this agreement, to which the Calcocraft was not a party, the employees, members of the Calcocraft, were deprived of the right to bargain collectively through representatives of their own choosing. By this conspiracy on the part of the companies, the chemical workers' local, and counsel for the Board, section 7 of the N. L. R. A. was abrogated, rendered null and void.

Subsequently and on April 28, 1938, based upon this agreement of settlement, to which a majority of the employees in the Calco Chemical Co. were not a party, the Board entered an order dismissing in its entirety the complaint against the American Cyanamid Co., but requiring the Calco Chemical Co., its officers, agents, successors, and assigns to withdraw all recognition at its Bound Brook, N. J., plant from the Calcocraft as representative of its employees for the purpose of dealing with them "concerning grievances, labor disputes, wages, rates of pay, hours of employment, or conditions of work, and disestablish all relations to said organization."

It also required the company to post in a conspicuous place for at least 30 days throughout all departments of its plants a copy of this order.

Now note this: There was no finding in this case by the Board that the Calcocraft was a company union; nor was there any decision by the Board that it was established, maintained, or assisted by any action defined in the act as an unfair labor practice.

Here was a union whose members were a majority of the employees in both of these plants, which represented a majority of the employees in the Calco Chemical Co. plant, which had been recognized by that company as the proper collective bargaining agent for its members, refused recognition as a bargaining agent.

July 7, 1938, almost a year after the filing of the petition by the Calcocraft asking that it be designated as the bargaining unit for all the employees in the Calco Chemical Co., the Board ordered an election and designated as the proper unit from which representatives for collective bargaining were to be chosen both the Beetle plant and the plant of the Calco Chemical Co., although employees of the Beetle plant belonged to the chemical workers' union, while employees of the Calco Chemical Co. were members, some of the chemical workers' local and some of the Calcocraft union.

The election was held, representatives of the chemical workers' union and of the two companies being allowed on the election board, while representatives of the Calcocraft were denied that privilege. The name of the chemical workers' union appeared on the ballot but the Calcocraft was denied a place thereon.

Notwithstanding these handicaps a majority of the employees in both plants, a majority of the employees in the Calco Chemical Co. plant, decided at the election conducted by the Board and by a ballot on which the name of the Calcocraft did not appear and on which appeared only the name of the chemical workers' local, that they did not want to be represented by the chemical workers' local.

Section 9 (a) of the act expressly provides that representatives designated or selected by the majority of the employees in a unit appropriate for that purpose shall be the exclusive representative of all the employees in such unit for the purposes of collective bargaining.

A subsequent proviso provides that any individual employee or group of employees shall have the right at any time to present grievances to their employers.

This National Labor Relations Board, which has had before it since July 13, 1937, a petition asking it to designate the Calcocraft as the proper bargaining agent, refuses to call an election submitting the question of whether the employees desired to be represented for bargaining purposes by the Calcocraft, forces the two companies into an agreement with the chemical workers' local and uses that forced agreement as the basis of an order denying a majority of the employees in the Calco Chemical Co. the rights given them by sections 7 and 9 (a).

The Board by its order not only forced the company, which had not been found guilty of an unfair labor practice by the Board, to withdraw recognition from the employees' union, but it expressly stated in its order that it must withdraw all recognition from the Calcocraft as representative of its employees for the purpose of dealing with them concerning grievances.

The inevitable result of this order of the Board was to destroy the organization of a majority of the employees. Does someone ask: Is there not some appeal from this arbitrary, this unfair action of the Board, which defeats the announced purpose of the act, which deprived the right of the employees to bargain collectively through representatives of their own choosing?

The answer, under the decisions of the courts, is an em-

For a review of the order so made by the Board on the 28th of April 1938 the Calcocraft filed a petition in the circuit court of appeals for the third circuit; and, among other things, as representing the workers, it challenged the constitutionality of the act, alleging that the employees and the union, the Calcocraft, had been deprived of their property without due process of law, in violation of the fifth amendment.

This petition was filed on July 28, 1938, and, on August 12, 1938, the Board gave notice that it intended to set aside its order of April 28, 1938, "for the purpose of further proceedings before the Board"; and, on August 18, 1938, the Board did set aside its order for the purpose of "taking such further proceedings herein as it may be advised are necessary or Subsequently and on November 5, 1938, the circuit court of appeals, following the decision of the Supreme Court in Ex parte National Labor Relations Board (304 U. S. 486; 58 S. Ct. 1001; 82 L. ed. 1482), held that no transcript having been filed by the Board under section 10 (d), the Board might withdraw its order for further proceedings. This decision was affirmed by the Supreme Court of the United States on February 27, 1939.

The result is that since the 13th day of July 1937—a period of more than 1 year and 7 months—the employees of the Calco Chemical Co. who were members of the Calcocraft have been deprived of the right to bargain collectively through representatives of their own choosing.

It is indisputable that this act does not give to these union members, who constitute a majority of the employees of this company, the right to appeal from this decision of the Board, and that the Supreme Court of the United States has so held.

This being the situation, these being the facts-and they are the facts, and they cannot be successfully disputed—is there any reason why the N. L. R. A. should not be amended?

The purpose of the act is stated to be to give employees the right to bargain collectively through representatives of their own choosing. The Board so conducts its hearings, it so interprets the act, that this right is denied to employees, and the act as it stands denies to the employees so deprived of the rights guaranteed by the act a right of review in the courts.

In this particular case which has just been cited the employees were members of an independent union. In other cases, as in the Consolidated Edison Co. v. National Labor Relations Board case (59 U. S. S. C. Rept. 206; decided December 5, 1938), the Board has attempted to set aside contracts which existed between the A. F. of L. and the employer.

THE BOARD IS GUILTY OF SHARP PRACTICES

As showing the method followed by the Board, let me quote from a footnote on page 7 of the brief filed in the Calcocraft case, where it is said:

It may also be noted that this constitutional argument was not

And then let me call your attention to the fact that, on page 30 of the brief filed in behalf of the Calcocraft in that same case, we find this heading: "Summary of the Argument Against the Constitutionality of the Act."

That, again, on pages 7 and 8 of this same brief, we find the statement:

Petitioner also contends that he was prejudiced by the alleged failure of the Board to "grant a hearing" on the proposed vacation of its order. This contention as to the denial of a "hearing" is not properly before the Court, inasmuch as it was not urged in the court below in petitioner's "motion for decree granting relief sought by petitioner in his petition."

On page 39 of the petition for writ of certiorari filed in the Supreme Court we find a subheading referring to this hearing, printed in black-face type, where it was said, referring to the vacation of the order:

It was made without granting the petitioner a hearing.

On page 11 of the record filed in the Supreme Court setting forth the petition to the circuit court of appeals we find this statement in paragraph 18:

That said decision and order of April 28, 1938, were made without notice to the Calcocraft and without any hearing or opportunity for oral argument.

What opportunity is there for an employee or a representative of an employee to obtain justice when statements like these are found in briefs filed in the Supreme Court of the United States by the attorneys for the Board?

THE BOARD DESTROYS A. F. OF L. AFFILIATES

The power of the Board to force employees into one labor organization at the expense of another, to utterly destroy one labor union while building up another, is clearly illustrated by the decision of the Circuit Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia in a case entitled "American Federation of Labor et al., petitioner, against National Labor Relations Board, respondent," decided February 27, 1939.

In that case the C. I. O. filed a petition asking the Board to designate as the employer unit the entire west coast and to certify its affiliate as the exclusive bargaining agent.

The Board united in one unit for the purpose of electing representatives for collective bargaining some 200 or more employers operating in different coast ports from Canada to Mexico and it found that the C. I. O. organizations in this unit represented a majority of the employees of the whole.

The employers acquiesced in this finding, accepted the certification without question, and made a collective bargaining contract in which the C. I. O. was recognized as the exclusive representative of all west coast longshore employees.

In its brief filed in this case the Board, among other things,

The statute on its face denies to this court jurisdiction to entertain the petition or to take any action with respect to the Board's certification of representation because only final orders issued under ction 10 (c) of the act in unfair labor practice cases are reviewsection 10 (c) of the act in unfair labor practice cases are reviewable. The certification of representation here involved was not issued pursuant to section 10 (c), but pursuant to section 9 (c), and hence fails to come within the limited jurisdiction conferred upon this court, as has been uniformly held by the circuit court of appeals for the third, fifth, sixth, and seventh circuits, and hy this court (for the District of Columbia). Furthermore petitioner is not a person aggrieved by a final order. The court, therefore, has no jurisdiction to take any action in the matter.

It will be noted that the Board raised two questions: First, that the court had no jurisdiction to review its action establishing the unit for collective bargaining; and, second, that neither the A. F. of L. nor its employees was a "person aggrieved," under section 10 (f).

The circuit court of appeals held that the A. F. of L. was a "person aggrieved," but it agreed with the Board that, inasmuch as the certification, although final, was not a "final order," it had no jurisdiction to review the Board's finding.

Here we have a case where the Board threw into one unit the ports of Tacoma, Olympia, Port Angeles, San Francisco, Los Angeles, Seattle, and Portland, and about 25 smaller ports, and the total number of employees was said to be some 13,000.

The court in its opinion said:

The court in its opinion said:

Petitioner's (A. F. of L.) grievance grows out of the fact that in ascertaining the appropriate representative of the men the Board ignored the identity of separate employers or of separate ports and extended the employer unit to include the entire Pacific coast, with the result that the rival union was designated and certified as the sole representative—in consequence of which its own union was "put out of business" and its members obliged to become members of its rival and deal with the employer either exclusively through it or not at all. In short, that by reason of the Board's decision to enlarge the "unit" to embrace about 25 separate ports and the acceptance of its decision by the employers a situation has arisen as the result of which a so-called closed-shop contract may be entered into which will require petitioner's members, even where they predominate in a particular locality or business, to join the other union or possibly be displaced from their employment by members of that union.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOFFMAN. I yield for a question.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. The American Federation of Labor has no cause for complaint about that decision, because it has taken the same action with reference to requiring closed-shop agreements in connection with the A. F. of L. and denying the right of individual citizens to bargain through representatives of their own choosing.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Of course, I am not speaking today for the A. F. of L. and I am not speaking for the C. I. O.; I am talking in the interest of the thirty-odd million workers who want to exercise the old American right to work wherever they can find a man who will give them a job and who will pay them. That is what I am talking about.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOFFMAN. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota. Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Does the gentleman believe the act needs amendment, or does the gentleman feel that if the Board should impartially and fairly carry out the law there would be no trouble?

Mr. HOFFMAN. No. The act must be amended for the reason that the employer nowhere is given the right to appeal in representation cases, nor in any case unless there is a final order; and for the reason that the Board, if it carries out the act-and I will read from the decision of the court-still denies to the employee the right to be represented in court or to have his day in court.

Let me quote further from the opinion in the Longshoremen's case:

Enough has been said to show that we have here a controversy between two national labor organizations, both of which have appealed to the Board to resolve their conflicting rights and the rights of their members, and one of which claims that the unlawful action of the Board in the designation of an employer unit beyond the terms of the act has destroyed its property right and the property rights of its members and that, unless it can obtain a review by appeal to this court or some other circuit court of appeals it will be whelly without redress of early kind.

a review by appeal to this court or some other circuit court of appeals, it will be wholly without redress of any kind.

The Board denies jurisdiction on the ground that the action taken by it was the result of proceedings investigatory in character; that the act in the circumstances did not contemplate the issuance of any order, final, or otherwise; that its finding and decision do not require petitioner to do anything or to refrain from doing anything; and that petitioner is therefore not a person aggreeved nor the decision appealed from a final order which will confer jurisdiction upon a court.

Then, after finding that the certification and the decision of the court was not, within the meaning of the act, a "final order." the court said:

Accepting, as we must, this restrictive definition and applying it to the case at hand, we hold that, though the decision here was required by the act to be made and to be made on the evidence and argument after judicial hearing, and though it was definitive, adverse, binding, final, and in this case struck at the very roots of petitioner's union and destroyed its effectiveness in a large geographical area of the Nation, it was not an order because the act did not require it to be made in the language of command, and hence is reviewable, as was held in Shields case, supra, and in Utah Fuel Co. v. National Bituminous Coal Commission (— U.S. —, decided January 30, 1939), only in an independent suit in equity commenced in a district court.

In weighing the statement of the court in the Longshoremen's case that the remedy of the A. F. of L. was "only in an independent suit in equity commenced in the district court," we should have in mind the decision of the United States Supreme Court in the case of New Negro Alliance v. Grocery Co. (303 U. S. 552).

In that case stores of the company were picketed by representatives of an alliance whose demand was that the management employ colored persons in its stores in certain localities. In answer to the company's petition for an injunction re-straining such picketing the Court held that there was a "labor dispute" within the meaning of the Norris-LaGuardia Act (29 U. S. C. sec. 113) and that, under that act, the Court was without jurisdiction to issue an injunction restraining such picketing.

If the Court cannot issue an injunction restraining picketing of, or interference with, the company's business when those making the demands are not even employees, how can a district court entertain an independent suit in equity to enjoin a Labor Board from issuing a certificate of representation to the representatives elected by the unit designated by it?

Mr. WOOD. Mr. Chairman will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOFFMAN. I yield for a question.

Mr. WOOD. The gentleman states that amendments have been introduced in the House and Senate and nothing has been done about them. Does not the gentleman know that after Senator Walsh introduced his amendments, which were sponsored by the American Federation of Labor, last month the executive council held a meeting in Miami, Fla., and until that council meeting adjourned we did not know exactly what changes the executive council would suggest or what amendments they would really sponsor?

Mr. HOFFMAN. I am aware of that?

Mr. WOOD. The inference has been made that the Senate and House Committees on Labor have been attempting to get away from this matter.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Pardon me. I did not yield for an argument. I yielded for a question. Mr. Chairman, I do not propose to yield further unless I can get more time. If I can, it is all right.

Mr. WOOD. I just want to make this statement so the gentleman may be clear on the matter and so there will not be any misunderstanding. I want the gentleman to be informed.

Mr. HOFFMAN. That is all right; go ahead.

Mr. WOOD. There is no disposition on the part of the House and Senate Committees on Labor—I know there is not on the part of the House committee—to smother these hearings. The hearings are going to start in the Senate on the 11th. The House committee has considered these amendments, and I myself believe there ought to be some amendment of the Wagner National Labor Relations Act.

That is a matter to be decided by the committee, and there has not been so much delay, because the executive council has not been adjourned very long, and we have several months left in this session of Congress, and I can assure the gentleman that the amendment will be con-

Mr. HOFFMAN. That is fine.

Mr. WOOD. By our House Labor Committee. I know they will be considered by the committee and not only by the House and by the Senate, but I am sure this Congress will be given an opportunity to vote on this matter before long.

Mr. HOFFMAN. I must decline to yield any further, and I thank the gentleman from Missouri, and the gentleman is absolutely right that the A. F. of L. did not decide until recently, but now they have proposed their amendment, and the President of the American Federation has made this statement:

Let the Members of Congress know you are standing with the American Federation of Labor, that you are supporting your offi-cers who are endeavoring to carry out orders and instructions of that convention.

Mr. WOOD. I want to say to the gentleman-

Mr. HOFFMAN. No; I do not yield further.

Mr. WOOD. Just for your information-this is not a matter of argument.

Mr. HOFFMAN. No; I am familiar with what the convention down at Houston did, and that is all right; but my complaint is that here in the House we have sat still and let this thing run along for a couple of years; and a further observation, in answer to the gentleman from Missouri, is that the A. F. of L. and the C. I. O. are not the only people who are interested in the Wagner Act. [Applause.]

Mr. WOOD. That is true.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Here are 30,000,000 other workers who are not represented by organized labor, and the general public is vitally interested in this law and its administration. Mr. WOOD. I may state to the gentleman that the Labor Committee well realizes that.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Where a complaint that the company was engaging in unfair labor practices was made and the company and a group of employees sought to enjoin the holding of hearings, the Supreme Court, holding that the jurisdiction of the Board was exclusive until a final order of the Board was sought to be enforced or set aside, said:

The grant of that exclusive power is constitutional, because the act provided for appropriate procedure before the Board and in the review by the circuit court of appeals an adequate opportunity to secure judicial protection against possible illegal action on the part of the Board. No power to enforce an order is conferred upon the Board. To secure enforcement, the Board must apply to a circuit court of appeals for its affirmance. And until the Board's order has been affirmed by the appropriate circuit court of appeals, no penalty accrues for disobeying it. The independent right to apply to a circuit court of appeals to have an order set aside is conferred upon any party aggrieved by the proceeding before the Board.

The order of the Board is subject to review by the designated court, and only when sustained by the court may the order be enforced. Upon that review all questions of the jurisdiction of the Board and the regularity of its proceedings, all questions of constitutional right or statutory authority, are open to examination by the court (Myers v. Bethlehem Shipbuilding Corporation, 303 U. S. 41, 48-49, Circuit Court of Appeals for the First Circuit).

It is all very well for the Supreme Court to say, as it said in the Myers case, that no power is conferred upon the Board to enforce an order; that to enforce an order it must go to the circuit court of appeals and that then an aggrieved party can secure a judicial review of the Board's action. Such a statement is like handing a stone to the man who asks for bread, when we remember that that Court, the United States Supreme Court, has also said in Harris against National Labor Relations Board, reported in One Hundred Federal (2d), page 197, and decided by the Supreme Court on February 27, 1939; and in the other cases to which reference has been made, that only when a final order has been made can such a review be claimed, and that findings and decisions of the Board destroying unions, depriving workers of their property, of their right to work, and to freedom of contract, are final findings and decisions, even though they be not, under the Court's interpretation, final orders subject to review.

As in the A. F. of L. Longshoremen's case, the certification of the Board sounds the death knell of the A. F. of L. affiliates. It takes from the A. F. of L. affiliates the right of property, their freedom to bargain, their ability to collect dues, which they have heretofore exercised under the A. F. of L.'s contracts with its members.

Nevertheless, although there is this deprivation of rights guaranteed under the Federal Constitution, there is forsooth no judicial review under the act, for the reason that there is no final order.

Oh, yes, do I hear you say, "But there is a remedy by an independent suit in equity, as was pointed out in the long-shoremen's decision by the Circuit Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia"?

Is not the losing union and the unattached employees in any jurisdictional dispute, where the employer has acquiesced in the certification of the Board or has entered into a voluntary contract with one union as the representative for all of its employees, caught between the decision of the Supreme Court in the Myers against Bethlehem Corporation case, the Harris against N. L. R. B. case, and other similar decisions, which hold that there is no appeal under the N. L. R. A. until a final order is made, and the decision in the New Negro Alliance against Grocery Co. case, which holds that, where a labor dispute is involved, the Court, except in certain specified instances, is without jurisdiction to give relief?

Of what practical value is the statement of the United States Supreme Court in the Myers against Bethlehem case, to the effect that all questions of the jurisdiction of the Board and the regularity of its proceedings, all questions of constitutional right or statutory authority, are open to examination by the Court, when that review is by the Court itself limited to those cases in which a final order has been made, and we know that there are cases like the Longshoremen's and the Calcocraft cases where no final order has been made; or, if made, has been by the Board vacated?

The truth is that this act, as interpreted by the Board and the courts up to this time at least, gives the Board authority to destroy a union and to deprive employees of the very rights guaranteed them by the act creating the Board.

How much longer will we sit here and permit this misinterpretation, this maladministration, of the law, which is causing so much strife; which is so hampering and hindering business; which is depriving employees of the rights which the act was passed to protect, to continue? Most humbly and with due deference, to assist in remedying the evils which have been pointed out, H. R. 4990 is submitted for your serious consideration. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. Houston].

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Chairman, at the outset, I want to pay tribute to the chairman of this subcommittee. I do not believe I have ever come in contact with a man who was more amiable, more capable, more efficient, and who had a more analytical mind than the chairman of this subcommittee, the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Tarver].

As he told you a few moments ago, I presume this is one of the few times in Congress when a subcommittee composed of both majority and minority Members unanimously agreed on an appropriation bill. That is the case in this instance—100 percent agreement all the way along the line.

What I want to talk about this afternoon for a few minutes is one phase of this bill. That is, the Employment Service. I know when a bureau comes here and asks for a lot of money we never know what they are going to do with it. They may have it covered up or do something about which they have not informed the committee. For instance, there is a story: A fellow said he was put in jail. They asked him what he was in jail for. He said, "Because I did not build a church." "How is that?" He said, "Well, they passed the hat around and they collected $25,000 and gave it to me, and I forgot to build the church. That is the reason I am in jail." So we want to know what they are doing with the money we have given them, and that they are justified in having it.

I want to explain some of the features of the Employment Service.

Finding jobs for its citizens is one of the major tasks of this Government. This consideration is basic in the present activities designed to encourage and stimulate employment opportunities in private enterprise. The same consideration underlies our thinking on the subject of public-work and work-relief programs.

The United States Employment Service in the Department of Labor is the one agency of the Federal Government which tackles this problem most directly and which uses all of its energies to help place men in jobs. Naturally the other side of the work of the Employment Service is to help employers find the best available workers to fill the jobs which they have open.

The Public Employment Service in this country is a Federal-State cooperative enterprise. That is as it should be, for while the problem of unemployment is a national problem, on the firing line the problem of matching jobs and men is essentially local. If public employment offices are to succeed as agencies for bringing together job seekers and employment opportunities, they must of necessity be closely related to their local community conditions.

The system of public employment offices in this country is composed of the United States Employment Service—created by the Wagner-Peyser Act of 1933—and of affiliated State employment services in each one of the 48 States and the Territories of Hawaii and Alaska. These State employment services operate at the present time nearly 1,700 local employment offices situated in all parts of the country.

Each of these local employment offices is an established community institution, where workers of all types in search of jobs may file their applications and may be aided in their search for employment. At the same time these local employment offices represent agencies to which employers can look for supplying every kind of labor requirement.

The qualification of the applicants represents the sole basis upon which they are selected from the files for referral to employers in response to their orders. The principle of the best man for each job and a fit job for each applicant underlies all the work of this agency.

This is a free service to both workers or employers. Therefore, no worker is obligated to pay a percentage of his first week's wages to the public employment agency for the help he has received in finding a job.

At these same local employment offices a worker covered by one of the various State unemployment compensation acts files his claim for unemployment compensation benefits when he is out of work. He comes to the office first of all seeking a job, and if a job is not to be had, to claim his benefits.

From these same offices workers are referred to publicworks projects and to work-relief projects; special attention is given to the employment needs of veterans, as is provided in the Federal statute; also assistance in the placement of the vocationally handicapped is rendered through these offices and juniors and other individuals in need of vocational information or counseling receive accurate employment information.

Thus, in a very effective and real sense the Employment Service of this country represents the center of what we might term a work approach to our solution of the unemployment problem.

Any real American citizen would rather have a job than a dole, would rather have a job at prevailing rates of wages in private employment than in work relief, and certainly would rather have work than unemployment compensation benefits. The Employment Service is Government's agency to find jobs.

How has the system worked? In the fiscal year ending June 30, 1938, a total of 2,900,000 jobs were filled by the Service. Of these 1,963,000 were in private employment, 895,000 on public-works projects, and 42,000 on work-relief projects. The total number of jobs in private industry which were filled represented 834,000 regular positions and 1,129,000 temporary.

During the same 12 months 12,014,000 applications for work in all occupations were filed at these employment offices. At the end of the fiscal year the active files of the employment offices contained 7,830,943 applications.

Looking over a still longer period of time, in 5 years of operation of the Employment Service in its present form from July 1, 1933, through June 30, 1938, over 23,000,000 jobs have been filled and almost 63,000,000 applications for work have been received in the offices. These registrations represent 33,500,000 new applications and 29,300,000 renewed applications. Special service for veterans as conducted by the Employment Service has resulted in, over the 5-year period, the filing of 2,133,000 jobs for veterans.

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HOUSTON. I yield; yes.

Mr. HINSHAW. What has been done toward consolidation of the Employment Service of the Department of Labor and the Social Security Board under the Employment Compensation Act?

Mr. HOUSTON. I may say to the gentleman that there is a little controversy between the Social Security set-up and the Department of Labor, as I will explain in a moment. We get $28,000,000 from the Social Security Board in furthering the field work of this office in the next fiscal year. There is a bill in another body to take this activity away from the Department of Labor and put it into the Social Security, and by the same token there is a bill of the House seeking to put it all under the Department of Labor.

Mr. HINSHAW. I do not know that it is a matter of great concern where it is, but does not the gentleman think that some false moves, so to speak, might be saved through some consolidation or coordination?

Mr. HOUSTON. Absolutely. I would be in favor of it. My position is that it should remain in the Department of Labor in its entirety.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOUSTON. I yield.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. The gentleman feels the Department of Labor was created to make jobs for people and to find jobs. They have all the statistics for that purpose. They know all the labor laws, and so forth.

Mr. HOUSTON. Absolutely. That is right. That is, the Employment Service of the Department of Labor; yes.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. And it should go there, if consolidated, rather than go to the Social Security, which is an insurance and unemployment compensation commission, and it is the course of least resistance to pay that rather than to find jobs.

Mr. HOUSTON. I think that is true.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I think that has the endorsement of labor, has it not? Labor has endorsed it to me. I know the veterans have endorsed it also.

Mr. HOUSTON. I think it has the endorsement of labor and the veterans both.

Public employment service in this country has become a permanent institution. It has a necessary job to go in good times as well as in periods of depression.

The system of financing the public employment offices has been very complicated. Moneys have been received from an appropriation made under the terms of the Wagner-Peyser Act, which created the present United States Employment Service in 1933. This is the appropriation under consideration in the report of this committee. The States must appropriate for this activity in order to receive their apportionment of Federal funds provided for in this bill, and in many instances local communities also contribute financially to their local employment offices. In addition, there have been vast sums received for this purpose from work relief appropriations, and grants running into millions of dollars are now made by the Social Security Board.

The appropriation bill for this activity for the fiscal year 1940 represents a simplification and an economy in the finance of this agency.

The report of this committee recommends an appropriation of $4,622,640 for the United States Employment Service, exclusive of departmental allotments. This amount is $1,829,640 more than the appropriation made under the Wagner-Peyser Act last year; but, as can be clearly demonstrated, the increase in this particular appropriation is more than offset by the fact that no moneys will be sought for the operation of this Service through emergency appropriations in the fiscal year 1940.

Of the total amount of the appropriation, $3,480,000 are earmarked for payments to the States on a basis of population, to be matched by State moneys and used for the operation of State employment services. This part of the appropriation represents an increase of $1,530,000 of the similar cash appropriation made last year. But the authorized apportionments among the States are in both years upon a basis of a total of $3,000,000. Since funds appropriated under the Wagner-Peyser Act for allocation to the States do not revert to the General Treasury if unexpended during a single fiscal year, but remain available for reapportionment among the States, the United States Employment Service had, during the present fiscal year, an accumulated reserve of funds not used in the earlier years of operating the service.

With the complete expansion of the State employment service to cover all 48 States and the two Territories, this accumulated reserve has naturally been depleted, and the Congress is therefore called upon for the fiscal year 1940 to appropriate the full amount of the normal annual apportionment of $3,000,000, plus an additional amount totaling $480,000 to cover the difference between the cash appropriation made last year and the actual expenditures to be made during the fiscal year 1940 from the authorized allocation to the States upon a basis of $3,000,000.

The balance of the total appropriation recommended by the committee for the United States Employment Service, exclusive of allotments from departmental funds, is $1,142,640 which is to be used for the general administration of the service and for the conduct of the Veterans' Placement Service, the Farm Placement Service, and the District of Columbia Employment Center.

Again this amount indicates at first an increase over the similar appropriation for the fiscal year 1939, but attention should be called to the fact that during the present fiscal year there is being expended approximately $1,612,000 for these same purposes, the difference coming from the supplementary appropriation to the United States Employment Service made in the last Congress as a part of the Work Relief Appropriation Act. The committee is assured by the Department of Labor that no funds will be sought by this agency from emergency funds for the fiscal year 1940 provided this appropriation is made in accordance with the committee's recommendation.

Therefore, there is in this category of expenditures of the United States Employment Service a net saving between the current fiscal year and the proposed expenditures in 1940 of approximately $236,000.

This is not an emergency activity which is now proposed to be carried on upon a permanent basis. The emergency activities of the United States Employment Service, which have been carried on by its branch organization known as the National Reemployment Service, will have been completely liquidated by the end of the current fiscal year.

The employment services of this country represent a permanent organization of State employment services in the 48 States with a Federal service in the Department of Labor, which is authorized by the Wagner-Peyser Act to promote and develop a national system of public employment offices. The Federal service assists the States financially and administratively. It coordinates the work of public employment offices throughout the country. It prescribes and maintains uniform standards of efficiency.

The State employment services in 1940 will cost approximately $35,000,000, to be financed $7,000,000 from State appropriations and Federal matching money appropriated under the Wagner-Peyser Act and $28,000,000 through grants made by the Social Security Board to the State agencies administering unemployment compensation.

It is the responsibility of the United States Employment Service to supervise the total activities of these State employment services. Therefore, the funds totaling $4,622,640 sought for the administration of this service-including the operation of Farm Placement Service, the Veterans' Service, and the District of Columbia office, but exclusive of departmental allotments-represent only 4 percent of the total cost of the public employment services in the United States. This ratio of administration to total cost has been reduced by the United States Employment Service from 11.6 percent in 1936. [Applause.]

Mr. ENGEL. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Hawks].

Mr. HAWKS. Mr. Chairman, it should be apparent by this time that the Wage and Hour Act is absolutely impossible from an administrative standpoint. From all over the country are coming complaints that spring from practically every type of business or business organization. I have no desire to make a personal attack upon Administrator Andrews, because he probably is doing the best he can with a very bad law.

But I do believe that it is imperative that this Congress either abolish the act entirely or change it so that industry and labor will not be further penalized. The New Deal administration by ridiculous legislation of this character has completely hamstrung private enterprise in this country, has completely discouraged management, and driven capital into deeper despondency. We might just as well face the facts right now; and if this Congress is sincere in its desire to put private business back on its feet, it will change or completely abandon this socialistic type of legislation.

From my district come innumerable complaints from small telephone companies, from small canning factories, from farmers and others engaged in business related to agriculture. The act not only penalizes the business itself, but the evidence that I have received conclusively proves that labor will get the short end of the deal.

Agriculture today is completely demoralized, and this type of legislation just adds to the misery of those engaged in that industry. By limiting the operating time of our canning factories and by restricting the hours of labor, the canner suffers, the man working in his plant is restricted, and the farmer is penalized because he cannot market his crops at the time they are ready to go to market. In this respect the law attempts to regulate nature; and somebody has more control over that than the New Deal administration. When peas, corn, tomatoes, and other crops are ready to harvest. they must be taken care of; and a law that says that your factory must be closed because you have already consumed the time allotted to you under the law, creates a situation wherein the farmer suffers a total loss. Anyone who has lived in a district wherein the canning of farm products is a major factor in the agricultural industry knows that there can be no restrictions on hours of labor or upon the number of days the factory can operate.

If this act was designed to help agriculture, industry, and labor, it certainly has completely missed its goal.

Mr. Chairman, I have a few of the letters that I have received from small, locally owned telephone companies in Wisconsin. Here is a part of one from the president of the Pacific-Wyocena Telephone Co., which says:

We are a company of 102 telephones. In 1938 our total revenues were $1,654.85, while our total expenses were $1,740.44, leaving a deficit of $85.59. We hire one operator, who has the switchboard in her home, and to whom we paid $965.35 for her services in 1938. As you can see, if we are forced to employ extra operators, we would have to increase the rates materially. We venture to say that most of our subscribers would discontinue the telephones rather than to pay considerably higher rates.

Most of their subscribers are farmers, and I am quite sure that the farmers would not pay the additional rate necessary to meet the additional labor cost involved in compliance with the wage and hour law.

Here is a letter from the recording secretary of the Wisconsin State Telephone Association, in which this statement is made:

If this law is enforced as written, it means that practically every telephone exchange with less than 1,000 subscribers, which is being operated manually in the State of Wisconsin, is going to be—

(1) Forced out of business entirely, or

(2) Obliged to curtail the service to 8 hours per day and eliminate night, holiday, and Sunday service, or
(3) Obliged to raise rates and at the same time curtail service, or

(4) Forced to install machine or automatic central office switch-

(4) Forced to install machine or automatic central office switching and discharge the present force of operators.

Scattered throughout Wisconsin there are upward of 600 telephone exchanges, serving approximately 2,250 localities, each with less than 1,000 subscribers, and if it were possible to increase rates to meet the requirements of the above law it would be necessary to add to the existing yearly rates from $7.50 to $15.40 for each telephone as the various steps in the act become effective. We know this is not practicable. The small town or rural subscriber could not afford to pay that much; indeed, in all too many instances, he cannot pay the present rates. Therefore, if such an increase were attempted, it would definitely result in wholesale disconnection of telephone service. disconnection of telephone service.

Mr. CLEVENGER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAWKS. I yield.

Mr. CLEVENGER. I may say to the gentleman from Wisconsin that I can produce 15 letters telling of exactly similar conditions in my district, tales of hardship on little telephone companies.

Mr. HAWKS. I thank the gentleman for his contribution. Not only is that the situation in Ohio, but I understand similar situations exist in Texas and many other States in the Union.

The entire wage and hour law, as it affects the small, locally owned telephone companies, apparently has a most terrible effect upon exchanges with less than 1,000 stations. A typical instance is represented by this letter from the Commonwealth Telephone Co., of Madison, Wis., from which I read the following:

The Commonwealth Telephone Co. at December 31, 1937, operated 110 exchanges and their surrounding territory in the State of Wisconsin serving 41,878 stations. Of these 110 exchanges, all but 7 serve less than 1,000 stations, and in order that you may be informed of the relative importance which the small exchange bears to our operations, the following tabulation is given:

	Nun	nber of exc	hanges	Number of stations
Size of exchange	In group	Percent of total	Accumu- lative percent	In group	Percent of total	Accumu- lative percent
1–250 stations	58 26 15 4 6	52.7 23.6 13.7 3.6 5.5	52. 7 76. 3 90. 0 93. 6 99. 1 100. 0	6, 629 8, 709 9, 042 3, 608 8, 217 5, 673	15.8 20.8 21.6 8.6 19.6 13.6	15. 8 36. 6 58. 2 66. 8 86. 4 100. 0
Total	110	100.0		41, 878	100.0

You will notice from the above that of our entire group of exchanges, 93.6 percent serve less than 1,000 stations each. In contrast to this, however, these same exchanges serve a total of only 27,988 stations, or 66.8 percent of the total stations served by the company, and contribute to the total earnings of the company to a still lesser percent. As regards this latter statement, the following is given:

Size of exchange	Net operating income	Percent contrib- uted	Cumula- tive percent
1–250 stations	$2, 251. 42 23, 082, 37	0.9	0.9
501-750 stations	48, 943. 99	19.3	29.3
751-1,000 stations	17, 037. 53 57, 434. 29	6.7 22.6	36. 0 58. 6
Over 2,500 stations Toll system	70, 938. 77 34, 302. 61	27. 9 13. 5	86. 5 100. 0

1 Deficit.

The effect of the law on another industry is shown in the following letter I received from the Kohler Co., of Kohler, Wis., dated March 10, 1939:

Bill H. R. 4645, by Mr. Thomas of Texas, has come to my attention. The purpose of the bill is to exclude from the maximum hours provision of the Federal wage-and-hour law clerical employees and the like who are employed on an annual salary of $1,200 or more, with paid annual vacations and with no deductions in pay for reasonable sick leave.

Our company, like most Wisconsin employers, is not much concerned about the minimum-wage provisions of the act, because our wage scales are greatly in excess of the minimum. However, the maximum-hour provisions have proved to be a nuisance because the Administrator has construed the act very broadly to include many people whom Congress certainly did not have in mind when they passed the law. Under the Administrator's strained interpretations some of our salaried people receiving several hundred dollars a month are subject to the overtime provisions of the act.

It was the common understanding when the law was passed that its purpose was to help the lowest-income group. Mr. Thomas' amendment will help to restore the law to its proper field.

We respectfully request that you use your influence to bring Mr. Thomas' bill to a vote during this session and assist in its passage. If the administration is serious in its business-appeasement program, this bill affords an opportunity to show it.

Its effects on still another industry are reflected in the following portion of a letter I read from the Marathon Paper Mills Co., of Rothschild, Wis.:

We are fully in accord with full exemption for office employees for we are fully in accord with full exemption for once employees for the following reasons:

1. The average of weekly hours worked by office employees throughout the year, taking into consideration vacation time, leave of absence on personal matters, and sickness, we believe, is less than 44-hours per week.

44-hours per week.

2. Most office workers are given 2 weeks of annual vacation with pay to compensate them for overtime and extra service rendered throughout the year.

3. In cases of sickness and for other personal absences very rarely is any deduction made from the employees' pay.

4. In most well-organized offices overtime is limited to monthly closing of the books, taking inventory, and other special matters desired by major executives, who are excluded from the hours' limitation under the act.

5. The pay of office workers is often influenced by length of service as well as the efficiency of the employee, and in the average business the weekly pay is well above the minimum provided by the Wage and Hour Act.

6. Office workers have, as a rule, a certain freedom of action and

6. Office workers have, as a rule, a certain freedom of action and cpportunity for advancement not accorded factory workers. Self-thinking is encouraged, initiative is welcomed, and a spirit of "your own boss" attitude is prevalent. Clock punching and other routine matters associated with hourly paid jobs are not welcomed by matters associated with hourly paid jobs are not welcomed by salary-paid workers.

Finally, we are fully in accord with the primary purposes of the Wage and Hour Act in the elimination of starvation wages and excessive hours of work, but we do not feel that the law was framed wage and Hour Act in the elimination of starvation wages and excessive hours of work, but we do not feel that the law was framed to apply to the average office worker, who has always enjoyed privileges not accorded the factory worker. We believe that any limitation of hours worked and salaries paid as affects office workers should be placed on an annual rather than a weekly basis, commensurate with the type of job and qualifications of the employee. We recognize that in minority cases the office workers require protection, but do not believe that the majority should be penalized for faults of the minority. So much for the office workers.

With regard to hourly paid employees, we believe that the present law penalizes employers for granting vacations to hourly paid employees, especially in continuous-process industries, such as ours. We suggest that the law be amended to exclude overtime bonus to be paid for time workers over the weekly fixed schedule because of absence due to vacations, sickness, and for other causes not attributable to the employer. At present when men are off because of injury, workmen's compensation is paid, and if a substitute employee is hired, unemployment insurance is paid at the time of his release. If no substitute is hired and another man works beyond the 44-hour limit voluntarily to hold the job for the incapacitated fellow employee, the employer must pay overtime bonus. These conditions penalize the employer and, in our opinion, should be corrected. be corrected.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Faddis].

Mr. FADDIS. Mr. Chairman, I rise today to make a few remarks in connection with the appropriation bill for the Department of Labor concerning the technological displacement of labor in the United States. This is one of the most serious problems, in my estimation, with which we have to deal, a problem that, dodge it as we may, eventually we must solve.

I am not one of those who wishes to be marked down as being opposed to progress, for I know the benefits that machinery has brought to mankind, I know the part machinery has played in the development of this Nation; but I believe we reached the point some years ago where we were beginning to be supersaturated with machinery. I believe that for the past 15 years we have been becoming more and more supersaturated with machinery. Let me illustrate: Food is improved by a certain amount of salt; it is made palatable. More salt makes it unpalatable, and still more salt makes it absolutely inedible. Let us take the coal-mining industry. I am told that last year the displacement of labor by loading machines ran up nearly to 90,000 miners. This represents 90,000 men displaced by machinery and sent out into the country to search for jobs in an already glutted labor market; 90,000 men who were very poorly provided to go out and shift for themselves in any other industry.

The theoretical argument for this labor-saving machinery is that it would cheapen the product, but this has not been so in relation to bituminous coal, for the result has been that the operator has absorbed the profits and the miners have been put out of employment. Another example is afforded by the steel industry, in which today 15,000 men do the work that 100,000 men did 30 years ago. Thirty thousand men have displaced 85,000. Eighty-five thousand men have been thrown out of employment throughout the Nation to hunt employment, and no employment to be had.

Take the glass industry: Here the displacement of labor by machinery has been almost as large.

I spent 10 years of my life in the general contracting business, and during those 10 years I saw two-thirds of the labor in that industry displaced by machinery. I saw the roads costing the taxpayer one-third more. What had we accomplished by the installation of this machinery? We had gained merely in the element of time. We had displaced all this labor in order to gain a little advantage in time.

What about the displacement of both labor and animals by machinery in agriculture? Horses and men both are being displaced by machinery which eats no wheat or oats. At the same time production is being increased to the point where we have a large surplus. At one and the same time we are increasing production and cutting down consumption.

If you will take almost any industry of this Nation you will find that great inroads among the laborers have been made by machinery. Of course, I realize that there are machines which have been labor creating, such as the automobile, the radio, and various others. I realize also there are certain types of machinery which prevent men from being put at hard, arduous, and dangerous toil, and they are justified. I know and everyone else knows who is a close observer of this matter that throughout this Nation in a great many instances this machinery has been installed merely to displace men in the interest of time. The result is unemployment and its resultant poverty, distress, and labor disturbances

When a man is displaced by a machine he is a nonconsumer. He cannot buy the products made by that machine. Therefore, the buying power of the entire Nation is diminished.

Mr. Chairman, various solutions have been advanced, among them the proposition of shortening hours in order to take up this slack. Another solution which has been advanced is the taxing of machinery, so that the unemployed may be supported by money obtained in this manner. Neither one of these solutions will solve the problem. Both are paternalistic in nature. In applying them we are sure to run into the question of diminished returns, because the expense of the product is increased, and that falls back onto the ultimate consumer and there is less demand for the product which creates still more unemployment.

Mr. Chairman, I have introduced a resolution to have a committee appointed, not a congressional committee of investigation, but a committee which I hope will do something along this line, a committee to be composed of one man from the Department of Labor, one from the Department of Commerce, one from the A. F. of L., one from the C. I. O., and two from the United States Chamber of Commerce. I have introduced this resolution in the hope that we could get a committee appointed which would make a complete investigation of this matter and see to what extent labor is being displaced merely in the interest of gaining time. When this is known, then it will be possible perhaps to devise some remedy to solve this most serious problem.

It is all very well to attempt to solve this problem by resorting to theoretical answers and trick figures to show that machinery is creating more jobs than it is displacing workers. Such an answer may satisfy those who prefer not to think the matter through. As for me, I desire a practical solution. We have our mass of unemployed, which is constantly increasing. This is a concrete condition and one which is not to be banished by any set of trick figures or any number of theoretical answers. It is time we ceased to be lulled into a false sense of security in regard to this matter by the sedative of theory. [Applause.]

Mr. ENGEL. Mr. Chairman, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from Montana [Mr. Thorkelson].

Mr. THORKELSON. Mr. Chairman, it is well for the majority Members in this Congress to realize that if we follow the same uncharted course we have sailed upon for the past 6 years, the ship of state will be wrecked upon the most unsound and treacherous policy ever conceived by any parliamentary body not bent upon willful national destruction. I say this deliberately without the slightest fear of successful contradiction. We have reached the period when it is no longer safe to remain indifferent to danger which will be more devastating than foreign war.

It occurs to me that encouragement should be given to anyone who still believes in the principle of constitutional government, and who has the patriotic fortitude to express such principles in spite of the fact that they are believed to be obsolete.

I have just about reached the conclusion that the cause for this indifference may be charged against failure of early training. We have too little patriotism at home, and hardly any in our schools. As a matter of fact, national idealism and familiarity with the characters of our early founders are practically unknown in our schools. Familiarity with basic constitutional principles, which in reality is the very foundation of national security, is practically unknown to high school students.

We hear instead that our Nation is a democracy in which the rules may be changed every day to suit the convenience of the proponents of such changes.

I wonder if it would be possible to enforce a curriculum in our high schools receptive to a republican form of government? It is the really fundamental principle of our Nation which we must observe in order to be sound. There is not a Nation in the world that can survive permanently under the guidance or upon the policy of a pure democracy, because such government is not only unstable but it is subject to the whims and moods of a majority. There is really nothing to tie to in a democratic government, for it has no permanent basis for existence. There is hardly any difference between a true democracy and a socialistic government, for both of them believe in common ownership of property when it belongs to someone else.

We have the Constitution of the United States, which gives us the rules of conduct upon which we must rely for perpetuation of sound government, and when we deviate from that we are lost. Such is our position today, and I am interested in passing this information on to every patriotic man and women who has the interest of our country at heart. If I can arouse such public interest, my cup of happiness will be full, and it shall be my greatest compensation. I believe that I understand the importance of sound government in its relation to the general welfare of future generations, and I am, because of that, an advocate of national security. I recognize the losses we have sustained to date, and I am apprehensive of the persistent attempts which are made to deprive us of further rights and liberties which we have enjoyed in the past.

If our people sit idly by and constantly take it on the chin. they invite destruction and become victims of their own indifference. Persistent attempts are being made to convert our republican democracy into a socialistic state to be ruled by a minority whose power is in the control of the Nation's gold and money. Let us not forget that money is a greater power than the Government itself, and that the New Deal administration has deprived us of gold security and made beggars of our people by placing them in subservience to this minority. The very power derived from control of money has made it possible for this small group to acquire control of news agencies for no other purpose than to keep the public ignorant of the real state of affairs. Many publications, pictures, and radio stations are controlled by this same group—for what purpose? To feed socialistic and communistic poison to our people. This same insidious group is entrenched not only in Washington but in the larger cities throughout the United States, and is in apparent harmony with various departments in the Federal Government.

How long will the American people tolerate this condition? How long do you suppose they will be satisfied as servants to our money barons? In the spirit of their forefathers I hope they will awaken and step forth for their own safety and for the protection of their children. I earnestly and sincerely hope that the people will insist that Congress adhere to the Constitution as it is and not as the New Deal and the Supreme Court believe it should be-to please an Executive.

I came to Congress a firm believer in the State and the people's rights, and I supposed Congress shared the same faith. I am now disillusioned, for there seems to be little respect for such rights in the New Deal membership. I say now that there will be no recovery or prosperity in this grand and glorious country of ours until the people insist that the States resume their sovereign rights. The States must re-sume complete powers as reserved by them in the Constitution to direct the destiny of the Federal Government and shape the national policy by control of Congress. Our Government was conceived with such idea in mind, and the Constitution of the United States reserves such power to the States and to the people, respectively. It is now up to the States and the people to take this power back and tell the Federal Government where to head in. If this is not done, something may happen that will not be for the general welfare of the people or for promotion of national security.

Speaking from personal observation, which is based upon my 3 months' membership in the House of Representatives, I do not hesitate to say that nothing constructive can be expected from the New Deal majority in the present Congress. This is not entirely based upon my personal opinion, but, rather, from expressions as propounded by the majority on the floor of the House. Only recently many of these Members said. "Congress cannot reorganize the Government, and is not going to do it." In this statement, in which incompetence is admitted, I concede they express the personal opinion of their own ability, which I shall not contradict.

I want my colleagues to know that this philosophy is not accepted by many of the minority Members in this House, because Congress has the ability and can accomplish such reorganization.

This New Deal majority appropriates billions with the utmost abandon for anything that the White House asks for. They enact any sort of legislation-Constitution be hangedto please some hypnotic power which they still believe controls the majority votes of our Nation. They are willing to sell constitutional government into exile, never realizing that when it is lost they will not only be useless in Congress but will also be spurned by their former master. The same majority rants and raves about Republican incompetence, and, having satisfactorily proven such incompetence in their own minds, they proceed to prove their self-assumed success upon such failure. I often wonder where the President, the Postmaster General, and many others in the New Deal have acquired the strange philosophy of proving their self-assumed success upon failure of a previous administration. The dark days of 1932 are an excuse for every blunder committed by the New Deal today; and if the New Deal is right in this strange assumption, it can only end in greater blunders, for one error cannot be justified by another.

After having heard much discussion on March 27 and much recapitulation of the errors committed by the Republican Party, I shall now take upon myself a brief résumé of such errors. I shall not deny that the Republican Members of Congress have been lax in performance of constitutional duty and that they have been sympathetic to the interests of big business. I shall not even deny that some Members sold themselves to large business and so dishonored the office-a reprehensible procedure which I condemn.

I therefore concede that this indifference and failure to protect the constitutional rights of the people has weakened the Republican Party, but it is now coming back because we believe in the fundamental principles of the Republic.

Credit, however, must be given to the Republican administrations for keeping business and industry operating and our people fully employed until 1930. No one except those sold on the New Deal will deny that massive operation of industry, commerce, and business are the creators of our wealth-that the wonderful structure in which we live is created by work of industry and accomplished with its own wealth. Neither will anyone deny that taxes were smaller under the Republican administration. I do not wish to dwell on the past or to recapitulate history, but in order to keep the records straight, let us discuss briefly happenings from 1914.

The seventeenth amendment was adopted on May 31, 1913. and it was the first step toward a democracy and destruction of a republican form of government. The adoption of this amendment, in my opinion, is the best reason why no further amendments should be incorporated in the Constitution, for it is the weak link in our government today and must be repealed before we can restore a sound republican form of

I do not believe there will be any opposition to this from those who have the country's interest at heart, but we may expect dissent from the politician and active opposition from those who favor socialism and socialistic governments. At any rate, whether you believe me or not. I say that we will never recover our former security, freedom, and liberty until the amendment is repealed.

We enjoyed considerable prosperity during the European War between 1914 and 1918. In 1917, we became involved in this war, as you know, to save the world for democracy. An attempt has already been made by President Roosevelt to save the world again from the same dilemma. I shall not comment upon this.

President Wilson was largely instrumental in dictating the terms of peace after the World War. This treaty was drafted with utter disregard for central European geography, for which President Wilson is not so much to blame as Great Britain, who should have known that the key to peace in Europe may be found in Germany. Alliance with Germany is sound for many reasons, and would have prevented war in the Occident and Orient. The Treaty of Versailles therefore left the European door wide open for another war, as is clearly evident today.

In 1919, we adopted another national mistake, the eighteenth amendment.

When President Wilson left office, we had a national debt of nearly $28,000,000,000, and a currency inflation of $1,800,-000,000. The purchasing value of the dellar in 1920 was 64 cents—a little more than the present international dollar. This picture should not be so encouraging to my colleagues who are sitting here always ready to criticize, and it is something to consider when the New Deal administration criticizes the Republican administration of from 1920 to 1929.

On March 4, 1921, there was $6,207,000,000 in circulation, and 18 months later, this had been reduced to $4,393,000,000. which established a balance between the currency in circulation and the gold in the Treasury. This is the only procedure which can be employed to correct inflation and stabilize the value of money.

To impress this upon you, I shall quote the distinguished Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. Thomas].

Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. Thomas].

From 1922 to 1928, the value of the dollar was adjusted, regulated, and stabilized at approximately 100. In 1926, at the middle of this period—that is, the period from 1922 to 1929—we had a stabilized price level and a stabilized dollar; and it is impossible to have a stabilized price level without having a stabilized dollar. In that year, 1926, every group of commodities represented in the Bureau of Labor system of statistics showed that the buying power of the dollar was 100, which means, of course, 100 cents.

It is because of the regulation and stabilization of the value of the dollar at 100 cents in 1926 that that year has been designated as the most satisfactory to consider as the normal or standard. During the period from 1922 to 1928, we had a general era of prosperity. Wage earners were generally employed at fair wages; commodity prices were adjusted to a level which enabled producers to receive the cost of production plus a degree of profit. It was during this period that the national income increased perceptibly; it was during this period that the income of the Treasury derived from taxation was sufficient not only to meet the expenses of the Government but at the same time to reduce the national debt approximately $1,000,000,000 a year.

I called your attention to this because it is the expression of a distinguished Senator and an expert on money. I shall ask my colleagues to remember this in its relation to further discussion.

During this era of prosperity, playing the market became a pastime which, no doubt, was encouraged by those in control of our money. Gambling on the stock market became a mad race in which personal property and real estate were mortgaged to secure a stake for gambling. It is only natural that the end had to come for stock has its value similar to all other commodities. This madness was doomed to failure and everyone was aware of it except the gambler. The larger banks, knowing the danger of this fatal tendency to gamble, and well aware of the ultimate results did not courageously advise against it, but instead withdrew money from outlying banks so it could be used for call money on the market. This, of course, brought about a scarcity of money and increased the purchasing power of the dollar to $1.67. These larger banks, in order to further protect themselves from call by the smaller banks, organized several bank corporations or chain banks under the pretense of protection for country banks, when in reality it was to protect themselves. These chain banks still exist and are a retarding influence on economic development throughout the country. This same monetary minority at this point began to distribute propagandasmearing the administration, if you please, for reasons I shall not mention here, but this campaign finally ended in the election of a Democratic majority in Congress in 1930. This was a handicap that President Hoover could not overcome.

It is not my purpose to apologize for the administration, because I prefer to place the blame where it rightfully belongs and President Hoover was not free from blame for he started to plan for industry, business, and labor, which is a fatal mistake for any administration. This group encompasses all the people in the Nation, and must therefore do its own planning.

President Hoover made mistakes: First. In being too lenient with the money interests; second, in his failure to take the people into his confidence; third, when he began to plan and aid those who were to a certain extent the instigators of the administration's defeat.

But even with all of these mistakes, I contend that we were much better off in 1932 than we are today. The national debt was less than $20,000,000,000, and our money was secured by gold in the Treasury. The dollar was worth 100 cents in gold, and, having a standard value, stabilized all securities, investments including insurance, and other valuable income.

It could have been corrected with very little trouble, but that was not to be. Hoover's administration has been and is still being used as a premise or law for the New Deal. The President, the Postmaster General, and other new dealers, constantly refer to the Hoover administration as a precedent to establish and prove their own success. This to me is a most stupid and inconsistent procedure, particularly in view of the fact that the same gentlemen accuse the Hoover administration of being incompetent.

The question now is, Are we better off today? And the answer is "No." We have more people unemployed and on part-time employment than we had in 1932, and our national debt is now over $40,000,000,000, and will be close to $50,000,000,000 at the end of June 1941. What does this mean to us? It can only mean one thing: A rapid exhaustion of credit and national bankruptcy awaiting us at the end of the New Deal road.

Runaway inflation is often spoken of today and looked upon by many as inescapable. I cannot accept this in good faith because I am afraid that it will set our own people thinking and cleaning the mess we are in, and I am afraid in this process someone may get hurt.

The New Deal that feels so solicitous and interested in our welfare has by foolish experiments brought about a situation which is liable to end in internal strife, poverty, and suffering. The New Deal has deprived the people of the use and ownership of gold, gold securities, or gold secured currency. Gold bonds which were bought in good faith by our own people have been repudiated by the Government. This has made beggers of our people. The most contemptible part of this brazen procedure rests in the fact that $12,000,000,000 of gold certificates are held by interests outside of the Treasury, a privilege denied to us. Further, all investments and interest thereon are payable to foreign government credit in gold—a privilege also denied to us. Out of the $15,000,000,000 in gold now held in the United States Treasury, $2,000,000,000 in gold is under the exclusive control of the President and the Secretary of the Treasury, and no officer in the United States is privileged to ask for an accounting of this fund.

We are no more important in the present socialistic set-up than the peons are in Mexico. We are compelled to use a commodity or managed money of no greater value than the merchandise it can buy and absolutely devoid of all permanent value. To me this is the most disgraceful treatment inflicted on an industrious people, who by hard work and close application have been instrumental in making the United States the greatest country on earth.

As a climax those upon relief and Federal aid are now to use a blue and yellow chip instead of money. To me it seems that we will soon be trading red beads for calico dresses. I am amazed at the patience the people display toward our un-American Federal Government.

The New Deal has practically destroyed our business structure. It has spread dissension among the people and instigated class hatreds. It has sown seeds of strife between labor and business, and within the ranks of labor itself. It has created private industries which are sustained by the taxpayers and created for no other purpose than to usurp private business and industry. The New Deal has created scores of corporations that serve no useful purpose but are in reality a burden upon the taxpayer, who in supporting them sustains an instrument for his own destruction. Attempts are constantly made to obtain greater power with little consideration of the procedure employed in acquiring such power.

I question whether this can even be corrected now, but dissolution is certain if no effort is made by the Seventy-sixth Congress to stop excessive spending and protect our business structure.

Our industries must be protected by establishing a tariff barrier on imports, so that our own farmers and business people may at least supply our tables with food and our families with personal necessities. We cannot borrow money to establish purchasing power. Such power can only be brought about by starting the wheels of industry and furnishing employment for our idle people.

We are now taxed to the limit, and the last straw in taxation is the mutual taxing act of State and Federal employees, which was upheld by the Supreme Court on Monday, March 27. This tax allows the Federal Government to tax State employees and the State to tax Federal employees. It can only end in mutual destructive taxation of both governments. It is difficult to foretell the final result, but I am of the opinion that many of the States will seriously object to this plan.

In the final analysis, however, the taxpayers will pay for the whole fiasco, from the beginning to the end, and it occurs to me that if the New Deal administration is set upon taxing the country into poverty, they have neglected a source, namely, the judges of the Supreme and Federal courts. The Supreme Court judges draw salaries of $20,000 per year and they are pensioned at $20,000 per year. The Federal judges receive a salary of $10,000 per year and a pension of $10,000 per year. None of them are taxed, because the Constitution provides—

The judges, both of the Supreme and inferior courts, shall hold their offices during good behavior, and shall, at stated times, receive for their services a compensation which shall not be diminished during their continuance in office.

Now let us be reasonable about this. Congress has the power to lay and collect taxes—upon what? Upon anything Congress chooses to tax. That includes all incomes, no matter from what source derived. A tax does not diminish salaries in any sense whatsoever. It simply collects tribute toward the upkeep of the Government. A person drawing $20,000 a year draws approximately $1,666 per month, and this amount is not reduced or diminished at any time in spite of the fact that it is subject to taxation. Taxes are the fare we pay while living, and there is no reason why the judges should have a free pass.

The poor taxpayer who is required to furnish the money for the gentlemen of the Supreme Court—the same gentlemen who upheld the constitutionality of the Gold Reserve Act and the stabilization fund—may, when he thinks it over, question whether he has been treated justly or not.

In closing I want my colleagues to know that I have waited until today to express my sympathy for you, for the passing of the Reorganization Act. It is said, "If you give a person sufficient rope, he will eventually hang himself," and that is precisely what the Reorganization Act is going to do to the New Deal.

The act is passed for the purpose of consolidating Federal departments and bringing about economy to decrease the cost of the Federal administration. When the President begins to play with his departments he is going to create enemies, and when he discharges some of them they are going to pound him with a hammer—the hammer of unemployment, with which we have been pounded for years. He must, in order to uphold the confidence of his New Deal party, actually bring about a decrease in the cost of Federal operation, or else he fails his trust.

If he now sends a resolution to this House requesting certain things that may be detrimental to the welfare of the United States and to the people, it will be up to the New Deal Members of this House to deny him such destructive rights. The Republicans can sit smugly by and watch you smoke. If you deny his request, you have in a sense registered your loss of faith in him, and besides, he will resent your action. If the measure is of no consequence, we can all go fishing and it still becomes law. So it does not matter what you do, the responsibility rests upon you, and there is not one thing that you can do that is going to aid the United States or our people without creating dissension in your own ranks. In other words, the Reorganization Act, I want you to know, is the rope that is going to hang the New Deal.

Mr. Chairman, my impression, after considering the National Health Act of 1939, is that it is directly along the lines that this administration has pursued for the past 7 years, namely, the socialization and communization of the United States of America.

The Public Health Service, led by the Surgeon General, is at the head of the parade. I can readily understand the interest of these gentlemen in socializing medicine, for it secures a permanent position for them, and no doubt in the near future this branch of the Federal Government will occupy a magnificent structure in the city of Washington at the expense of the taxpayers throughout the Nation. If the National Health Act is enacted, it will cost the taxpayers a half a billion dollars.

There is not a doctor in the United States who is not and who has not been in favor of child welfare and improvement in public health. That work was done long before the Women's and Children's Bureaus or Public Health Service and improvement of public health were established, and has been the definite object of the medical profession since its inception. This work has been carried on unselfishly without Federal, State, or municipal aid, and today the structure is practically complete, for much of our illness is now well within medical control in prophylaxis and in treatment.

The appeal used in the National Health Act for the general welfare of children and those unable to secure adequate medical care is the same weapon that has been used for the past 6 years—a hammer to beat private industries and professions under centralized or Federal control. It is only natural that a great number, or I might even say all of us, favor a less costly passage from the cradle to the grave, not only in medicine but in everything that pertains to our comforts, and I am not opposed to medical aid, for I have spent the greater part of my life in such service.

However, the truth must eventually be told to prevent greater disappointment in the end. The purpose of this act is not to provide more efficient medical care, and it is not for the purpose of giving special help to anyone—it is more subtle than that. If the Federal Government acquires control of the medical profession, it is only reasonable to suppose that the same program will destroy private hospitals in the building of competitive structures. It will even reach a little further than that because the same department will eventually gain control of drug stores and everything that pertains to treatment and care of those who are ill.

The question may now be asked: Is this the real intent of this act? And the answer is "No." Federal control of medicine will permit Government agents entrance to every private home in the United States to disseminate such propaganda as has been spread in the past 6 or 7 years. In my opinion, this is not only uncalled for but it is a direct violation of States' and public rights as we understand them.

That is what I am afraid of, and my purpose in opposing this act is to warn the people of the danger now threatening their rights and liberties. It is my opinion that the spending proposed by this act, which is a little over half a billion dollars, will be a mere drop in the bucket of the final terrific cost, which will be for no other purpose than to build a monument to commemorate the destruction of free government. [Applause.]

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from California [Mr. Geyer].

Mr. GEYER of California. Mr. Chairman, today I want to talk about politics and relief; about the right of every American to a job; about how to promote economic recovery; and about how the preservation of democracy begins at home.

ALL AGREED ON A FEW POINTS

These are all very popular subjects with the Members of this House. Members on both sides of the aisle have discoursed on them at length. And as a newcomer to this distinguished body, I must confess that I have been surprised to find the most perfect agreement between Republicans and Democrats, new dealers and antinew dealers.

Everybody, if I may be allowed to coin a phrase, abhors the practice of using human misery as a political football. Everybody defends the right of Americans to work and earn. Economic recovery is the ambition nearest to every heart. And the advocates of a firm foreign policy join with the strictest isolationists in affirming that the defense of democracy, like charity, begins at home.

As the Republican candidates for office in the last elections were wont to say, we are all agreed on the objectives. But unfortunately Congress does not legislate objectives. It cannot by fiat guarantee the divorce of relief and politics, abolish unemployment, boom private industry, and secure democracy from danger. Congress is obliged to pass bills, and those bills of necessity concern themselves with the methods by which objectives universally desired are to be achieved.

THOSE CRYING LOUDEST FOR RIGHT TO WORK-WOULD DENY IT

In the consideration of methods for reaching our common goal, harmony gives way to vigorous and often bitter debate.

For example, there are those who say that the right to work very nearly precludes the right to strike or picket, and that it is most frequently violated by Mr. John L. Lewis and on occasion by Mr. William Green. They say also that the National Labor Relations Board habitually interferes with and limits the right to work. They declare that the President himself has curtailed this fundamental right by hampering private industry in its efforts to offer jobs to American workers; and that the National Manufacturers Association and the chambers of commerce alone can restore to labor the rights it enjoyed in the good old days of Harding, Coolidge, and Hoover. Finally, these ardent apostles of the right to work tell us that the way to restore this right to millions of unemployed workers now is by hastening their retirement from the W. P. A. rolls.

Perhaps if I am permitted to serve a longer apprenticeship in this House I will find it easier to understand these gentlemen who in one and the same breath declare that their objective is to put America back to work and that the method for achieving this objective is to fire a million workers from W. P. A. jobs. But for the present, and without questioning their sincerity, I must say that I find their logic very unconvincing.

MY UNEMPLOYED ASK ONLY THE RIGHT TO WORK

I know the unemployed in my own district want nothing so much as to produce goods and services for their fellow citizens while earning a living for themselves and their families. The jobless workers in my district have no quarrel with private industry. They are not boycotting its offers of employment. They knock and they have continued to knock for the past 9 years at its doors. But when private industry tells them that it has no jobs to offer, these good and industrious Americans naturally look to their Government for an answer. They want to work and live; to live, not in the "luxury" of a dole but by the sweat of their toil. And when the President or their elected representatives in Congress tell them, "Yes; we agree with you. You have a right to a job," then these people naturally ask, "How are you going to help us secure that right of which, through no fault of our own, we are now deprived?"

ORATORY VERSUS COMMON SENSE

I myself am not sufficiently gifted with oratory to convince them that I would be doing my bit by voting against adequate work-relief appropriations. I am afraid that their common sense would cause them to reject that kind of reasoning. I prefer to tell them what I honestly believe to be the truth: "The only way I can help restore your right to work is by fighting for an appropriation big enough to give you a Government job at useful public work until such time as private industry is able to hire you again."

WILL NOT ALLOW A ROLL CALL

It is the same with the question of economic recovery. We have in Congress now a self-styled "economy bloc." The full membership of this block is, unfortunately, not a matter of public record. When this House cut the deficiency appropriation by $1,500,000 below the Budget estimate, the economizers maintained a discreet anonymity by evading a roll call. I find their logic also somewhat specious.

WHAT ABOUT CONFIDENCE?

They tell us that business needs confidence. But when I talk to businessmen, I learn that what they need is customers. And I do not understand how they are going to derive confidence from a Congress that robs them of the custom of 4,000,000 Americans who will soon be bankrupt of purchasing power. I am forced also to consider that the 1,000,000 heads of families who will be out of work in a few weeks or months unless we restore that $1,500,000 also have a right to confidence—confidence that their Government will not fail them; confidence that their families will not starve.

HOW ABOUT "ISMS"?—DOES PATRIOTISM FEED ON HUNGER?

Nor can I agree that the defense of democracy against foreign "isms" and subversive tendencies begins with the undermining of the economic foundations of democracy. As you know, I wholeheartedly support the President's foreign policy, and do not subscribe to the doctrine so popular with the Rome-Berlin-Tokyo axis that "nobody is thinking of attacking America." I believe that in the present unhappy state of world affairs we need to protect the peace and safety of our country with adequate defense measures, and by throwing all our moral and economic weight on the side of international law and against the Fascist aggressors. There are Members of this House who take a different view and tell us not to become hysterical merely because our sister democracies across the sea are one by one being gobbled up and destroyed. Those who counsel indifference to the affairs of Europe tell us that we have a job to do at home. They tell us that we can best serve the cause of peace and democracy by giving the world an object lesson in how democracy serves the best interests of all the people.

In this I agree with my esteemed colleagues, though I fear that object lessons alone will not suffice to check Mr. Hitler, who is disposed to teach the lesson of force and blackmail rather than to learn the ways of peace from us. But what puzzles me is this—those who say they stake everything on making democracy work are the very ones who throw a monkey wrench in the machinery of democracy. They fight foreign "isms" and subversive tendencies by sowing distrust in our democratic Government, by trying to rob our citizens of relief and work relief. Do they really believe that democracy will work better if the ruthless purging of W. P. A. rolls goes on through the coming months—as it must unless we here appropriate funds to maintain the present low rate of public employment? Do they really believe that patriotism feeds on hunger, that democracy proves itself by enforcing idleness, that it is American to starve?

CONGRESS, NOT W. P. A., GUILTY OF PLAYING POLITICS

I am afraid that, on the contrary, some of our colleagues are giving us a sorry example of how to play politics with relief when they make these claims. Not all the political misuse of relief is to be found among W. P. A. supervisors, foremen, and regional directors. We have in this House seen politics and relief played against each other on a grander and more dangerous scale.

In the face of abundant evidence submitted by the President and the W. P. A. Administrator to show that an emergency exists and that funds are needed to save 4,000,000 persons from destitution we of this House have week after week delayed action while we listened to political speeches about politics in relief. The burden of those speeches has been that we must investigate the W. P. A., purge it of politics, and make it into a perfect model of efficiency, and that while we are performing this laudable work the 4,000,000 men, women, and children should pull in their belts and wait.

MORE POLITICS

A resolution to investigate the W. P. A. has been reported out by the Rules Committee over the vigorous opposition of that committee's able chairman. That resolution has been passed by this House. I hope we will postpone our investigating until we have appropriated the full $1,500,000 asked for by the President. If there are indeed some abuses of the W. P. A. and even perhaps a few malingerers on the rolls, it is better to delay remedying that, than to delay feeding hungry and innocent people.

WHAT ABOUT THE CENSUS OF 1937?

I would like to recall to those who are so eager for an investigation that last year we had a study made of unemployment conditions in the United States. I refer to the unemployment census of 1937. This, the first comprehensive census of the kind ever undertaken, revealed some important facts and figures, which we would be wise to take note of now. It showed that in November 1937 there were sixteen and one-half million totally or partially unemployed workers in the United States. It showed that there were 8,928,000 totally unemployed, to whom the Government programs gave no job assistance. Only 2,055,000 were at work on jobs provided by W. P. A., N. Y. A., and other Federal projects.

These figures give some picture of the pitiful inadequacy of our work-relief programs. They should stimulate us to expand, rather than curtail, the W. P. A. and other work programs.

SHALL DEMOCRACY AND STARVATION WORK IN SHIFTS?

Some Members, looking at these figures, say we should alternate the people between work relief and starvation. They say those who have received aid for any considerable period of time should now be laid off, should stand aside and let others eat for a while. But I do not subscribe to the doctrine that democracy should work in shifts, alternately feeding and starving the American people in shifts. I can see in the army of unemployed which remains with us only a challenge to put all of our people to work as quickly as possible, thus increasing purchasing power and speeding the recovery process.

LET US VOTE THE $150,000,000

Mr. Chairman, we share the same objectives, all of us, without exception, by our own statement of the case. I submit that to achieve those objectives we must take the first and immediate necessary step-appropriate the minimum of a million and a half thrice asked for by the President.

A million and a half appropriated now will be a small token of our good faith in asserting the right of every American to a job. It will be a step toward promoting economic re-covery. This appropriation will strengthen national unity and help to preserve democracy by narrowing the base of misery and unemployment on which fascism builds.

And if we will stop talking about the shortcomings of the W. P. A., stop hampering its activities by the guerrilla tactics of constant investigation, stop using relief as a stick with which to beat the Roosevelt administration-if we will do these things we shall have set the Nation a good example of how to keep relief clean of politics. [Applause.]

Mr. PLUMLEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 30 minutes. Mr. Chairman, Earl Godwin, president of the White House correspondents group, in his radio broadcast yesterday morning said:

In haven't been around the corner to Zirkin's fur shop for some little time, but I remember the laugh I got there one day when I saw two bands of pickets, one picketin; the other. The pickets were picketing the pickets. Nobody who came along could tell what it was all about, while Zirkin, fur-shop man here from the days of old, seemed to be caught between the upper and nether millstones. Nobody could tell from reading the rather hysterical pickets' signs what it was all about. A court action yesterday throws a light. It seems the C. I. O. had an employee or two in Zirkin's. The A. F. of L. had a majority of workers. The C. I. O. worker went on strike and all by himself carried a sign that some-body or other was unfair. Well, this got to be a smelly fight between two sets of fur workers, with Zirkin in the middle. He took it to court, and after a couple of rounds with justice, the court of appeals says Zirkin has no remedy under the N. L. R. A., which the court says is "cockeyed" and unfair. The only place, says the court, is Congress, thus uttering a long, loud yell which will be heard by those in Congress who are dead set on putting some fairness in the Labor Relations Act. To you folks who are just my sort—the plain, ordinary, unvarnished taxpaying American male, who wears suspenders around the house and doesn't like people to call him up at dinner time to ask him to buy something. This means at last American justice has poked its fingers in the one-eyed situation which is presumed to smooth out labor difficulties, but gives labor all the privilege and none of the responsibility.

No down the has difficulties, has dignity if which is presumed to smooth out labor difficulties, but gives labor all the privilege and none of the responsibility.

No doubt this administration has lifted labor to the dignity it has craved for a century. But the Wagner Act petted labor and treated it somewhat as if it were a drunken sailor. Give it lots of room and don't hamper it. Labor will be much more respectable to itself when they finally take the Wagner Labor Act and put equal responsibility on capital and labor. After that let employees become part of the ownership, and when this latter occurs there will be an end of professionalized agitation against the boss and the end of overweening superiority on the part of employers—because there is wrong on both sides.

Mr. Chairman, those who have served with me in this House would be the last to call me a reactionary. I might be called conservative and would not resent that appellation. I am still of the opinion that the state, instead of further absorbing and assimilating the functions performed heretofore by local officials, should decentralize. Administrative supervision may be necessary, and probably is wise, but the local units should be encouraged, instead of discouraged, in their attempts to strengthen and fortify themselves, preserve their integrity, and conserve their rights.

To maintain vitality in the center without sacrificing it in the parts; to preserve tranquillity in the mutual relations of powerful States, while keeping the people everywhere, as far as possible, in direct contact with the Government; such is said to be the political problem which the American Nation exists for the purpose of solving, and is the problem which confronts us today.

I agree with the statement made sometime ago in the United States Senate by the late Senator Frank L. Greene, from Vermont, who took occasion to say that-

This country is going to wake up to the sober realization that for a long time back the legislative signboards have been misleading, and that America has actually left the straight and narrow path that the fathers laid out for it, and left it long ago, and is on the broad highway to all the ills of bureaucracy and the corruption that goes with it that those very same fathers fled from Europe to

He was opposed to the measure then under consideration because in his opinion it invoked a wrong theory and principle of civics or governmental policy, in that it would cause the Federal Government to do for its individual citizens that which they ought to do for themselves, or at least through their own voluntary and nonpolitical associations. "It is paternalism", said he, "the most subtle and sinister enemy of popular government."

Whatever history may teach with respect to the beneficent effects of paternalism and centralization in other countries and under other forms of government, we of the United States of America must oppose the further extension of both; must rely for the perpetuity of our institutions upon the functioning of the local governmental unit, for if experience teaches us anything, we must already have learned that John Fiske spoke truly when he said that "the preservation of local self-government is of the highest importance for the maintenance of a rich and powerful national life."

The centralization tendencies in government have fastened their tentacles around the surviving representative of the most nearly perfect democracy ever created. The paternalistic state is cooperating to help strangle its child. The question which confronts you and me is, "Shall we stand idly by as accessories both before and after the crime?" I bebelieve that the Government should be for and by the people, and the nearer it is kept to and of the people the better Government we will have. "In proportion as government recedes from the people they become liable to abuse," says Governor Cass, and according to David Starr Jordan, "The end of government by the people is to fit the people to control their own affairs."

"This Government is built upon the principle that the locality is better qualified and better disposed to protect the citizen in the enjoyment of his essential rights and to serve him in all matters of social welfare than the Nation." John Sharpe Williams once said:

We hear a great deal about the horrors of war, but greater than these—in fact, the greatest of all horrors—is the murder of local self-government, the only possible field of development for individual manhood.

For some days I sat listening to the testimony of those who seek under this bill an appropriation in order to enable them to comply with the mandates of Congress. My quarrel is not with them. As a Congress we have impressed them for service and have commanded them to administer the laws we have enacted. I say "we," though I beg leave to exclude myself from that category for reasons which are of record. It is imperative that we supply the absolutely necessary money with which the duties imposed may be discharged. This your committee has undertaken to do and, may I say, with a unanimity of spirit and purpose in the ultimate. The bill before you represents our best effort genuinely to economize in the expenditure of the taxpayers' money for the purpose of carrying out the laws as passed by Congress.

Aye! there is the rub.

In the first place, as you will observe from the report, the bill carries a total appropriation of $30,552,470. This compares with the total appropriation for the Department in 1939 of $27,821,550, or an increase of $2,730,920. The sum recommended for appropriation, namely, $30,552,479, is, however, $377,810 less than the total estimates approved in the Budget.

It is well to observe that of the total carried in the bill over $11,500,000, or more than one-third of the total, represents grants or payments to States under the operation of the Social Security Act and the Wagner-Peyser Act establishing the United States Employment Service. The amount of Federal contribution required to carry out the expressed will of Congress under these two acts is fixed in the authorization, and the committee has little discretion in the matter of providing the appropriation essential to acquit the Government's commitments.

The increase over the total appropriation for the current fiscal year can be explained entirely through the necessity of providing funds to administer the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938. Under the terms of that act a Wage and Hour Division was established in the Department of Labor, charged with administering certain features of the law respecting maximum hours and minimum wages of certain industries.

A responsibility was likewise placed on the Children's Bureau in the Department to administer and enforce provisions of the law aimed at protecting the minor child in his capacity as a wage earner.

And in this connection I wish to emphasize that so long as Congress continues to impose additional administrative burdens on the various departments, which require machinery to enforce new laws, just so long must the committee continue to add to the appropriations, year by year, if enforcement is to be had of such laws.

You will recall, and should remember in this connection, that Shakespeare's Julius Caesar said:

> Men at some times are masters of their fates: The fault, dear Brutus, is not in our stars, But in ourselves, that we are underlings.

TOTAL INCREASE

The total increase asked for in the Budget estimate of the Department of Labor for the next fiscal year was $3,108,730, of which amount $683,180 was for grants-in-aid to the States under the maternal and child-health provisions of the Social Security Act and for the administration of the child-labor provisions of the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938: $2,950,000 of the increase is for the new division—the Wage and Hour Division-created by the last Congress.

It is true, inescapably true, that the increased appropriation sought was occasioned and necessitated and caused by the enactment of new legislation. The Secretary of Labor said:

New functions have been added to the various divisions and the various bureaus of the Department. Those new functions account for such other increases as there are. There have, of course, been increases in the functions of the Children's Bure course, been increases in the functions of the Children's Bureau because of legislation passed in the last few years. These added functions are not only due to the social-security legislation which gave the Children's Bureau the duty of supervising the maternal- and child-welfare provisions the crippled children and child-health provisions but also to the Fair Labor Standards Act, otherwise known as the Wage and Hour Act, by which the enforcement of the child-labor provisions of that act is given to the Children's Bureau. Therefore it, of course, must take on those new functions, and must make provision for the administration of those functions, and it has done so with a great deal of ability and intelligence. As a matter of fact, I think its total Budget estimates for both services is $850,000, including these entirely new functions which have been put upon them by legislation. have been put upon them by legislation.

So says Madam Secretary, who adds:

The Bureau of Labor Statistics also has constantly increasing duties and functions placed upon it, not entirely by legislation, but as the result of legislation. That is, every new act of Congress which is passed, which in any way affects the labor field, puts upon the Bureau of Labor Statistics the duty of collecting information in that particular field, first, for the purpose of administration, and, second, for making it possible to define the field, so that we can know what we are accomplishing, and what additions to or subtractions from the law should be made. So every new function of that kind that is added anywhere in the Department of Labor immediately puts a new activity upon the Bureau of Labor Statistics— Bureau of Labor Statistics

He who dances must pay the fiddler. The Wage and Hour Act added new functions and made new demands, as has been said-partly because of the new demands which the States make for new information in this field of labor legislation on which the Bureau of Labor Standards service is working all the time, and partly also because of the requests which the States make upon us for training factory inspectors. All of that work goes through that Bureau. And we have many requests for the expansion of the Conciliation Service, the Division of Public Contracts, and the Women's Bureau. Service, the Division of Public Contracts, and the Women's Bureau. The number of cases referred to the Bureau of Conciliation is increasing all the time, and the total proportionate number of strikes in this country that are handled through the Conciliation Service in the various States is increasing all the time. As a result there are constantly fewer strikes, and yet more work is placed on those within the Conciliation Service in stepping in early enough to prevent strikes which would otherwise occur. The results of the Conciliation Service's work are shown, first, by the smaller number of industrial disturbances that come to an actual stoppage of work, and, second, in those cases where there is a stoppage of work, the length of time of stoppage, and the number of men involved is constantly decreasing. is constantly decreasing.

Some members of the committee were very favorably impressed by the accomplishments of the Department in respect to the apprentice-training program.

APPRENTICE-TRAINING PROGRAM

The apprentice-training program is a very important function, which requires the cooperation of organized labor groups, skilled craftsmen, and of their employers. It is true that very good results have followed the apprentice training. Due to the depression, and due to the fact that there has been so few opportunities for adult men to get work, there were very few boys put in training. Many of those trades require long and skilled training. So the time is admittedly ripe for an apprentice program, and it should go ahead rapidly. It is constantly growing and expanding and people are making more and more demands from it.

This is the least of the troubles and one of the items of the program to which no right-thinking person can well take exception. But it costs money.

Then there is the Bureau of Labor Statistics, which is the father and mother of a family which has increased so rapidly that neither the father nor mother nor the Bureau itself can offhand name its children nor what it costs to support them. BUREAU OF LABOR STATISTICS

The Bureau of Labor Statistics is, of course, the key and perhaps the central part of the work of the Department of Labor. As a matter of fact, it is the oldest part of the Department of Labor and was the first bureau established. Numerous functions have grown out of the knowledge which it has gathered and disseminated, which have been brought together by their Bureau and brought into focus. This Bureau makes not only general studies of the economic conditions of industry and labor in this country but makes special studies as well, and the people in the Bureau develop into what are known as labor economists. That is, it knows the economic problems of working people and is able to answer questions and to give advice, and to analyze labor situations anywhere in the country, and in any industry. More and more it is being called upon, not only by labor unions, but by industries who need information with regard to labor problems to come in and give them the answers to the problem of labor's opportunity to earn money and labor's opportunity to have a comfortable life, and the whole question of the relation of the hours of work to production.

Paternalism in government is exemplified to the nth degree in the Department of Labor. The Federal Government just will not let anybody in labor alone so long as Congress will command the Labor Department to extend its tentacles and will feed the central body the food to sustain it which is measured in dollars and cents of the taxpayers' hard-earned dollars. If we get value received, that is one thing; but the multiplication of bureaus and the triplication, not to say the duplication of effort is appalling, not only departmentally but governmentally. It is time to stop.

This leads me to discuss some of the measures which are responsible for the situation which obtains. I take them at random.

As someone has said, our changing attitude toward governmental interference in industry is reflected in the Social Security Act, the Wagner Act, and the Wage and Hour Act. There seems to be no question that labor laws should be passed, but the question is how far will the United State: go toward centralized governmental control or in the establishment of a coercive planned society. How far can or should we go without destroying our democratic institutions?

I am of that school of thought which believes that the less of government we have in business the more business and the better government we will have. I subscribe to the doc-trine that the Government should do for no individual or State that which he or it can or should do for himself. Any other policy or program so far as I am concerned and believe spells the end of democracy as we know it.

Methods may change, but progress is still the watchword. and the Nation still lives in the strength and devotion of citizens whose powers have been developed, whose self-respect has been aroused under the American principle of local selfgovernment. "Our purpose is to build in this Nation a human society, not an economic system." It has been well said, and the story of the ages teaches that "no method of procedure has ever been devised by which liberty could be divorced from local self-government. No plan of centralization has ever been adopted which did not result in bureaucracy, tyranny, inflexibility, reaction, and decline."

Since this is so, and we know it is so, it is high time that we, as representatives of the people, charged with a great responsibility, attempt to legislate as prompted by our own consciences, preserving our own intellectual integrity. Public confidence in the integrity and effectiveness of our democracy must not be permitted to be destroyed.

BUREAUS GROW

If you are interested to know how bureaus grow and expand, take a look, for example, at the United States Employment Service, which was created as a permanent bureau in the Department of Labor by the Wagner-Peyser Act, effective June 6, 1933.

The purpose of the Service is to promote and develop a national system of public employment offices. Local employment offices are operated by State agencies. The Federal Service assists the States financially and administratively; it coordinates the work of public employment offices throughout the country; it prescribes and maintains uniform standards of efficiency.

Since the Nation-wide organization of State employment services has been established by cooperative Federal and State action, its growth has been gradual. In June of 1933 there were approximately 135 offices of 24 State employment services. By July 1, 1939, the total number of public employment offices will be nearly 1,700 and will represent the activities of the services in the 48 States, 2 Territories, and the District of Columbia.

In 1933, shortly after the passage of the Wagner-Peyser Act, the National Industrial Recovery Act created, in title II, the Federal Emergency Administration of Public Works, and indicated certain legal preferences-for local residents and for veterans-in employment on Public Works projects. The Federal Board of Public Works issued rules and regulations which required that workers on projects be obtained through offices designated by the United States Employment Servicewith an exception for union contracts. This rule called for the immediate establishment of public employment offices throughout the Nation in order that the needs of the Public Works program might be served.

The National Reemployment Service was created to fulfill this purpose. It has been financed entirely from allocations or direct appropriations made under the various public-works and work-relief appropriation acts. It has been operated as a temporary emergency Federal activity. It has functioned solely as a supplement to, and not as a duplication of, the work of permanent State employment services. It has been administered as an integral part of the United States Employment Service.

The policy of the United States Employment Service has been to withdraw the operations of the National Reemployment Service wherever the resources of a State service have enabled the State to take over the operation of a local office. These State resources have been materially increased in the last 2 years through Social Security Board grants, and as a result there has been a concurrent reduction of activities of the National Reemployment Service, which by June 30, 1939. will reach the state of complete and final liquidation.

The original rules of the Public Works Administration pertaining to the employment of workers through offices designated by the United States Employment Service have been continued-in a slightly modified form-by each ensuing public-work or work-relief program. Thus the Employment Service has had a relationship to the Civil Works Administration, the Works Progress Administration, the Bureau of Public Roads, and to all other agencies engaged in publicwork or work-relief activities.

It should be emphasized that the supervisory responsibility of the United States Employment Service to the State employment services relates to the total activities of these agencies, which represent approximately a $35,000,000 enterprise, and operations in nearly 1,700 local employment offices.

The supervisory responsibilities of the Federal Service include the coordination of the various State employment services so that the objective stated in the Federal act of a "national system of employment offices" may be obtained; the administration of special services for veterans and farm labor; the maintenance of uniformity in administrative and reporting procedure; the establishment and maintenance of minimum standards for personnel and for operating methods; the auditing of all expenditures made by the State services; and numerous other functions designed to insure that the Federal expenditure for employment services in the several States is carried on in the manner and for the purposes contemplated in the Wagner-Peyser Act.

In the course of the hearings Chairman TARVER, of the subcommittee, asked Mr. Stead, of the United States Employment Service:

Mr. TARVER. Would there be any economy in having the Division of Unemployment Compensation in the Social Security Board and the United States Employment Service consolidated under the head of the United States Employment Service?

Mr. Stead Actually no direct economy because what has happened is this: We have worked these people as one unit here in Washington. Take the business of the reports which are coming here. We have had so many people handling reports which came in from a thousand offices which were State offices. We have had in from a thousand offices which were State offices. We have had another group of clerks right alongside of them handling reports from another 700 offices which were emergency Federal offices. Now, all 1,700 offices are State offices, and the same volume of reports come in, and they come to the same group of clerks. Therefore, very little saving has been possible.

Mr. TARVER. As one of those who voted for the pending reorganization bill, I am somewhat disappointed that you say that. It would seem to indicate that the possibilities for economies in the consolidation of various governmental activities are not as bright as we had hoped.

as we had hoped.

The truth is these bureaus, once planted, grow like mushrooms and multiply their functions and activities as rapidly and extensively as leaves appear on the branches and twigs of the trees in the spring. They are soon so numerous that they hide the real objective, overlap and interfere with one another in duplication of effort and inefficiency in performance, and are blown up and down by every redolent breeze which is charged with the ambrosial, intoxicating perfume of a salary increase, while the taxpayer stands by to pay the

We should realize that just so long as Congress continues to create these departments, just so long we will have to appropriate money to pay for an orderly and efficient administration of the law by them, and they will fall over one another in their proper selfish interest in their own departmental welfare as they undertake to see that they get their share. Their justifications are unimpeachable, which is more than Congress can say for itself in its endeavor to justify its action in initiating the necessity for the spending of the money appropriated.

With respect to the Social Security Act, that old-age insurance plan which is supposed to end the tribulations of the aged with dignity and decency, may I say that, despite the terrific expense and cost of administration incident to the proper discharge of the duties by those on whom rests the responsibility of executing the law, and despite the fact that people generally have an idea that the pension the beneficiary will receive will be substantial, inasmuch as the Government is allegedly collecting a sufficient sum to do this nicely nevertheless, a lot of people are going to be shocked into a sensible realization of the fact that they have been swindled when the first pension pay checks go out.

I have seen it stated that under the present plan of purchased insurance-

A man earning a hundred dollars a month will, in 1942, be obliged to give up his job and pauperize himself in order to draw the $17 a month old-age insurance he has bought from the Government. The charity pensioners will give a horselaugh as he sinks back into the dignity and decency of retirement on $17 a month.

It has been stated, and authoritatively, by John T. Flynn

The Government is collecting and will continue to collect in payroll taxes for a generation enough money to pay benefits many times this sum. But it will not pay adequate pensions—and this is the point I aim at—because all the time it will be spending the old-age insurance-premium taxes for other things-paying the ordinary expenses of the Government.

If the reader is a little surprised at this, let me add three very serious statements:

First, the Government will in the years up to 1980 collect in taxes for old-age pensions about $111,000,000,000.
Second, of this $111,000,000,000, some 43 percent, or $47,000,000,000, will never be spent for old-age pensions at all but for every sort of Government expense, including, perhaps, building battleships. And, third, the Government will never return this $47,000,000,000 to the Social Security Board.

Behind these facts is one of the weirdest and most fantastic

The plan began in 1936 with the 1-percent tax for boss and workers. Up to October 31, 1938, the collections amounted to $910,165,940.84.

Now, what has become of this money? It has gone into the Treasury. As no pensions are payable until 1942, no pensions have been paid—only some refunds on account of death and the expenses of administration. The belonger come and control of the co penses of administration. The balance—some $817,000,000—has been transferred to the reserve, called the old-age account. That is just an account in the Treasury. From there it has been transferred to the general funds of the Treasury. That is, the Treasury "borrowed" it and transferred to the account its own bonds. Having borrowed the money, the Treasury is at liberty to use it as it chooses. It has spent the money on the general expenses of the Government. Thus, as matters stand, the money is gone—spent; the old-age account or reserve has $817,000,000 of Government I. O. U.'s, and the Government owes the account $817,000,000.

spent; the old-age account or reserve has $817,000,000 of Government in I. O. U.'s, and the Government owes the account $817,000,000.

The explanation of this, of course, is that when needed the Government will pay this money back to the old-age account. Meantime it will pay interest at 3 percent each year. Each year the amount in the reserve will be greater. And each year the Government will pay 3-percent interest on that reserve. All the money will be loaned to the Government. Hence all of it will bear interest at the rate of 3 percent. The Government will collect taxes to pay the interest. But it will promptly borrow the interest just as it borrows the principal. And so by 1980 the Government will have collected in old-age taxes and in interest $111,000,000,000. By that time it will have paid out in benefits $64,000,000,000. There will be $47,000,000,000 remaining in the reserve. Of course, there will be no money there—but just $47,000,000,000 of Government paper. But why should anyone worry about this?

Many criticisms of the Social Security Act have been made. It is probably just to say that to set this system aright it may be necessary to start all over again. But of the other defects in the plan we need not speak. So far as the reserve is concerned, the wise course would seem to be fairly obvious.

The idea of a reserve should be taken out of the act altogether. The pay-as-you-go plan should be employed completely and for

The idea of a reserve should be taken out of the act altogether. The pay-as-you-go plan should be employed completely and for the very good reason that any other plan is impossible.

The rates should be promptly reduced. Of course, some reserve is inescapable—a billion or two, or even three or four. But the question would be well worth considering whether investment of such reserves ought not to be limited to the open-bond market to prevent a political government from exploiting the reserve as part of the public fiscal policies.

Congress and labor as well as the employers will do well to of the public fiscal policies.

Congress and labor, as well as the employers, will do well to face this problem squarely and honestly in this session. There is going to be no end of pension tinkering. Behind every crackpot scheme of politicians competing for the votes of the aged will be the problem of money—where to get the money. This reserve fund offers a tempting reservoir of money upon which they will cast hungry eyes. Already the housing advocates have made a bid for it. Mr. Rooseveit thinks it looks good for his present spending purposes. The Townsendites will presently lay claim to it. The best thing to do with this monstrous child is to slay it at once and thus fructrate the kidnapers. frustrate the kidnapers.

FAIR LABOR STANDARDS ACT

Then the Department has the Fair Labor Standards Act to administer. It is recognized as revolutionary legislation and reflects a radical transformation in public policy with respect to the proper role of government, particularly the Federal Government, in relation to industry. It undertakes simultaneously to regulate both wages and hours. It is one of the plants which will grow into full size and be full of foliage so far as its demand for money to permit and insure its enforcement and administration are concerned, and it is not bashful or sensitive.

And so I might go on to enumerate the other labor laws we have enacted since 1933 which have laid so great a burden of expense incident to their administration on the backs of the taxpayers, but I have already said more than I intended to say.

Your subcommittee has done its best to keep down the expenses of operation and against great odds, namely, we were repeatedly advised, in effect: "What we are asking for is money to use to do those things Congress has ordered us to do. We have a mandate from you, gentlemen. Put up or shut up."

My notion is that it is time to "put up" the bars and to "shut up" those who would tempt us into any further fields of experimental legislation through which runs that path which finally will lead us into the blind alley of uncontrolled inflation, repudiation, or governmental bankruptcy. [Applause.]

The Clerk read as follows:

Printing and binding: For printing and binding for the Department of Labor, including all its bureaus, offices, institutions, and services located in Washington, District of Columbia, and elsewhere, $444,700, of which amount not to exceed $2,000 shall be available immediately.

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment. The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Tarver: On page 4, line 2, strike out "$444,700" and insert "$438,800."

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Chairman, this amendment has been submitted to the gentlemen on the other side. It is merely to correct an error in calculation and makes no change in the bill as intended to be reported by the committee.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, whenever imports produced by cheap foreign labor invade our market and undersell our domestic products, the demand for the higher-priced, American-made goods ceases. This means the ultimate ruin of our home industries, and as 13,000,000 idle men and women in this country well know, the consequent discharge of more and more of our American men and women who are willing and anxious to work. This tragedy has been going on from the day the first trade agreement went into operation. Factory after factory has been forced to close its doors as a result of this administration deliberately turning over the American market to foreign competition. To be specific, the pay rolls of the men and women of this country have been automatically transferred overseas, there to be spent and enjoyed by lowpaid, foreign employees. Low as the wages are in these foreign competing countries, it does mean income and jobs for their people, while it throws our own employed out of work, deprives them of their homes, breaks their spirit, and eventually forces them upon the relief rolls. The Roosevelt administration can boast of three principal exports-American pay rolls, American farms, and munitions. The first two of these exports have pauperized thousands of our farmers and laboring men and women, while the much heralded exports of munitions have resulted in the cold-blooded murder of thousands of innocent civilians-women and children-of a friendly nation. But we are told by the author of the trade agreements that this is the path to peace.

Mr. Chairman, not satisfied with the partial penetration of our market, even under the tariff rates of the Hawley-Smoot Act, President Roosevelt asked from the Congress plenary power to give foreign nations almost free access to our market. This power was granted, and as a result this once protected American market now belongs to the cheapproduction countries of the world.

Deprived of this protection, a principle that gave our men and women jobs at the highest average wage in the world, the foreigner now has the jobs, makes the goods, sells them here, while millions of thrifty American citizens are driven from their homes to seek relief from the very administration that has bartered away their livelihood.

Every shipload of foreign products, whether industrial or agricultural, daily entering our ports in competition with American products brings its toll of suffering and distress to farmers and to our working people.

How can there be recovery when the administration, under the trade agreements, fills our market with foreign beef, pork, poultry, grain, and other products in such volume and at prices so low that our farmers cannot obtain enough for what they have to sell to meet the cost of production? It requires no statistics of imports to establish the facts. All that is necessary to do is to examine the market quotations. Imports have driven the market price of farm products to a level so low that thousands of farmers are losing their farms and turning to public relief. The men and women in our industries have had their jobs, their livelihood, their comforts, their hopes, and aspirations for their children exported to foreign shores.

The more abundant life of which so much has been said by the new dealers has been transferred to the "good neighbors" of Europe and of the Orient. The pay rolls that should be spent in the United States for homes, for automobiles, furniture, and all the comforts that go to make up the American standard of living have now become the spending power of the working men and women of other nations. They are living the more abundant life on what rightfully belongs to the 13,000,000 idle destitute of our own country. The farmers of our own country have seen millions and millions of acres of fertile land made idle by the stupid policy of handing over their market to the foreign farmers. Day by day the spending policy of this administration is increasing the cost of farm production by ever-increasing taxes, which opens wider and wider the door to our domestic market for the low-cost foreign producer.

I again call attention to the fact that 17 nations operate under totalitarian principles, the result of which has been to place their agriculture and industry under absolute state control for export purposes, thus taking full advantage of the surrender of our market to them under the trade-agreement policy.

This Congress ought never to adjourn until it has restored to the Senate of the United States its power to ratify these foreign-trade treaties, as the Federal Constitution provides. Those who are being ruined by these trade treaties should have a legislative forum in which they may be heard and where their interests can be protected. There can be no permanent recovery until this invasion of our market is stopped. There can be no restoration of wage levels and price levels without protection from the cheap foreign products now flooding this country. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. TARVER].

The amendment was agreed to. The Clerk read as follows:

Division of Labor Standards, salaries and expenses: For salaries and expenses, including purchase and distribution of reports, and of material for informational exhibits, in connection with the promotion of health, safety, employment, stabilization, and amicable industrial relations for labor and industry, $228,800, of which amount not to exceed $115,000 may be expended for personal services in the District of Columbia.

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment. The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. TARVER: On page 4, line 9, strike out "$228,800" and insert "$218,500."

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Chairman, this amendment, like the preceding one, is only the correction of a miscalculation and has been submitted to the gentlemen on the other side.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all Members who have spoken as well as those who have not spoken on the pending bill may have permission to extend their own remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Inasmuch as the request includes all Members it should be made in the House.

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Chairman, I limit the request, then, to Members who speak on the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

The appropriation under title IV for traveling expenses shall be available in an amount not to exceed $4,000 for expenses of attendance at meetings concerned with the work of the United States Employment Service when incurred on the written authority of the Secretary of Labor.

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment. The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Tarver: On page 15, line 23, strike out the words "under title IV" and insert the word "herein."

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Chairman, this is merely an amendment which is necessary to correct a typographical error.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk concluded the reading of the bill.

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. WALTER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 5427) making appropriations for the Labor Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, and for other purposes, had directed him to report the same back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and all amendments to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? If not, the Chair will put them in gross.

The amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill. The bill was passed, and, on motion of Mr. Tarver, a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

RESIGNATION FROM COMMITTEES

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following resignation from committees: MARCH 29, 1939.

Speaker, House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. Speaker: I hereby respectfully tender my resignation from the following-named standing committees of the House of Representatives, to wit: Coinage, Weights, and Measures; Indian Affairs; Census; and Irrigation and Reclamation.

Respectfully yours

Respectfully yours.

HARRY R. SHEPPARD.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the resignation will be accepted.

There was no objection.

ELECTION TO COMMITTEES

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I offer a privileged resolution, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

House Resolution 150

Resolved, That the following-named Members be, and they are hereby, elected members of the standing committees of the House of Representatives, as follows:

Appropriations: Harry R. Sheppard, California.

Military Affairs: Joseph W. Byrns, Jr., Tennessee.

Census: Charles Kramer, California.

Irrigation and Reclamation: Charles Kramer, California.

The resolution was agreed to, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. LARRABEE). Under a special order of the House heretofore made, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Hook] is recognized for 15 minutes.

Mr. HOOK. Mr. Speaker, I have always placed high value upon human rights. These I regard as basically more important to society than property rights. It necessarily follows as to the political aspect that the state exists for man; man does not exist for the state. If government is worth anything, it is what it wins for man. This was very clearly brought out in the case of Whitney against California in the year 1927, wherein the Court said:

Those who won our independence believed that the final end of the state was to make men free to develop their faculties, and that in its government the deliberative forces should prevail over the arbitrary. They valued liberty both as an end and as a means. They believed liberty to be the secret of happiness and courage to be the secret of liberty. They believed that freedom to think as you will and to speak as you think are means indispensable to the discovery and spread of political truth.

It was brought out further in the case of Olmstead against the United States in 1927, wherein the Court said:

The makers of our Constitution undertook to secure conditions The makers of our Constitution undertook to secure conditions favorable to the pursuit of happiness. They recognized the significance of man's spiritual nature, of his feelings, and of his intellect. They knew that only a part of the pain, pleasure, and satisfactions of life are to be found in material things. They sought to protect Americans in their beliefs, their thoughts, their emotions, and their sensations. They conferred, as against the government, the right to be let alone—the most comprehensive of rights and the right most valued by civilized men. most valued by civilized men.

I have faith in democracy, industrial and political, and believe that it alone affords the conditions under which an individual is free to develop his power. I have faith in democracy and such distrust in the absence of it that I fear that the very foundation of democracy, of freedom, and of liberty is at stake if we carry out the unreasonable restriction contained in Public Resolution No. 1 of the Seventy-sixth Congress as interpreted by the officials of the W. P. A. in general letter No. 240, issued on March 7. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, to insert in the RECORD at this point a copy of that letter.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOOK. Mr. Speaker, this letter is as follows:

WORKS PROGRESS ADMINISTRATION, Washington, D. C., March 7, 1939.

July 2, 1938, and general letter No. 205, dated October 27, 1938.

F. C. Harrington, Administrator.

For your information, orders have been issued by the W. P. A. in the State of Michigan, and I presume in other States, that no person employed in either a supervisory capacity or in the capacity of a common laborer can be a member of any party, committee, or organization, the duties of which are concerned with political management or political campaigns. They have gone even further than thatthey have issued orders that no person is allowed to make any public utterances at a public meeting or in a public place as to his political beliefs for or against any candidate or any political philosophy. No person, according to their orders, is allowed to belong to any club that takes part in any political activity. This may be construed to be civic organizations, religious organizations, or any organizations interested in the management of this Government.

I charge that in the interest of liberty, in the interest of democracy, they have restricted man's liberty to such an extent that in return for a crust of bread he must give up his right to join organizations of his own choosing; he must give up the right of free speech; he must give up the right of joining any religious organization or club that might be interested in expounding any political philosophy or interested in any bit of legislation considered or to be considered before this Congress.

I charge at this time that Public Resolution No. 1 of the Seventy-sixth Congress as interpreted by the officials of the W. P. A. has violated the first amendment of the Constitution of the United States which gives to the people protection against the abridging of the freedom of speech, freedom of the press, or the right of the people to peacefully assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of their grievances.

Let me warn those in charge of the administration of this legislation that they are headed toward destruction. If these unreasonable rules and orders are issued and carried out, they will be creating a menace far greater than the menace of communism, the menace of fascism, or the menace of nazi-ism. In fact, they will be creating a situation that will be far more disastrous to this Nation than even the despicable German Bund. Both liberty and democracy are seriously threatened by the growth of the power that has been placed in the hands of those administering the W. P. A.

You men and women of this House may have been, and I believe were, serious in your desire to keep the W. P. A. free from political activity, but in doing so you have set up laws that violate the rights of liberty and justice. The control here asserted does not protect against political activity but tends to foster it. The aim is not to encourage good citizens and good citizenry but to prevent it; not to regulate the proper administration of this agency and to protect citizens in their rights as guaranteed under the Constitution of the United States, but to preclude persons from exercising those rights which are so near and dear to those who live in a great democracy.

Mr. PARSONS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield just for an observation?

Mr. HOOK. Yes; I yield.

Mr. PARSONS. Does not the gentleman think that the language which the Congress placed in the last relief bill was what put politics into W. P. A.?

Mr. HOOK. There is not any doubt about that.

No regulation can be enforced which is not reasonable. Self-respect and prosperity are the most effective guardians of morals. Unenforceable and harassing laws, regulations, and orders issued with regard thereto tend to make violators of decent citizens. It was rightly said by a great legal mind that "In every extension of governmental functions lurks a new danger to civil liberty." Experience should teach us to be most on our guard to protect liberty and the Government's purposes that are beneficent. Men born to freedom are naturally alert to repel invasion of their liberty by evilminded rulers. The greatest dangers to liberty lurk in insidious encroachment by men of zeal, well-meaning, but without understanding.

I am an avowed partisan for the rights of the common man. My special concern is for those economically and financially dependent. I prefer human welfare to property rights. In the present day of economic and social lils I cannot remain aloof and indifferent, but with all the might and main at my command I attempt to seek the causes of each abuse and examine the merit of the proposed remedies.

I think we should ferret out the facts so as to enable us to decide whether the provision in question is so clearly arbitrary or capricious that we, as legislators acting reasonably, could not have believed it to be necessary or appropriate to the public welfare. It rests with us as representatives of the people to take the proper steps to furnish to this body relevant facts, and if we deliberately omit them we have not done our duty, because no law, written or unwritten, can be understood without a full knowledge of the facts from which it arises and to which it is to be applied. I am of the belief that in reordering the law to bring it in accord with life is partly the work of the courts, but it is more truly the function of the Congress. Because we have made a mistake, because we have erred, is no reason why that mistake should be a command that we err again when we have occasion to pass upon a different statute.

I believe that any man or woman in America in this great democracy has the right to vote as he pleases and to keep his view secret or express himself freely on it. Men in large jobs and small jobs, in private life and public life, do it every day of the year. Other men are just as free to disagree. That is the American way. Traditionally, American workers have rebelled against pay-envelope political pressure. They resent a slip pinned to the check which says that if a certain party is not elected the plant will go on a half-time basis. They resented in 1936 a pay-envelope attack on social security. The logic of some of the current opinion about so-called coercion on the W. P. A. is beyond my understanding. Certain letters have been inserted in the Congressional RECORD for no other reason than political blasphemy. They are so ridiculous, so untrue, that they are not even worthy of being dignified with an answer.

I have frequently stated that the workers of the W. P. A. are bound to be grateful to the present administration. I am wondering whether the implication is that this constitutes some terrible sort of turpitude presumably on the part of the administration. Is it a vice for the electorate or any part of it to take notice when public officials live up to their presentative government is incurably vicious. The history of this Nation is full of political movements which came into power by bringing in a new order of things and then earned the respect and gratitude of the people by keeping those promises. It seems to me that if there is any vice to be feared in representative government, it is the failure of candidates and movements to keep their promises to the people and not the gratitude of the electorate for promises kept.

We who believe in liberty and justice rebelled against the actions of the political czars who through economic pressure stifled the rights of free speech and free press. Are we now, who parade as the protectors of human liberty, going to use the same tactics on the W. P. A. workers? These men went into that Government program, not of their own accord, but because of the vicious mistakes of the economic structure of this Nation. Are we as representatives of a free nation going to take away the rights guaranteed them by the basic law of this Nation?

I believe that the administrators of the W. P. A. are well-meaning individuals trying to carry out the mandates of this Congress, but in doing so are abridging the rights of American citizens. Are we going to take away the self-respect of men and women of this Nation and make them serfs and slaves and refuse to allow them to take part in the development and the changes of the times?

In refusing to allow men and women to belong to organizations and discuss the political philosophy of the day and to peacefully assemble and petition this Congress for a redress of their wrongs, we are violating the first amendment of the Constitution of the United States of America.

When we discuss the eligibility of workers for this program, we should know the basic principles upon which that eligibility is founded. I have listened to Members of this House. including the gentleman from Massachusetts, when they inferred that the W. P. A. is responsible for the hiring of men and women in that program. In each locality the eligibility of needy workers for this program is determined, not by the W. P. A. but by the constituted local welfare authorities. If there is political discrimination at that point, it is a matter for the local citizenry to handle. Why did the gentleman from Massachusetts say that it may be handled that way in other States but it is not handled that way in Massachusetts? In answer to the gentleman from Massachusetts, I might say that I do not charge him with a deliberate misstatement of facts, but I do say that the gentleman is misinformed and is not conversant with the method of certification.

It is a general rule throughout this Nation that before any person becomes eligible for work on the W. P. A. that he be first investigated by the local relief authorities set up by the State administration, with the exception that 10 percent may be nonrelief in order to supply the proper number of skilled workers. It seems to me from what I can gather from a study of the situation that a great number of the Members on the Republican side of this House are interested in their own political welfare rather than the real welfare of the people of this Nation.

A study must be made of the employment situation to such an extent that we will reemploy at least 9,000,000 men and women in industry with regular wages so as to make them self-respecting citizens. I have such a bill before this Congress and I do hope that it will be given serious consideration.

I belong to the school of thought that believes that as long as money is appropriated by a political government there will be a certain amount of political activity and it just depends on which party is in control.

We should encourage people to become interested in Government rather than to penalize them for becoming interested. It is the very foundation of democracy. Oh! what price liberty. The W. P. A. workers are respected citizens who believe in liberty and justice. They are not willing to surrender their liberty for a crust of bread. They will not peaceably surrender that right. I believe they are in accord as I am with the famous statement of Patrick Henry when he said, "Give me liberty or give me death."

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. LARRABEE). Under the previous order of the House, the gentleman from New York [Mr. Dickstein] is recognized.

AMENDMENTS TO THE FAIR LABOR STANDARDS ACT

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from New Jersey?

There was no objection.

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I have, of course, watched with great interest the progress and success of the Fair Labor Standards Act, the so-called wage and hour law, during the 6 months of its existence. I feel safe in saying that I know of few laws which have met with the public approval and cooperation accorded this. It is a law designed to improve working conditions and to eliminate chiseling competition from the channels of interstate commerce, and I believe that already it has gone far toward attaining these objectives. I feel confident in assuming that this belief is widely shared.

However, as in most well-intentioned laws with such tremendous coverage, slight defects have become apparent through its application to business. A gigantic task faced Congress in attempting legislation which is so generally applicable since it covers all industry engaged in interstate commerce, with some few specific exemptions. We wrote and passed a law with what we felt then were adequate safeguards, both to employers and employees, so that business would not be disturbed. We still believe the Fair Labor Standards Act is workable and eminently fair to all affected, except in a few instances, which we now propose to correct. The practical application of the law has disclosed some situations where its rigid application causes undue hardship. This disturbance has tended to create hardship on employers, reduce employment, and in general dislocate the flow of business in a particular industry.

Both the Administrator of the Wage and Hour Division and the Members of the House and Senate have received suggestions which would correct these inequalities and also many objections to specific sections of the act. We have examined these and I believe that the amendments to the Fair Labor Standards Act which I am introducing in the House today will stop up the holes in the act and tend to equalize its application.

I believe that Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands are entitled to consideration because of the prevailing conditions in the islands. It is my belief that a total exemption from the law for these territories would serve to create a great competitive advantage, is not fully justified in all industries, and would in general disturb business both here and in the islands. However, from the facts at my command, I believe it is obvious they need some relief. Therefore, in the amendments I propose the creation of industry committees to determine the minimum wage to be paid, which would be fair for each industry in Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands. These committees would be composed of residents of continental United States and such island or islands in which the industry operates and would recommend minimum wages to be paid rather than those as now provided in section 6. The committees would include representatives of the public. employers, and employees. This would be accomplished by adding a new subsection (e) at the end of section 5.

I have felt since the wage and hour law became effective that the Administrator is working under a great disadvantage and that business is not able in many cases to adjust itself because of the lack of power the Administrator has to make valid rules and regulations. I am sure that business would be less jittery about this law if the Administrator had the right to define the application of the law. Without this amendment he may not do so and some business has suffered as a result. I believe that he further needs the power to define technical and trade terms used in the act and the power to make special provisions with respect to industrial home work and make special provision for constant-wage plans consistent with section 7 relating to hours of work. Home work has long been a blot on the economic picture of this country, and I regret to say that in some cases employers have resorted to this means of employment to escape the provisions of this law. This power would be granted the Administrator by adding two new subsections (d) and (e) at the end of section 11 and by striking out all of clause (2) of subsection (a) of section 15 and inserting a new clause.

It has been brought to my attention that a severe hardship has been worked by the application of this law to small telephone companies. It is felt that the only way to deal with the existing situation is by amendment, and therefore I am proposing an amendment to exempt telephone operators in exchanges serving 350 stations or less. A thorough investigation into this situation has led me to believe the amendment is warranted. This is accomplished by an amendment to subsection (a) of section 13, clause (11)

A good deal of the objection to the Fair Labor Standards Act comes from its application to so-called "white collar" workers-men and women engaged in work not of a clearly administrative or executive nature but which frequently requires overtime work. In the case of bookkeepers, private secretaries, and so forth, high salaried office workers in the main, it is felt that the application of the law works great hardship both on the employer and employees. In many instances employees such as those described actually work in a quasi-executive capacity and it is utterly impossible to regulate their hours of work. I feel that a salary of $200 a month should protect a worker against exploitation and therefore I am proposing to exempt all employees receiving that salary or more from the hours provisions of the act by amending section 13 (a) to include persons on a guaranteed monthly salary of $200 a month or more.

Congress, when drafting the Fair Labor Standards Act, gave a great deal of consideration to the real problem confronting the farmer and those connected with the movement from the farm and preparation for market of agricultural products. It was felt that limiting the exemption of workers engaged in movement from the farm and preparation for market of agricultural products to those within the area of production afforded the necessary safeguard. However, the application of the law has presented a very real problem in the attempt of the Administrator to define "area of production." To do so without clearly discriminating against certain classes of workers was utterly impossible and afforded the administration a real opportunity to judge hardship in the application of this law to the agricultural worker. I, therefore, believe it is necessary to amend the act by striking out all of subsection (c) of section 7 and inserting a new clause. This would eliminate the area of production and would instead base the application of the law and hours exemption under it on the seasonality and perishability of the product. I propose to grant an hour's exemption up to 12 hours a day and a 56-hour workweek to the industries specifically listed in the amendment. The ginning of cotton, however, is to be granted an exemption from both the wage and hour provisions.

Two other amendments necessary for the smooth working of the law have become important.

One is a change in venue and provides that civil actions to restrain violations of the act may be brought in any district wherein the defendant is found, or is inhabited, or transacts business. This is accomplished by striking out all of section 17 and inserting a new section.

The other deals with the release of so-called "hot goods" and provides that the Administrator is to exempt goods from the provisions of section 15 (a) if he finds that all persons having a substantial proprietary interest in such goods had no reason to believe at the time of acquiring such interest that such goods were produced in violation of the wage and hour provisions. This is accomplished by the addition of a new subsection to section 15.
